I may say, parenthetically, on behalf of the committee that as I sat there from day to day and watched the attitude of the men of the committee, both on one side and the other, I believe that each and every man on the committee was sincerely in earnest and honestly trying to work out the problem of national defense as the situation presents itself to us, and in presenting this bill to the House of Representatives, I believe it embodies a sincere effort on the part of the entire committee, except in reference to the proposed amendments, to present and solve our present difficulties.

My own attitude is that what we need is a good defensive bill. I believe the country as a whole wants whatever is necessary for absolute protection of this Nation, and I believe, as expensive as armament is, the country is willing to pay the necessary cost of protection against any foreign invasion as well as protecting our shores adequately.

Now, taking up two features of the bill, the first of which is the Canal Zone. As I sat in the committee I represented a prudent businessman of this country passing upon what was necessary and what was economical for us. Here was the Panama Canal located to the south and slightly to the west of the Capital of the Nation. On the one shore we have the Pacific and on the other the Atlantic. This Canal, as has aptly been said here today and yesterday, is the lifeline of the Republic. Through that narrow confine must pass the battle fleets of this Nation from the west to the east and back again. When peril approaches from the west, the fleet must be on those shores for protection. When it approaches from the east, it must be on the eastern shores for the same purpose. So this line, the Canal, must be kept open at all costs. It must not be closed even for a day or a fraction of a day if the Nation is to be adequately protected, and when the question under consideration was the appropriation for additional fortification of the Canal Zone it impressed me that this was a vital and an economical appropriation. The only way to get around keeping the Canal open is to increase the size of our Navy so that we may have an adequate naval force on both coasts at the same time. In the alternative, there is nothing to do but to maintain the Canal open, free to ingress at all times by our fleet and by our merchant marine. So from the viewpoint of national defense and from the viewpoint of a prudent businessman, representing a constituency that believes ardently in peace, that believes ardently in doing away with all absolutely unnecessary wars, representing, as I do, a constituency that believes in maintaining peace except to protect against invasion, I say that this item is fundamentally necessary.

We come now to the question of additional airplanes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman has very properly, perhaps, indicated that the Panama Canal is our so-called life line. I have listened intently to all of the arguments that have been advanced here, and they have struck out generally at the peril that may come to democracies from three nations, Germany, Italy, and Japan. What would the gentleman suggest if the peril came from the west and from the east at the same time?

Mr. BROOKS. That is what has been termed in newspaper parlance a squeeze play, that is, to force the issue on both sides at the same time. I am not a naval man, but the Navy is presented there with a problem of either dividing the fleet or placing it on one coast alone.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes.

Mr. MAY. The question that the gentleman from Wisconsin has just propounded to the gentleman from Louisiana is answered properly by saying that that is the very situation which makes necessary the program that we find in this legislation.

Mr. BROOKS. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Mr. PACE. And is it not also true that the policy probably would be under these circumstances—the reason the Panama Canal is so important—to concentrate the fleet in one ocean and try to annihilate the enemy and then go to the other ocean.

Mr. BROOKS. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a fact that in Panama today there is not a single road across the Isthmus except the railroad and the Canal, that it takes 9 hours for a battleship to go through the Canal, and if we were attacked on one side we have no facilities for getting our armament or forces across the Isthmus simply because there is a little profit to be made in running a monopoly like the little Panama Railroad. Does the gentleman know these facts?

Mr. BROOKS. I am told that is correct. Approaching the question of additional airplanes, when this bill was first presented to the committee it embodied the idea of 6,000 airplanes. The committee heard the testimony of our experts and considered the testimony very carefully, and finally, after complete consideration of it all, we found that 5,500 airplanes were all that were necessary, and so revised the terms of the bill to make it a 5,500-aircraft proposition.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. In a moment. It is interesting to note that at the present time Congress has already authorized the building of 4,120 airplanes, so that the additional number of authorized aircraft under this bill will be 1,380 airplanes. Out of the additional 1,380 airplanes authorized, it is interesting to note that 1,335 could be termed combat planes.

It is interesting to note also that under the terms of this bill it is contemplated that we will have a reserve of airships of 2,163. This reserve is composed of some 800 to 850 training ships, to be used in training our pilots that go to the schools of the country, so that we may have a reserve of pilots. This reserve is also to be used in replacing damaged aircraft, used in ordinary drill and operations of the Army. The reserve is likewise to be used in keeping our ships in mechanical fitness so that when a ship needs to be repaired, immediately one from the reserve will be put into the line, so that our pilots may not be idle at any moment.

In conclusion, in reference to this bill, I want to say that I have studied it carefully, not from the standpoint of foreign policy but from the standpoint of home defense, and I think the members of the committee have studied it largely from this same viewpoint. Representing a defensive measure as this bill does, I think it is the minimum necessary to an adequate defense, and if we want to keep our country out of real, serious peril against foreign foes, the adoption of such a bill is fundamentally necessary.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman says that the present bill in its aeronautical provision provides justly and adequately for national defense. Is the gentleman's judgment on this question based upon the assumption of the airplane production at present available in Germany, Italy, and other countries against whom we are liable to have to defend ourselves?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. Then if we provide 5,500 airplanes to be built within the next 6 months, a year, or 2 or 3 years, will not that relationship between this country and those nations constantly be changing so that it will require a constant demand on the Congress for a constantly increased air force, and where is it going to end?

Mr. BROOKS. Let me answer the gentleman's question. He is in error in assuming that this bill provides for an additional 5,500 airplanes, as he stated. The error comes about in this way. We have already authorized 4,124 planes to be built. This bill merely authorizes an additional 1,380 airplanes to be built for the United States Army. Those airplanes are the additional ones, and the act does not authorize the complete building of 5,500 additional planes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes to make a short statement covering that provision of the bill which has to do with flying schools and the Civil Aviation Authority. I do not believe this has been mentioned during the debate. At any rate, little seems to be known concerning it.

I merely want to say that within this bill there is an item of $7,000,000 for instructional and equipment payments to the civilian flying schools. This is the minimum fund which would permit the War Department to meet the accelerated rate of mechanics' training and primary training for pilots.

It may be of interest to Members of the House to know that a complete list of the educational institutions selected to participate in the first phase of the civil aeronautics program under the direction of the War Department has been made. It consists of 11 schools of the country. They are as follows:

Purdue University, University of Alabama, University of Minnesota, University of Washington, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Texas A. & M. College at Arlington, Tex., Georgia School of Technology, New York University, University of Michigan, University of North Carolina, University of Kansas, San Jose State College, and Pomona Junior College.

As I understand it, applications for training in this connection are to be made direct to Mr. Clinton Hester, Administrative Director of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. THOMASON. The list of colleges which the gentleman has given the committee are those announced by the C. A. A., are they not, but they are not the accredited schools of the War Department, covering aviation schools?

Mr. ANDREWS. They are schools in which there are scientific departments at the present time set up and devoted to applied aviation aeronautical training.

Mr. THOMASON. But that list is the one announced by the C. A. A. and is not the list, as I understand it, that has already been accredited by the War Department for aviation training.

Mr. ANDREWS. That is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUTHERFORD].

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to bore you and the members of the committee with a rehearsal of the provisions of this bill. The subject matter of the bill has been fully explained by our illustrious chairman the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] and the other members of the Military Committee who have preceded me in the discussion of the bill. As a member of the Military Committee, I simply want to publicly announce my approval of the bill, believing that it meets fully the needs of adequate national defense. The members of the committee were in general accord on all of the provisions of the bill, with the exception of section 1, which relates to the building of airplanes. I, as do the other members of the minority, believe that it would be better to spread the building of these planes over a period of years rather than to build them all in the period specified in the bill. The reasons for so doing were well set forth by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON], a member of our committee. What constitutes adequate national defense is largely a matter of each Member's personal opinion after he has given the subject what he considers sufficient study. A great many persons feel that their own personal opinion and judgment cannot be improved upon. I have never followed that course. Whenever I got into a subject out of my regular line of business, I always found it better to consult the best authorities I could find on the subject involved. So in regard to the subject matter of this bill, I am taking the advice and suggestions given by the Chief of Staff and his associates as to what constitutes the needs for adequate national defense. These gentlemen are professional soldiers. They have given years of study to all questions relating to war and the measures necessary for the adequate defense of this country. They are honest, upright, intelligent, and patriotic and have the interests of this country at heart.

They came before our committee and thoroughly explained the provisions of this bill and stated that in their opinion the provisions of this bill provided the minimum requirements for adequate national defense. They have given us their best judgment in the matter and we in turn pass it on to the full membership of the House, and it is now up to Congress to accept or refuse it. When a person is sick he goes to a doctor whom he thinks understands his case. The doctor after making a thorough and careful examination of the patient advises him as to what he thinks is necessary to be done to effect a cure. It is then up to the patient to decide if he can stand the expense of such cure. Congress is in that position today. The men who understand this question best and who have given it long and careful study say that the provisions of this bill provide simply the minimum requirements for an adequate national defense; and who are we to dispute their professional judgment? Our province as Members of Congress is simply to determine whether this country can stand the present expense and future maintenance. This program is going to cost real money to start and a lot of real money to maintain in the future. But be that as it may, if we are going to exist as a first-rate power we must put this program over. Self-preservation is the first law of nations as well as Nature. First things must come first and the providing for an adequate national defense is the first duty of Congress. That being the case we must of necessity provide the funds sufficient to put this program over, but we also have to remember that we have a national debt of over $40,000,000,000 and that if we spend money for national defense we cannot continue to spend money on a lot of other things no matter how meritorious they may appear to be. Mr. Chairman, I have found out that when you are heavily in debt and the house needs a new roof and the old furnace needs to be replaced and the victuals still have to be provided for the family that you cannot continue to buy Packard cars and take ocean trips every year, if you expect to maintain your self-respect in the community. The same rule holds true for the Nation. If we buy national defense we cannot continue to throw away the taxpayers' money for things that are not actually needed. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, there is no question in my mind but that we need to and should expand our air force, but there is some question as to how fast we should carry on that work.

I think it is a settled fact that a plane that is built today in 1 or 2 years is obsolete. If we build our planes all at this time, by the time they are completed we will have to discard them and start building new again. I believe we should go forward rather slowly, but with an adequate corps.

Now, we are to establish training fields near certain colleges, which the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] has just mentioned, that are proposed for these training schools. I regret the gentleman did not include one or two colleges in my own district in his statement. I want to call the attention of the House to Hartwick College at Oneonta, N. Y., and also New York Training School at Oneonta, N. Y., which is equal to a college. We have those two institutions located up there in the tablelands in the central part of New York State. They are well located to establish training schools for pilots for airplanes.

We also have in this particular city of Oneonta a wonderful landing field with proper facilities to take care of planes that would care to land. We also have mechanics. This was a great railroad center until recently, and we have had trained mechanics there for many years. We have the mechanical forces there to do this work. So, if one of those training fields could be located at Oneonta, N. Y., it would be well located as a training-school base for those who want to take this course who are attending our colleges. We also have the mechanics to do the work, the facilities and fields for landing, and a good surrounding country to operate in.

It has been proposed that we use this new flying force for mail carriers. Throughout this section, where there is no force of mail carriers, we could well start out from Oneonta; and I call attention to the fact that the magnetos that are made for practically all Army, Navy, and commercial planes are made in Sidney, N. Y., in my district. They claim they are restricted too much under the 10-percent provision in profit. They can only make 10 percent profit, when oftentimes it costs them more than that in experiments and perfecting models so that our air forces can have the best planes in the world. We want to use these pilots for some useful purpose while they are training. We have the landing fields up at Binghamton, N. Y.; also at Norwich, N. Y. So that in this section we could well start from Oneonta with our flying forces and put them to carrying our mails, where we do not have the air service, and at the same time train them for the work they may be needed for, but for which we hope they will never have to be used.

I have a resolution from the Chamber of Commerce of Oneonta calling attention to all these facts. There is a small portion of that which I would like to include in my remarks. It will not take more than 10 or 12 lines in the Record.

Resolution

I, W. A. HOLLEY, Clerk of the city of Oneonta, N. Y., do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct transcript of a resolution duly adopted by the common council of said city on January 24, 1939:

"Because of the probability that a plan to train reserve forces of airplane pilots and mechanics will be instituted by the Federal Government in the near future, and the suggestion in conjunction therewith, that air-mail feeder lines be established, with airports at strategic centers, it seems fitting that the several advantages of the city of Oneonta as such a center, namely, its geographical location; its existing airport; its adaptiveness toward the training of pilots, through the availability of students attending Hartwick College and the State normal school; the very timely opportunity to obtain skilled mechanics, made available by the curtailing of employment in the local railroad shops, who can easily and quickly adapt themselves to the proper training, should be brought to the attention of the proper authorities: Be it

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, Senator JAMES MEAD, Congressman BERT LORD, and the Civic Aeronautics Authority to respectfully request that these advantages peculiar to Oneonta be pointed out and considered if such a plan is authorized."

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of the city of Oneonta, N. Y., this 3d day of February 1939.

[SEAL]

W. A. HOLLEY, City Clerk.

Mr. Chairman, if we could establish this field, as I hope we may—and I hope this Committee will take notice of the facts I present and include this college town as one of the towns where this training shall be had—I believe it would be a great advantage to all of central New York, to all of our Nation in fact, for from this flying field they could reach out to New York City and all our Atlantic coast line should the time ever come when we move to defend ourselves. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELOSON.]

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the positions taken here today, and I appreciate the viewpoints of our constituents. There are other questions we ought to take into consideration in connection with national defense. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that there is considerable tension throughout the world today.

As far as I personally am concerned, I am in favor of appropriating this money for the program of air defense, and my reason for it is this: In Japan today we see a spirit of aggression similar to that which existed some 400 years ago in China during the days of Genghis Khan and Kublai Khan. The Japanese are trying to get additional territory, and they need it. Excessive population in their own country and their desire to be a great world power are uppermost in their minds. The same situation exists in Germany.

We must bear in mind also in this connection the fact that the Japanese Army has been trained under the German Army for over 40 years and there is an intimate union between Japan and Germany.

Our problem today is not concerned so much with what we want to do as with what we may be compelled to do. There is no question in my mind but that war will break out in Europe, and I think that this year will decide it. The question of appropriation for our air force, the number of planes we should build, makes very little difference; because if war breaks out, no matter what provision we make in this bill, we shall have to protect ourselves. This attitude will be necessary not because we are going to be invaded but because we may have to defend ourselves by preventing an enemy establishing bases close to our shores. In the event of an attack on Great Britain—and it might happen—and if Great Britain should lose, the enemy naturally would try to establish bases on this side of the Atlantic. Suppose they tried to establish such bases in the Caribbean Sea, the West Indies, or Canada, whether we want to go to war or not, we would be forced to step in to defend those places in order to defend our Nation. These are factors we must bear in mind today as we discuss this defense program.

I think it is entirely reasonable to limit the amount of production as advised in the minority report. After all, that does not matter. It is not entirely within the sphere of Congress to handle the situation. If Great Britain is attacked, and, as I said, should fail to hold back the enemy, then we would have to speed up our own production. Another thing to bear in mind is that if Great Britain should be attacked, the airplanes that we are now sending to England and France might possibly be used against us; that is, if England should be unable to protect herself. We might have to meet attack from our own production of airplanes and also from other war machinery. These are things, of course, that must be taken into consideration at the present time. So I say the problem is much more far-reaching than it may appear to be as discussed here today.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THORKELSON. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman said that there is a possibility that the planes we are sending to England might be used against us.

Mr. THORKELSON. I said so; yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Would the gentleman enlighten that for us a little? Would he tell us how that might come about?

Mr. THORKELSON. Suppose Germany attacked England; it is quite possible. The attack would not be by an army, but would be by an air force and their effort would be to destroy shipping to keep food supplies from reaching England. In the event of the success of such an undertaking, England might be forced to sue for peace, and with her armaments taken over, in such event, they would, of course, be used against us; that is, if Germany or the other powers intended to use them for that purpose. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I abhor the thought of having to vote for large armaments, but in the present psychology of the world it seems to me to be the part of wisdom and patriotism to do whatever may be necessary to protect America. [Applause.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I would like to yield, but in 3 minutes I cannot; I am sorry.

Mr. Chairman, in the limited time vouchsafed to me I shall present for the consideration of the Committee an amendment to this bill I would like to see adopted; so if you kindly will, you may be giving it your thought before the bill is taken up under the 5-minute rule. It is an amendment which I know would be heartening to the friends of peace not only throughout the United States, but throughout the world.

I see no real reason why there should be any objection to it from any quarter, and I hope when I shall have explained it the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] will agree to accept the amendment.

If you will turn to the last page of the bill, you will see that the final section is No. 13. I should like to see added to the bill another section, No. 14, reading as follows:

SEC. 14. The United States would welcome and support an international conference for limitation of armaments and in the event of an agreement of the world powers, to which the United States is a signatory, providing for such a reduction of armament, the President is hereby authorized and empowered to suspend so much of the program provided in this act as it may be necessary to eliminate in order to conform to said agreement.

I may say this is almost the same provision as adopted in connection with the naval expansion bill last year. It was agreed to by everybody then, and I hope the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will accept the amendment.

If this amendment is adopted, it will be the only glimpse of peace associated with this embattled bill. It would at least give the peace-loving people of the United States the satisfaction of knowing that the Congress, which is the branch of Government nearest to the people, has gone on record this year, as it did last year, on the proposition that the United States "would welcome and support an international conference" looking toward a mutual agreement that will check the mad race of armaments.

What are we going to say if we refuse to adopt this amendment this year, in view of the fact that we went on record in favor of a similar proposal last year? Are we going to leave the inference that Congress is of a different opinion this year, that we have grown more militaristic, that we are no longer in favor of an international conference to limit armaments? I deny that Congress has changed its view, and I know that the people of America have not changed their views. The people want us to keep out of the whole foreign mess. And while they will sustain an adequate program of defense, they would be mightily pleased if our Government would take the lead in a movement for an international conference, when representatives of the powers would get together like human beings around a table and decide to stop the foolish rivalry that is leading all of the nations to bankruptcy and the brink of war.

We have a very impressive precedent for the amendment I propose to offer. On March 18 last, Representative CARL VINSON, chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, arose and offered a committee amendment to the naval expansion bill, which was adopted in substance as he offered it. That amendment became law, and is section 9 of the Naval Expansion Act, signed May 7, last year. Let me read to you the text of section 9, so you may see how similar to it my amendment is:

SEC. 9. The United States would welcome and support an international conference for naval limitations and in the event of an international treaty for the further limitations of naval armament to which the United States is signatory, the President is hereby authorized and empowered to suspend so much of its naval construction as has been authorized as may be necessary to bring the naval armament of the United States within the limitations so agreed upon, except that such suspension shall not apply to vessels and aircraft then actually under construction.

If my amendment is not adopted, we will be in the anomalous position of heralding to the world that Congress was in favor last year of a world conference for naval limitations but is silent this year in respect to a world conference on military limitations. We owe it to the millions of sincere people who believe in peace not to deny them the cheer and encouragement which my amendment would afford. To them the future seems black enough, goodness knows. Let us not make it seem blacker by adverse action or inaction on this amendment.

I do not have any right to quote the Secretary of State, but I will say that it is my firm conviction that he would have no objection to this amendment. And I want to quote what the President said at a recent press conference when he enunciated his four-point program of foreign policy. One of the points in that program was as follows:

We are in complete sympathy with any and every effort made to reduce or limit armaments.

My amendment harmonizes absolutely with the views so often expressed by the President and the Secretary of State. I know that it expresses the inarticulate hopes and aspirations of millions upon millions of our people who fear that the world is on the road to war and that we are traveling with it. From the standpoint of the reassurance which our people so much need, it would be a great mistake, I think, to fail to adopt the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in support of the May bill (H. R. 3791). No man more deplores than I do the necessity of appropriating large sums for instruments of death and destruction at a time when our people's peacetime needs for housing, medical care, old-age assistance, social and unemployment security, and farm aid remain in large part unprovided for. But the world conditions which force us to spend for defense are not of our making. We may hate war, but we cannot deny that war threatens every nation today, including our own.

In the face of this clear and present danger we must, however reluctantly, provide adequate means of self-defense. In his opening message to this Congress, the President emphasized the interrelationship of the three arms of defense—rearmament, foreign policy, and national unity. I call your attention to the fact that those who, in the course of this debate, pose the question of choosing between expenditures for defense and for the social welfare of our people are ironically enough the same gentlemen who voted against the $875,000,000 relief appropriation. They are the same gentlemen who in the last session fought against wage and hour legislation and block or try to whittle away every appropriation to provide adequately for the people's needs. They are the enemies of the Wagner Act, of antilynching bills, of a national health program, of the T. V. A. Thus they seek to weaken our defense by disrupting our national unity and denying to our people the domestic security which will make them strong and give them a working democracy worthy of their loyalty and devotion.

SOME SPEECHES SOUND LIKE HITLER

These same gentlemen oppose also the foreign policy of President Roosevelt, and seek to weaken us in the second arm of defense. They tell us that the war mongers of Rome, Berlin, and Tokyo mean us no harm. They tell us that it is that man in the White House who has conjured up the bogey of war and who will lead us into war. They do not seem to be abashed by the fact that it has become almost impossible to distinguish their speeches from the speeches of Adolph Hitler and the inspired press comments of Mussolini's poison-pen writer, Gayda. In Rome, in Berlin, in Tokyo, our great, peace-loving President is painted as the world's No. 1 war-monger. We have become used to the cynicism of those dictators whose planes and bombs murder the women and children of China, Spain, and Ethiopia. But as a people we are profoundly shocked to hear the cant of the war-making dictators echo in the Congress of the United States.

It has been charged by Members of this House that the President wants us to "police the world," and that that is why he is asking for more airplanes and battleships. But look at the past record of these present advocates of isolationism. Did the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] object to our policing Nicaragua in the interests of dollar diplomacy? Would he object today to our policing Mexico in the interests of the Oil Trust?

THEY TELL US TO MIND OUR OWN BUSINESS

I am afraid that those who are so eloquent in telling us to mind our own business, in fact want us to neglect our business and mind the business of a few big industrialists and bankers instead.

OUR BUSINESS IS PEACE

Our business, the business of the American people, is peace. I would like to repeat to this House a challenge thrown down by a Republican, a very conservative Republican, and an anti-New Deal Republican. I quote from an editorial in the United States News of February 6 by David Lawrence:

Will the Republican Party take the position that it has no interest in keeping the British fleet from being destroyed by a Nazi air force? If it does so for purely political reasons, it will lose the support of the many fine Republicans in the rank and file who do not wish these United States to be made unsafe for democracy.

Will the Democrats who have been sniping at the President's foreign policy openly avow that they prefer a triumph of Nazi Germany in the world to an assertion of our sympathies with the democracies of the world?

For if either of these groups do feel that way, then the 1940 campaign will have a real issue—and it will not be war or peace. It will be an issue between those who would not lift a finger to keep the Fascist system from being imposed upon us and those who would make almost any sacrifice, including human life, to protect the democracy of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that this bill will pass, and by an overwhelming majority. The gentlemen on the other side of the aisle will not dare to oppose this measure. But they have already made it clear that they will snipe at it, try to slow down the process of building an adequate air force, and above all use this debate for an attack on the President's foreign policy.

I ask them, and the Tweedledums on my own side of the aisle, to look around them, to read the newspapers, and face the facts. If they have any vestige of real patriotism, they cannot long continue to repeat the nonsense that "we have nothing to worry about, nobody will attack us, only the President will lead us into war, only the White House is the seat of the war danger."

CALIFORNIA IS WORRIED

I come from the great State of California, and I tell you that my people out there are worried, and it is not the White House that they are worried about. They can see, even if some Senators and Congressmen cannot, how every retreat before the aggressors, in any part of the world, has repercussions in other parts of the world and on our own hemisphere. It is a long way from California to Barcelona. But the fall of Barcelona and the loss of Catalonia to the Fascist forces in Spain had immediate consequences in the Far East, and so brought the war danger nearer to our western seaboard. Japan seized the island of Hainan. This act was of relatively little significance to the war in China, for China no longer depends on that route for supplies. But the seizure of Hainan strikes directly at the vital interests of France and Great Britain, and at the vital interests of the United States as well.

WE SHOULD HELP DEMOCRACIES

We could have prevented the seizure of Hainan and so strengthened our own defense. We could have done so without building one extra battleship, or firing one shot, or shedding one drop of American blood. We could have checked Japan by lifting the embargo against Republican Spain, and so changing the whole world situation by showing our intent to aid the victims of aggression, by placing our vast moral and economic power on the side of democracy and peace.

We could have stopped Japan in the Far East if we had not so tragically tried to "legislate neutrality"—with the result that we have strengthened and built up the aggressor nations. We could have stopped Japan by placing an embargo on arms, scrap iron, and all the raw materials of war, and by cutting off all imports from Japan which now provide her with needed foreign exchange.

The fall of Catalonia and the seizure of Hainan have had other consequences which strike perilously close to the safety of California and to the peace of the United States. Every victory for fascism in Europe and Asia emboldens the Fascists of Mexico and Latin America. I am told on good authority that in the past month the Fascist victories in Spain and the Far East have given rise to a new wave of Fascist activity in Mexico and other nearby Latin American countries. In Mexico the Fascists who are preparing to play the part of Sudetens have been openly demonstrating, celebrating the victories abroad and preparing for similar victories on this continent.

In the face of these very real dangers I cannot join with the advocates of disarmament, military, economic, social, or diplomatic.

On the contrary, I support the bill now being considered by this House. I support it because I am confident that our armaments will be used to defend our national security, our democracy, and peace.

At the same time I urge that we speed particularly our diplomatic defenses, and make our foreign policy a policy of clearcut resistance to fascism and Fascist aggression.

Imperative as is the need to pass this measure, even more imperative is it that we hasten the amendment of the present Neutrality Act, to make it a real instrument of peace. I have just read in this morning's New York Times that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] has introduced a bill to amend the existing Neutrality Act. I have not yet had an opportunity to study his bill. But from what I know of the Senator from Utah, and from what I can judge of his bill as set forth in the newspaper account, I believe it is a step in the right direction. This bill would apparently permit the President and Congress to determine the aggressor, and defines the aggressor as one who violates a treaty to which the United States is signatory. It then provides for withholding aid to the aggressor nation and for furnishing aid to the victim of aggression. That is my present understanding of the bill, and that is, in my opinion, the principle on which our foreign policy should be founded.

I hope that the Foreign Affairs Committee of this House will soon receive and consider a companion bill to the one introduced by the Senator from Utah, perhaps with suitable amendments. I hope that we will move with all possible speed to strengthen our defenses, not only in the air and on the sea but through the adoption of a policy of aid to our sister democracies and resistance to aggressors, as well as through the expansion of the New Deal's domestic program, which unites our people in the struggle for security and opportunity.

Above all, I hope that the majority of this House will make the vote on the May bill a real demonstration of national unity and patriotism—a vote of confidence in the President and in his policies for peace. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I think one of the most difficult things for any Member of the House to do is the right thing when a bill of this character, highly technical in its nature, relating to national defense, comes before the House. It is almost impossible to know where the line should be drawn when it comes to national defense. Certainly no patriotic American would want to be guilty of not having adequate defense; on the other hand, no man wishes to be a party in stirring up a feeling which might involve war, such as was done some years ago.

In order to appreciate just what bombing means to the various communities in the war zone, may I recall a vivid experience which I had? I was in London during the air raids of December 1917. I was a tenderfoot. I recall hearing the young Boy Scouts on the streets call "Take cover!" The city was in total darkness. A telephone call came to the room for everybody to come below, and, of course, we all went.

A hostile plane was flying over the city. There may have been several. At least one of them was finally trapped by the English planes and brought down. But in the meantime vast quantities of high explosives were dropped. You could hear the explosions. You could feel the vibration in the buildings.

The next morning we went out with an official to see the devastation brought about. The bomb had dropped into a section occupied by the poor people of the city of London. Houses were utterly demolished. Hundreds of brick buildings were blown up. One bomb had gone through a schoolhouse, but fortunately no students were in it at the time. This bomb was imbedded in the floor of that schoolhouse.

Little children were standing around, innocent victims of the tragedy, with their hands mangled. People were standing around with bandages over their heads. They were homeless.

I remember one laundry was destroyed. I was not in Congress then, and neither was the man with me. An Englishman with a monocle had been showing us around. Of course those people felt and knew what war meant. My colleague said to the Englishman: "Do you know that the laundry was blown up last night, and my laundry was in it?" The Englishman adjusted his monocle and said, looking at him in supercilious disgust, "My word, what a tragedy."

We were tenderfeet. We did not realize what was happening. I remember also being in the city of Lyons one night when the call came to take to cover. There was a dugout provided. Men, women, children, army officers—all classes—who could get under cover were there. A few nights before the railroad station had been blasted to pieces. They had to conceal every light in the city. A lighted cigarette was not even permitted on the street. In those days planes were slow, but now a plane can go over from Berlin to London in 79 minutes. I can therefore understand why those people over there are greatly alarmed.

Mr. Chairman, there is one thing we ought to consider. There is no use becoming hysterical when it comes to a program of this kind. I believe the proposal of the gentlemen from New York [Mr. ANDREWS and Mr. WADSWORTH], to stagger the manufacture of these planes is a very sensible and a wise thing to do. If I am not misinformed, it would be absolutely impossible to get the raw materials necessary to go into the manufacture of these planes unless we are going to build inferior planes. Aluminum today is allotted to industry on the basis of a quota. There is a shortage. This means we ought to go along in a sensible, sane sort of way and stagger the manufacture of these planes. This will give ample time to turn out the men to man these planes. Not only that, but the art is being developed with great rapidity. I have flown a great deal, as some of you have, and I know you recognize the fact that during a period of even 2 or 3 months when you get aboard a plane you see marvelous improvements in the plane. What is the use of going ahead and building planes we cannot man and then have them absolutely obsolete by the time we are going to use them? I hope therefore that we can use a little common sense here today and not be hysterical at all and stagger the manufacture of these planes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] such time as he may desire.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill; but I am also going to consider an amendment which I understand will be proposed.

In our consideration of the half-billion-dollar national defense bill, including among other items expenditures of $23,750,000 for defense of the Panama Canal Zone, we must guard against steps which would lead us into another abortive attempt to end wars.

I am fully convinced of the necessity of providing ourselves with adequate national defense, but only to the extent of protecting ourselves and in support of the principles incorporated in the Monroe doctrine.

We as a Nation must not risk our national security by meddling in the domestic affairs of foreign nations. Other nations have the same right to choose their forms of government as we have to choose our form of government. I firmly believe that appointive officials of our Government would be following a much wiser course if they refrained from provocative utterances concerning the domestic or internal affairs of foreign nations.

The United States cannot afford again to send the flower of its youth to right internal wrongs in countries on the other side of our oceans. Surely we have domestic problems of sufficient import to demand the entire attention of our young men as well as our elderly men.

Mr. Chairman, we are confronted daily with predictions that a war between the most powerful nations in the world, including this Nation, is not too far distant. Coming events always cast their shadows. Where is there a shadow today that is being cast in this country to the effect that we may be attacked by any nation across the Atlantic Ocean? But we should remind those nations that they have not as yet settled debts incurred during the World War, which was ironically called the war to end wars.

We have paid our debt to France. France owes us $4,000,000,000 as a result of debts contracted during the World War. France has paid on her indebtedness $486,000,000.

England borrowed over $4,000,000,000 from the United States to finance her part in the World War, and of this amount $2,000,000,000 has been paid; but today England owes us more than $5,000,000,000 in war debts, including interest on the principal, according to figures released by the War Department.

We have not forgotten, nor will we forget in our generation or in generations to come, that 119,956 men, of the finest strata of our Nation, gave their lives in the World War. We will not forget the 37,568 men who died in action. We will not forget the 12,942 men who died as the result of wounds received in action. And we will not forget the 69,442 men who died as the result of injuries, diseases, and other ailments incident to the World War. Neither will we forget the fact that in many of our hospitals throughout the United States there are soldiers still suffering from diseases and injuries they contracted or received during the World War.

Mr. Chairman, it is not the duty of the United States to police the world. As representatives of the people of our Nation we must prevent the United States from becoming a policeman of the world. That is not our business. I am for this bill only for the purpose of protecting this country and the countries of the Western Hemisphere against attack by foreign nations. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I was much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE]. I believe those remarks, supported by the chart of the world showing the possessions of the United States, Great Britain, and France were most fundamental and timely, expressing as they did, in my judgment, after a detailed, extensive, and intensive study of our problem of war and peace over a period of 20 years, one of two possible eventualities which may overtake our country during the next 3 years, and against which we must prepare.

After our very unsatisfactory and destructive experience of unpreparedness in 1917 and 1918, with which we are all painfully familiar, I am very much interested in the right sort of preparedness, preparedness to safeguard democracy and preparedness to safeguard the lives and property of our citizens.

I always feel, with most other people, that all these expenditures for war purposes are bad and should be voted down and the money expended in more constructive ways if we could only do it. But then again, when we consider the state of the world, with its military dictatorships and aggression transgressing all the laws of God and man every day, then we know that we must do something along the line suggested in the bill which is before us for consideration. We all certainly want to do the right thing in this respect, so the question becomes, it seems to me, what is the right thing in terms of democracy and in terms of the precious lives of the sons and daughters of America?

If we could take a vote here today on the question of whether a majority of us feel there will or will not be a war forced upon us in the near future, whatever its cause and whatever its justification, I believe from the remarks which have been made that the majority feel that such a thing will come. Then is not the plain duty of all of us to take immediately every step to prepare and protect ourselves and our priceless heritages and our sons and daughters against that day which we see on the horizon? I believe so, and I must cast my vote accordingly. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved June 24, 1936 (49 Stat. 1907), is hereby repealed. Section 8 of the act of July 2, 1926 (44 Stat. 780), is hereby stricken out and the following is substituted in lieu thereof:

"Sec. 8. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to equip and maintain the Air Corps with not to exceed 5,500 serviceable airplanes, and such number of airships and free and captive balloons as he may determine to be necessary for training purposes, together with spare parts, equipment, supplies, hangars, and installation necessary for the operation and maintenance thereof. In order to maintain the number specified above, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to replace obsolete or unserviceable aircraft from time to time: Provided, That the total number of airplanes and airships herein authorized shall be exclusive of those awaiting salvage or undergoing experiment or service tests, those authorized by the Secretary of War to be placed in museums, and those classified by the Secretary of War as obsolete. And provided further, That the total number of airplanes authorized in this section shall include the number necessary for the training and equipment of the National Guard and the training of the Organized Reserves as may be determined by the Secretary of War."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDREWS: On page 2, line 3, after the word "thereof", strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That other than airplanes now on order, or to be on order, under the provisions of the Military Establishment Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1939-40, or those which from time to time may be rendered obsolete, not more than 1,000 airplanes may be contracted for during any one fiscal year, except in the event of the declaration of a national emergency."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I think the provisions of the suggested amendment are fairly well understood in a general way, but in listening to the various speeches that have been made and in reading current statements in the press, it is obvious that the full intent of the amendment is not understood.

May I bring you back for a moment to the exact figures covering this situation? We have on hand today within the Air Corps, 1,797 planes. There are of that number to be rendered obsolete this year 351 planes, leaving us 1,446 planes as the net balance. I also want to remind you we have at the present time, or did have on December 31, 1938, 558 planes on order, and it is already proposed and approved by the Budget that in the coming Military Establishment bill for the fiscal year 1939-40 we will order 446 more. In other words, the Air Corps has now coming in or shortly to be under contract, over 1,000 planes.

The amendment which I have just offered has nothing to do with those 1,000 planes or even beyond those 1,000 planes that during the next year or two may be rendered obsolete. We merely say that beyond the 1,000 planes that the Air Corps now knows it is going to get this year, not more than 1,000 of the remaining 3,000 under this authorization may be ordered in one year. In other words, the War Department with, roughly, 1,000 planes coming in now, may in addition, even with the adoption of this amendment, order an additional 1,000 planes this year which would leave the Department in the position of having on contract for early acquisition over 2,000 planes in this year's business.

I want this to get home to you. All we ask is to stagger the remaining 3,000 planes so that not more than 2,000 planes may be contracted for or in process this year and next year you shall order 1,000 planes and the year following you shall order 1,000 planes.

Let me say a word or two about the situation as I believe it appeals to the officers of the Air Corps themselves and to the industry. I believe if we went to the head of any large aviation industry, and I have two fairly large ones in the district which I happen to represent, or even to the officers of the Air Corps, and if we would say to them, "Here is this amendment and we will guarantee that this amendment will be reflected in appropriations," they would say, "Certainly, that is the way to go at it."

Mind you, if this amendment is not adopted, it is the plan and the purpose and the policy to order all of the planes now under frozen specifications. So I only offer this amendment with the thought it will carry out, if translated into appropriations, what any reasonable, sound businessman knows would be for the good of his industry, for the good of his labor, for steady employment, and for a resulting balanced load over a period of 3 years instead of finding ourselves at the end of that time at the end of a big hump and out of soap, so to speak.

It seems to me this is the logical thing to do, and I offer the amendment in the thought that if it is adopted, then those on the Military Committee next year should see to it that the Air Corps at that time gets its 1,000 planes.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. The matter of production can be controlled entirely by the Appropriations Committee, can it not?

Mr. ANDREWS. It can; but, nevertheless, we will be laying down a principle and a policy for them to follow if we adopt this amendment.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Is it not a fact that the amendment the gentleman proposes destroys the recommendation and runs counter to the recommendation of the Chief of Staff and the Chief of the Air Corps of the United States Army?

Mr. ANDREWS. I do not believe so, if we could get a frank statement from them.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. So far as the record is concerned, that is true, is it not?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can reach an agreement with the gentlemen on the minority as to time for discussing the pending amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the gentleman not become too hysterical in trying to push through this bill. This is one amendment which will require a little time and I would suggest that debate run along for a while.

Mr. MAY. I wonder if 30 minutes would be satisfactory.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not see any reason for any limitation on the time. This is one amendment where we will have some real debate and I think it is a matter that should have some real consideration.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the trend of the entire argument on this bill has been to the effect that we should follow the recommendations of the Chief of Staff, the Secretary of War, and their aids in respect of this entire program. I simply want to call attention to the fact now that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], than whom there is no finer gentleman in the House, and to whom I accord credit for aiding very materially in this legislation, would completely set at naught his own argument. In other words, the gentleman has argued from the beginning of the hearings and from the beginning of the debate and still argues and still believes that we ought to keep the industrial plants that are adapted to the production of airplanes at work regularly all the while. Now he proposes in his amendment here to say that we will not let them build more than about 2,000 planes the current year, when the evidence before the committee disclosed clearly that the country has at present a capacity of 2,500 planes per year. At cross purposes with his entire contention, shall we refuse to listen to the voice of wisdom in the face of approaching trouble? Shall we tie the hands of the men we shall have to follow in case of war? Shall we again send our soldiers to the battlefield with their hands tied and their lives to be sacrificed?

The figure he gives would reasonably cover the first year's production, but let us see what it would do to the next 3 years that he proposes to inject into the plan by this amendment. We would have developed the capacity of the plants to probably 3,000 a year, or 4,000 a year, or 1,200 a month at the end of the first year, and then he proposes to cut off orders and say you can have only 1,000 planes a year, and this proposes one-third of capacity for the next 3 years. So that his argument falls of its own weight. Furthermore, it has been proven in the hearings before the committee, and there is no serious question of the fact that by the allowance to the War Department under the supervision of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff and the Procurement Division, all of whom are very capable gentlemen, of the privilege of contracting for planes in mass production or in large numbers, that they can save multiplied millions of dollars in the purchase price of the material to be acquired under this program. Then, if gentlemen on the other side of the House are so much interested in economy as they say they are, and I am sure they are, why not give leeway to the War Department and let them contract for planes at, say, $50,000 each, instead of $100,000 each, by having a large number manufactured.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. I am interested in the remark the gentleman has made criticising the logic of the gentleman from New York, though I do not know whether he refers to Mr. WADSWORTH or Mr. ANDREWS. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the fact that large orders are being placed for planes abroad, and it may require the capacity of our industry to take care of these foreign orders coming in as well as the domestic production?

Mr. MAY. So far as I am concerned, I think it is a good idea, while we are not in war and are at peace with all of the world and hope to remain so, to let France and England pay the cost of the rehabilitation of our factories and get them ready to produce airplanes for us, but while doing that I would say this to the gentleman, that I have no idea that any nation can get a contract in this country to the exclusion of the American Government with any industrialist or with any department of the Government. The National Defense Act of 1920 confers upon the President ample authority to take over the factories in case of war and the existence of a necessity therefor.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I am interested in the remark made about frozen specifications. I believe it is important. Can the gentleman tell us whether it is true that if a contract is let under this bill for 3,000 planes, improvements that come along in the industry in the United States in the 12 or 18 months cannot be added on to the planes before they are delivered?

Mr. MAY. I am thankful to my friend from Connecticut for asking that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended for 1 minute, that I may answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. And I say to the gentleman from Connecticut that there was no evidence that these contracts were to be let under frozen specifications.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. But on the contrary it was specifically stated that the Procurement Division of the United States War Department would take advantage of every new invention, of every new scientific discovery, and we have included in the legislation authorization for an appropriation of several million dollars for that particular purpose, in order that they may explore the field of discovery and research so that we may have the advantage of every modern improvement to make our planes up to date in every respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. I do not intend to object, because the gentleman is one of my very best friends on the minority side of the committee, but I hope when he has concluded his remarks, which I am sure will be interesting to everybody in the House, we can reach an agreement as to the limit of time on this section and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, my reason for asking for an additional 5 minutes is that out of deference to my colleagues on the committee I did not take any time in general debate on the bill. First, let me say that the members of the Committee on Military Affairs often argue and fight among themselves, but I think there is not a single member of our committee who would not fight for any other member of that committee. It is composed of a group of fine men, who have given serious thought and deep study to this particular problem. Recognizing the troublesome conditions throughout the world today, I think no one can close his eyes or bury his head in the sand like an ostrich and ignore the activities of other nations, and for that reason there is almost unanimity of opinion among members not only on the committee and of the House but, I think, of the American people as well, as to the necessity of America's increasing her armament at this particular time.

The only thing controversial in this measure is this amendment that proposes to stagger or spread the manufacture of these planes over a period of 3 or 4 years, instead of making them all at once.

I am rather surprised that most of the Members on the majority side could not accept this amendment in our committee. It seems to me there is every good argument for it. To begin with, there will be only 900 of these new planes put into the air. Thirteen hundred and fifty of them will be placed in more or less cold storage, without any personnel to man them. The first argument for spreading the program over a period of years, manufacturing not over 1,000 planes a year, is that it will give the War Department, the General Staff, and particularly the Air Corps additional time to train pilots and proper personnel to man these planes. That is the first argument for the pending amendment.

The second argument is it will lessen the strain on our annual Budget at this particular time. The sound financial condition of any country is its first line of defense. With 1,000 planes grounded, with no personnel to man them, the investment they represent, approximately $56,000,000, is a huge sum of money that you must take into consideration when you think of the poor American taxpayers and our present alarmingly large and constantly increasing national debt.

The third reason this amendment should pass, and to my mind the most logical and convincing argument, is that it will give us the advantage of research and of experimentation, of supplying planes of the latest type, the most up to date and modern, that will not become obsolescent or perhaps obsolete by the time the last of the 3,000 are manufactured.

For these compelling reasons, I think the membership of the House should really adopt this amendment.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Supplementing what the gentleman has said in regard to these planes and the obsolescence of those that will not be in the air, there is hardly any article of manufacture of a technical nature that does not have what they call "bugs." Here they will have a chance to work those out, instead of doing as the automobile companies have done sometimes, call in thousands of machines because of some "bugs" that did not appear when they tested them out on the testing machines.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman is absolutely correct. I wish we might have had perhaps some of the leaders of our great manufacturing industries appear before our committee, but I am sure you will remember as vividly as I do the time of the World War when our shipyards worked day and night turning out transports and ships that rusted and rotted in the navy yards at the conclusion of the war—almost a complete loss to the American people.

Mr. Chairman, I know this bill will pass overwhelmingly. I think it should pass, whether or not this amendment is adopted, but I do hope and pray that the foreign press throughout the world, whether it is in London, Paris, Rome, Berlin, or Tokyo, will not interpret the passage of this act by the House of Representatives of the United States Congress today as any intent of this Nation's forming any alliance with any other power or of assuming the role of policeman to maintain order in the world or to settle the disputes of other countries. [Applause.]

I think it is a matter of deep concern and of even deeper regret that members of the President's official family, the Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture in particular, should have made the inflammatory speeches they have made recently, because you know as well as I know that no good can come of it. I know that modern science and inventions and new methods of radio, transportation, and communication have reduced this world to a miniature province. I know that Lindbergh has pushed Paris up into our front yard and that Dr. Eckener and Howard Hughes have brought Tokyo, Moscow, and Bombay within, not weeks but only a matter of days or hours, the reach of New York, Chicago, and other great cities in our country. But the indisputable fact remains and it is a fact that is a very great comfort to me, that I reflect upon with a great deal of consolation, that 3,000 miles of deep, blue water lie between the United States and Europe; 5,000 miles of deep blue water lie between the United States and Japan and the Orient. I am here to say that the Father of his Country never gave sounder advice to his fellow countrymen and to posterity than when he counseled us above all else to remain neutral, avoid entangling alliances; bear in mind that Europe has a set of primary interests, whereas we have another set of primary interests. The quarrels of the nations of the Old World, with their intense jealousies, their historic hatreds, and their own selfish interests are not our concern, and this country has no business sticking its nose into other people's affairs unless we want to get our nose smashed. [Applause.]

Let us, as we vote for this bill, give the world to understand, in spite of some remarks of aggression that have been uttered in high circles, that the people of the United States, as well as the Congress of the Nation, are voting for this program of defense only to protect our own people; not to police the world; not to tell any other nation what form of government it must have; but to serve notice upon all alien, foreign "isms" that our only concern is with Americanism, our own Constitution, the bible of our freedom and the character of our liberties, and that we are going to stay home and mind our own business. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I agree with the gentleman's statement in quoting George Washington as being opposed to any foreign entangling alliances, but does he not think he was equally right when he said, "Adequate preparation for war is the surest guarantee of peace"?

Mr. SHORT. I most certainly do, and I am sure the chairman of the committee knows that is my position. We believe in God, but still should keep our powder dry. May we never have to use it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact we have had 6 hours general debate on this measure and that we very mutually agreed to that, I wonder if we might not reach an agreement with the other side as to debate on this section?

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, during the entire course of the debate upon this bill we have heard absolutely no opposition to the proposition that in order to establish an adequate air-defense program for the Army Air Corps we must have 5,500 planes. This has been agreed to by both sides of the aisle. The only objection that now comes is on the question as to when we should procure these planes. We have been told about the Baker Board, the Morrow Board, with their 5-year programs; and we know that although both these Boards prescribed a 5-year program for the enlargement of the Air Corps, at no time have we ever come up to the requirements of those Boards.

Here we are about to lay down a new 2-year program for the Air Corps. To judge from the arguments of our friends of the minority they would have us make of it a 5-year program. They say the contracts should be spread over a 3-year period. This means that the procurement of these airplanes would be spread out over a 4- or 5-year period, because it requires anywhere from 12 to 18 months after letting a contract before we can obtain delivery of the ships. Under the proposed legislation it will require 3 years at least if we are to obtain the necessary 3,000 ships to have a full air force of 5,500 planes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Under this amendment all the planes are to be contracted for during 2 years.

Mr. COSTELLO. I understand from the wording of the gentleman's amendment that contracts could not be let for more than 1,000 planes in any 1 year; in other words, you would have to divide the contracts up into three sections. You could not tell a single manufacturer how much business he might expect except as to 1 year; and the very purpose of this legislation is to inform American industries that they are going to have to produce so many planes—3,000—and each contractor is to be told at one time the full number of ships that he is going to produce. In this way he can gage his production and, if his plant needs enlargement, he can enlarge it. But if you tell a manufacturer that he can have only one third of his contract now, and that he may or may not get another third a year from now, and that he may or may not get the balance in the third year, no member of the industry will be able to gage his production, and the price of these planes will be increased because of this fact.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. TABER. Would not the gentleman figure that we should let contracts every year for 3,000 planes? It seems to me we are facing terrific obsolescence.

Mr. COSTELLO. That is not my purpose. The purpose of the legislation is to acquire immediately 3,000 planes to build up the strength of the Air Corps. It is admitted that the Air Corps should have this number of planes. They require them now, not 5 years from now, and the sooner we get them the better.

We have heard much talk about obsolescence, frozen contracts, frozen specifications. The fact of the matter is the Army would be getting 3,000 of the most up-to-date planes available, and every year subsequent to the completion of this program the War Department will acquire through the annual budgetary appropriations approximately 500 or 600 new planes to replace the old ships, the obsolescent ships. As a result of the annual replacements we shall be adding to the air force some 500 or 600 new planes—the latest type airplanes every year.

A question regarding these reserve ships has been raised. The statement has been made that 2,000 ships were to be held in reserve. When the Air Corps speaks of reserve ships they speak merely of planes without pilots. This does not, however, mean that the ships are stored in a barn. Eight hundred of these reserve ships are going to be training ships. They will be out at these schools. They will have no pilots. About 1,300 will be combat ships. At the present time with only 2,000 planes in the Air Corps some 240 ships are grounded for repairs and service requirements at all times. With an increased force of 5,000 planes, some 600 planes will be grounded at all times because of needing some type of repair or service. As a result, we must have a large group of reserve ships to replace those that are necessarily grounded to maintain at our various air fields the full complement required.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am painfully conscious of the fact I am to indulge in some repetition in the few minutes I may consume in discussing this amendment. I endeavored to express my views upon it yesterday in general debate.

I would like to emphasize on this occasion one or two elements of the situation upon which I did not touch yesterday. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, we are not engaged, as I understand it, in an effort to expand our Military Establishment merely to meet some situation that exists today. As I understand it, we are engaged in an effort to establish something of a policy in relation to our Military Establishment which shall hold good and be effective for some time to come. The committee bill apparently is based upon the theory that we have to have 3,000 planes as fast as we can get them. I have not heard this theory defended. I agree with the committee that we need 3,000 additional planes, but I am convinced that as we produce them we should do so in such fashion that the total authorized strength of 5,500, which is the policy number, shall be as effective from year to year and year after year as it is possible to make it. Obviously if you make your 3,000 planes on the design of 1939 or the first half of 1940, you will put the whole problem through and get the 3,000. When that program is finished, your industry stops. When it is finished the planes will begin to go through the obsolescent stage and within a short period many of them will be totally obsolete.

You will have done nothing in the authorizing legislation to establish a policy. I conceive the proper and wise policy to be something of this sort: We decide what the total number of planes shall be. As we make this decision we hope it will last for a reasonable period of time. We know that in this art obsolescence overtakes the plane very quickly. It is the great enemy of an effective air force. If we could arrange this thing so that we would build so many planes per year, build up to the 5,500 maximum strength, drop off the obsolete and build the new, then again drop off the obsolete and build the new, we would always have as a matter of continuing defense something approaching 5,500 of the best planes in the world.

It is obvious if you manufacture three-fifths of your entire air-force planes on one design, or closely related designs, at the end of this period you will not have the best possible air force in the world. We are making policy here today in our effort to increase the force. A sound policy means that it shall be a continuing policy, not merely to meet some exigency of 1939 or 1940, but looking ahead to 1943, 1944, and 1945 and seeing to it that as this thing goes on year after year never shall our air force be overtaken and put on the ground on account of obsolescence.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. I was going to ask the distinguished gentleman from New York what is the period of time of obsolescence for a bombing plane, a pursuit plane, and a training plane?

Mr. THOMASON. I can answer that better by reading the testimony of General Arnold, who is, perhaps, the best authority in our country on that subject. If you will refer to page 13 of the hearings, you will find his answer as follows:

We consider the life of a bombardment plane to be longer than some of the others. Let us start from training planes. There is apparently no end to the life of a design of a training plane. A training plane can be used indefinitely because performance is not the determining factor. The determining factor is the ability to train people on that airplane.

The bombardment airplane has a much longer life than other types of combat planes. It may be that the life of a bombardment plane will be even 6 or 8 years. I doubt if it would ever be longer than 6 or 8 years. But 8 years is the absolute maximum.

An observation plane does not have to have high performance.

The pursuit plane, in order to be of any value at all, has to be better than any other plane that can be brought against it. And the life of that plane could not be much over 2 years; and 4 years is a maximum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the gentleman know that the bomber that today is 6 years old is utterly outclassed by the bomber of yesterday?

Mr. THOMASON. I expect the gentleman is right, but, nevertheless, we pretend at least to be following the recommendation of the War Department in this matter, and the officers of that Department are experts on the subject.

At the risk of repetition I must go back to the proposition that was made yesterday when I submitted the argument, the suggestion, and the recommendations of the War Department, when they said that the problems to be considered in this important program were four: First, initial cost; second, the effect on the aeronautical industry; third, the purpose of the program; and, fourth, the question of maintenance.

If I may refer briefly again to the question of the program, may I say that the War Department's own language on that subject is as follows:

The proposed 5,000-airplane program is intended to insure the establishment and equipment of an adequate air arm as soon as possible and provide the necessary war reserve. A true war reserve for the Air Corps does not consist of airplanes alone. In addition to reserve personnel it requires an adequate research and development program and an industry which can produce aircraft in quantity.

The War Department says that is necessary. General Arnold states that he needs this program in 2 years, and I cannot understand why we should fuss and argue here over the question of an additional year.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. But it was testified before our committee that the reason they wanted these planes now is because they feared perhaps in another Congress they would not get the appropriation.

Mr. THOMASON. The gentleman from Missouri—

Mr. SHORT. Was not that the testimony given?

Mr. THOMASON. That is the testimony, but the gentleman does not seem to be willing to admit that this is nothing in the world but an authorization.

Any man who reads the newspapers today must know world conditions, and when you add to the world situation the testimony of the representatives of our own War Department, I think we ought to take their advice instead of injecting a political angle into the situation. We ought not to play politics with national defense. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Let me say to the gentleman that no political angle has been injected at all. I asked General Arnold himself two questions:

General, don't you think before any foreign power could successfully attack the United States—

Mr. THOMASON. I yielded for a question, not a speech.

The gentleman from Missouri is an excellent and an eloquent speaker. I only wish the gentleman from Missouri would do as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN] have done, and give careful study to the hearings. The gentleman would find that not only General Arnold, the Chief of the Air Corps, but General Craig, and every man in the War Department and on the General Staff has said we need this program now. If conditions change next year we still have a Committee on Appropriations that can chop off the appropriations. This is a question of what our experts, our trusted advisers, tell us to do on this subject. As far as I am concerned, I am willing to follow them, and that is what I believe the House ought to do.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it not a fact that 800 of the 3,000 planes will have practically no period of obsolescence since they are to be used as training planes?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes; I think that is true. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLASON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman as a member of the committee will recall that I asked General Arnold two questions; first:

Don't you think before any foreign power could successfully attack this country it would be quite necessary for them to have bases either in Canada, Mexico, or some nearby land?

He added, "Or floating bases."

I said, "Absolutely." That is my opinion as well as the general's—

Do you think there is any great danger of immediate attack from any source?

He answered:

I do not think I ought to answer that question.

Although General Craig promised us that he would answer it, the question was never answered. The thought of America being attacked by any particular power at this time is so silly and ludicrous that it should not even be considered.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I do not have the floor.

Mr. CLASON. Let me make my statement first.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring home to the House the fact that the Air Corps is asking the Seventy-sixth Congress at its first session to give it the right to order 4,054 planes out of 5,500, 3,032 planes beyond the 1,022 now on order or intended to be ordered under the regular Budget.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLASON. No; I do not have time.

I also wish to point out the fact that on page 5 General Craig told us that of the 5,500 planes to be built 2,163 are to be in reserve. The reason they are to be in reserve is that the Air Corps does not have pilots for them. The fact is they do not have airfields for them and it is going to take them 2 years to get the airfields. It is going to take them more than 2 years to get the pilots, according to the statement the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] just read. It will be only 2 years until the pursuit planes, of which 1,335 are to be in reserve, will be absolutely obsolete, under General Arnold's own testimony. What is the sense of rushing ahead with a program like that?

The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] simply provides in a reasonable manner that we will get up to within 2,000 of the 5,500 planes within a reasonable length of time. We will have 2,163 planes in reserve under this program without any pilots and without airfields for them. Now, let us be reasonable. Let us not order 4,054 planes in the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress. Let us spread it over next year and succeeding years.

You will see, on page 17 of the report, just what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] referred to when he stated that a general before the committee stated that in his idea the whole argument behind this program is to "take as much as they can get now." That is the whole story about this program. Let us be sensible and adopt this amendment.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLASON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MERRITT. I believe the gentleman realizes from the hearings that we have enough airports to take care of 5,000 airplanes.

Mr. CLASON. I asked that question of General Arnold when he was on the stand, and he ducked and would not tell us where the airports were.

Mr. MERRITT. Does not the gentleman from Massachusetts know it is in the record?

Mr. CLASON. No; I do not know it.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLASON. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BROOKS. Is it not a fact that we presently have authorization for 4,120 planes, and this is simply an authorization for 1,380 additional planes?

Mr. CLASON. That is true; it is an authorization for 1,380 more planes.

Mr. BROOKS. Is it not a fact that about 800 of these additional planes will be used as training planes and there will be no obsolescence in connection with them?

Mr. CLASON. I have no idea except what is in the evidence here as to how many are going to be used as training planes. What they tell us is that when a plane becomes obsolete they can use it as a training plane. On that basis we are going to pay for 1,300 first-class pursuit planes and 2 years from now when we get the pilots the planes will become training planes. Why not be reasonable and just buy what we need for military purposes at this time?

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLASON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. The gentleman understands the planes which are put in reserve will not be taken out of commission in the sense that they will not be used but will be assigned to the depots and tactical units of the Air Corps so they will be a reserve of planes which will be usable when other planes are taken out for major or minor repairs.

Mr. CLASON. Yes; but it is absolutely unnecessary on the testimony. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I hope we will not play politics with the safety of our Nation. During the last 10 minutes there was handed to me by the International Press Service a dispatch just received from London. I would like to read it:

Plainly implying Great Britain's determination to go the limit in facing any threat to the Empire, the Government tonight issued an official White Paper announcing huge increases in rearmament expenses. The next budget for the fighting services will contain provision for expenditures of £523,000,000 sterling, approximately $2,615,000,000, according to the White Paper which was issued simultaneously with the revelation that a new strain has been placed on Anglo-Italian relations by Rome's admission of heavy troop movements in Libya. The total expenditures will bring the total well above the $7,500,000,000 originally estimated for the 5-year period from April 1937.

LXXXIV—91

Believe as you may, we stand here at this hour to argue whether or not this Nation shall be equipped with 5,500 planes in either 2 years, which it is admitted is necessary to build them, or in 3 or 4 years. For my part, for my Nation, for my boy, I want to say that the wheels of the factories cannot turn fast enough to provide this Nation with adequate defense at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. As a matter of fact, even if this bill carries a provision for 5,500 planes, only planes can be manufactured that the Committee on Appropriations appropriates the money for.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman is exactly correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. And if it is found when they go before the Committee on Appropriations that they cannot justify the construction of the 5,500 planes within, say, 1 year, the committee will not give them the money.

Mr. PACE. And even if the money is appropriated it will be 1941 before they can be delivered.

Mr. COCHRAN. This is simply an authorization and not an appropriation.

Mr. PACE. Nothing else.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Aside from the practicability of the needed program of 5,500 planes, I feel sure it is the gentleman's conclusion that today, now, is the time for us to say to the other nations of the world that we expect to move forward in this respect, and properly prepare to defend our great Nation.

Mr. PACE. Exactly, that we intend to defend ourselves. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman and my fellow Members, I desire to congratulate this House upon the splendid debate, or rather upon the splendid arguments that have been made during the consideration of this bill, and the high plane upon which debate has been carried along. A few strains of partisanship have come into this discussion. Of course, we expect our friend from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] to always bring in more or less partisanship in any speech that he makes upon any subject at any time. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. I plead guilty to the charge.

Mr. RAYBURN. But I do feel proud of the House of Representatives for the general type and character of the speeches that have been made.

Much has been said about recognizing world conditions. A man would be more than blind in his eyes if he did not realize that there is a serious world condition. He would be less than far-seeing if he did not remember 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917, when America was smugly sitting here with a great ocean on either side, believing that the allied armies would defeat the Germans within such a reasonable time that we would never be called upon to participate in that conflict. Conditions in Europe are more volcanic today than they were in the early part of 1914. The world is living closer together; and wherever the frontier of America may be—and we today are not compelled to name it—I believe I speak the mind of the inarticulate millions out there who expect us to speak for them when I say that wherever that frontier may be, the people of this land want America to be prepared to defend that frontier. [Applause.]

The amendment that is now pending would be amazing to me if it did not have the support of some of the gentlemen who have spoken for it. I especially refer to my good friend from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], whose sanity I came to know well as a member of the great committee that I had the privilege to preside over. The gentleman does not seem to realize, however, that this is an authorization bill. I agree with him that this is a policy bill. Why say that we must build a thousand planes this year or never build them; why build a thousand next year or never build them? Why not commit this to the Congress to pass upon when appropriation bills come into this House. It might not be necessary or it might not be feasible to build more than 500 planes the first year, and the second year it might be necessary for the defense of this country and for the peace of the world for the United States of America to build 2,500 planes. [Applause.] It might be necessary before the summer that faces us is over that America should set in motion the forces that will build the 3,000 planes in the next 12 months in order to let the world know that America in planes, in ships, in men, and in equipment for those men is ready to meet a world in arms, because, as a great Speaker of this House once said:

The American people are the most peaceable people in the world; but when aroused by injustice and by invasion of their rights, they become the most warlike people in the world, willing, if necessary to protect their rights and their liberties, to meet a world in arms.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDREWS) there were—ayes 127, noes 169.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. MAY and Mr. ANDREWS to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 136, noes 183.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. When the facilities of the Army for instruction and training in aviation are deemed by the Secretary of War to be insufficient he may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, and without reference to any limitation contained in section 127a of the National Defense Act, as amended (10 U. S. C. 535), detail personnel of the Regular Army as students at any technical, professional, or other educational institution, or as students, observers, or investigators at such industrial plants or other places as shall be best suited to enable such personnel to acquire a knowledge of or experience in the specialties incident to aviation in which the training of such personnel is essential: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States in addition to the authorized emoluments of the personnel so detailed except for the cost of tuition at such educational institutions, and the cost of maintenance of necessary personnel who may be detailed as supervisors or inspectors and of the equipment assigned to them for their official use: Provided further, That the tuition for the personnel during the period of their detail may be paid from any funds made available for the procurement branches.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Page 3, line 10, after the word "funds", insert the words "which may hereafter be."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, is authorized to enroll as students at the Air Corps Training Center, for the pursuit of such courses of instruction as may be prescribed therefor, such civilians, upon their own applications, as may be selected from the instructional staffs of those civilian flying schools which have been accredited by the War Department for the education, experience, and training of personnel of the Military Establishment: Provided, That except for the furnishing of such supplies, matériel, or equipment as may be necessary for training purposes, the training of such students shall be without cost to the United States: Provided further, That in case of injury to or sickness of such students, hospital or medical treatment may be given in Government hospitals, but shall be without expense to the United States other than for services of Medical Department personnel and the use of hospital equipment, not including medicines or supplies: And provided further, That the United States shall be under no obligation in respect to payment of a pension, compensation, or other gratuity to the dependents of any such student who dies of disease or injury while undergoing such training, nor to any such student in the event of personal injury sustained by him.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, strike out lines 4 to 9, inclusive.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, some of you will recall that I referred particularly to this section in my address under general debate. My amendment is to strike out the proviso beginning in line 4, page 4. The explanation was made that this applies to instructors of civilian flying schools who are sent to the Army training center for training on war planes, so that they can go back and direct the training of students who will come into these private schools. No explanation has given me any good reason why, if these men are willing to give their services—and I note in section 3 they are to be given at no cost to the Government—they at least should have medicines and supplies if they should have the misfortune to sustain injury or even death while undergoing training in Texas.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. COSTELLO. If the gentleman's amendment should prevail, it would give to these civilian pilots the same pensions and compensation as members of the military personnel are now granted, and yet they would be merely civilian instructors temporarily detailed to Randolph Field for a short course in order to learn how the military is training their pilots for the Army. They are not members of the Regular Army, and yet if the gentleman's amendment should prevail, they would be liable to receive the same pension and compensation as a member of the Army.

Mr. MILLER. It seems to me that if they offer their services for this purpose, they should receive compensation. It may take only 10 seconds for an instructor to crash and become totally disabled. I believe there is an obligation on the part of the Government to care for them in that case.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that when these men go to Randolph Field they have to accept the regulations of the Army?

Mr. MILLER. I assume so.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. And they are on the pay roll of the Federal Government.

Mr. MILLER. Yes. That is the question in my mind. The question is about what the other section means, that these services shall be given at no cost to the Government.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Are they there at their own expense?

Mr. MILLER. Possibly.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. And they are supposed to return home and train pilots.

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Therefore I say they should be given the same consideration as the Army men.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. My understanding is that the purpose of this section is to train men whose profession is now training pilots. They now have their own planes and are training pilots in these civilian schools.

The pilots are paying tuition. They are professors in these civilian schools, such as the Park School. Those men are being paid for their services by those schools. They are civilians. They are not connected in any way with the Government, but because the War Department under this bill will use these schools by sending students to the schools and paying the tuition of those students, they want the instructors to have an opportunity to improve their own ability to train the students. So they offer the instructors, at the expense of the instructors, the opportunity of taking part in the courses of instruction at the Army schools. They are in no way connected with the Army. They are not paid by the Army. They are not paid by the Army when they go back to instruct, except indirectly, because the school in which they are teaching is paid the tuition of the students who are there from the Army. They are professors in private schools. That is their status. They are offered an opportunity to improve their own ability to teach, by taking the course in the Army school. They do not obtain any enlisted status. They are offered this opportunity in order to give them a chance to give better instruction in their private schools, as though they were professors in a university, if the university was paying them and not the Army.

Mr. MILLER. I grant what the gentleman says is true, but the gentleman will agree that they are undertaking a very hazardous occupation to aid the Government in developing this air program. It is essential. It is necessary.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. That is incidental, however, to their own profession. They are already flying instructors.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly. May I say the same thing applies to any cadet who goes to Randolph. He is there for training to possibly follow that as a vocation afterward.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. But they are not cadets.

Mr. MILLER. No.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. I would very much prefer to yield my 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH]. I do not want to retard anything, but I want this clear. I will make this one statement: If these men are offering their services to go to Randolph Field to improve their technique and to make possible the training of these youngsters, I believe while they are there they are entitled to the protection of the Government. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut for an answer to that.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Those men are not covered by this section. Those men are professors in private schools. That is their regular profession. They are flying teachers not now connected with the Army. If they are offered an opportunity to improve their own technique in instruction, without cost to the Government, at their own expense by going to the Government school, does the gentleman think they still should be treated the same as the cadets who are in there under obligation to the Government when they enter into their contract of enlistment or when they accept a commission in the Army as officers?

Mr. MILLER. I must answer the question in the affirmative. I think they are, if they are going to devote their services to training these youngsters.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment merely to suggest that if the words proposed to be stricken by this amendment were stricken out of the bill, the effect of other provisions of the bill would have the effect of adopting a new policy of paying pensions and compensation to civilians not in the Government service.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. If this legislation is passed with those lines contained therein, Members of the House of Representatives will find it impossible to get approval of legislation that would provide for the compensation of dependents of men who may be killed or injured while acting under orders of officers of the Air Corps. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] can speak eloquently on this subject. He knows what it means to have an accident occur when acting under orders of the United States Army. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH] spoke of comparative hazards. If those hazards are created by the order of an Army officer, it is my contention that the man who is injured should be entitled to compensation.

Some of you may remember that last year we found difficulty in passing a bill for the benefit of a widow of a Reserve officer who was in an Army plane, going up for practice purposes. He was killed, and it proved impossible for us to enact into law a bill for the benefit of his widow. If this provision stays in the bill, it will constitute an objection that you will see cited in adverse reports upon private claims for the benefit of these instructors if injured.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I may say in reference to the question raised by the gentleman from South Dakota that the bill contains another provision for the compensation and retirement of Reserve officers on the same basis as Regular officers, but in that case the officer is under the control, as the gentleman has said, of the Army. These instructors would not be under Army control.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I call the gentleman's attention to the report which states:

The utilization of civilian training schools will materially reduce the time required for the expansion of our Air Corps.

In other words, this plan is for the benefit of the Air Corps. The instructors are to be given hospital care. If they die, why not be fair to their dependents? The bill itself by its provisions calls attention to the dangers faced by these civilians who place themselves under Army officers for training and subject themselves to the hazards of Army equipment. They may fly in experimental ships. They will be subject to identical hazards with men for whom we accept responsibility. So it seems to me the Government should recognize an obligation to assist these men in case of injury or their dependents in case of death. There is no cheap way to prepare for war.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion and under rules, regulations, and limitations to be prescribed by him, to lend to accredited civilian aviation schools at which personnel of the Military Establishment are pursuing a course of education and training pursuant to detail thereto under competent orders of the War Department, out of aircraft, aircraft parts, aeronautical equipment and accessories for the Air Corps, on hand and belonging to the Government, such articles as may appear to be required for instruction, training, and maintenance purposes.

SEC. 5. Section 1 of the act entitled "An act to amend the National Defense Act," approved August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1028), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That the President is hereby authorized to call annually, with their consent, upon application to and selection by the War Department, for a period of not more than 1 year for any one officer, for active duty with the Regular Army, such numbers of Reserve officers, in the grade of second lieutenant, as are necessary to maintain on active duty at all times not more than 1,000 Reserve officers of the promotion-list branches other than the Air Corps, not more than 3,000 Reserve officers of the Air Corps, and not more than 300 Reserve officers of the non-promotion-list branches: Provided, That in the non-promotion-list branches and the Judge Advocate General's Department, such Reserve officers may be in any grade not above captain: Provided further, That until July 1, 1949, the tour of active duty of Air Corps Reserve officers may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be extended not to exceed a total of 7 years' active service in all, and thereafter not to exceed a total of 5 years' active service in all: Provided further, That in the non-promotion-list branches and the Judge Advocate General's Department, the tour of active duty may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be extended not to exceed a total of 2 years' active service in all: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall require the termination of active duty of any Reserve officer because of promotion to a higher grade after his tour of active duty begins. The tour of any Reserve Corps officer on active duty may be terminated at any time, in the discretion of the Secretary of War": Provided further, That all officers (including warrant officers) and all enlisted men of the National Guard, Reserve Corps, or any other armed forces of the United States, however designated, other than the officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, if called into the active military service by the Federal Government for extended military service in excess of 30 days, and suffer disability or death in line of duty from disease or injury while so employed, they shall be deemed to have been in the active military service during such period and shall be in all respects upon the same footing as to pensions, compensation, retirement pay, and hospital benefits as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades and length of service of the Regular Army.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: On page 5, line 25, after the word "War", insert a period and strike out the colon and all the language down to and including the word "Army" on page 6, line 13.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, all I desire to say about this amendment is that the provision sought to be stricken out was inserted in the bill at the very close of the consideration of amendments by the Military Affairs Committee without any hearing whatever, and without any report from either the War Department or the Veterans' Administration. Upon further investigation and since the amendment was injected into the legislation, I have conferred with the War Department and procured an expression of views from them on the subject.

In addition to this, I call attention to one particular provision of the bill as contained in this amendment which I have moved to strike. The language on page 6, line 1, reads as follows:

All enlisted men of the National Guard, Reserve Corps, or any other armed force of the United States, however designated, other than the officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, if called into the active military service by the Federal Government for extended service—

And so forth. Under this provision of the bill as written, with the amendment in it, the bill would be extended to the Navy of the United States, to the Coast Guard, and to the Reserve Corps, even when they are detailed to service in the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Not only that, but it goes so far as to set up retirement benefits, death benefits, and compensation to a group of men who may have been in the service not over 30 days as against men who do not have the same benefits under the present retirement law although they may have been in the service as long as 15 or 20 years.

I am advised by the War Department that if this language remains in the bill it will start the program off with an additional cost of approximately $500,000 a year, and over the years will run into many millions of dollars. The Budget Director has not even been consulted about it.

There is pending before the House Committee on Military Affairs an unconsidered bill, H. R. 3220, which I introduced at the request of the War Department. The War Department has no disposition to mistreat any Reserve officer, but they think that to establish such a policy as that which would be established by this provision to which I refer in the pending bill would apply to both the War Department and the Veterans' Administration and make it very difficult to handle the subject of proper retirement and proper compensation to the officers of the Reserve Corps who are and will be entitled to compensation under existing law.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman's amendment, then, take from this bill the protection for the Reserve officers which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH] told me the bill contained when I was speaking on the other amendment?

Mr. MAY. It will take that provision from the bill; and the purpose of striking it out is to enable the Military Affairs Committee of the House to hold hearings on legislation that is pending before them so that they can intelligently consider the matter after hearing both sides and make a proper report to the House of Representatives on legislation which carries not merely compensation and death benefits and injury benefits, but carries with it these vast retirement privileges not contemplated in existing legislation.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What assurance can the gentleman give us that the committee will report that bill favorably and give us a chance to enact a law that will grant benefits to those who crash while under orders of the War Department?

Mr. MAY. In my judgment, there is no sentiment against treating Reserve officers with the same justice as Regular officers; and I am sure every Member of the House Committee will see that a fair hearing is had.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the committee has offered this amendment at the command of the War Department General Staff to strike out an amendment that was adopted by the Military Affairs Committee by a vote, as I recall, of 18 to 6.

The bill the gentleman from Kentucky refers to that is going to take care of these men that are cracked up when in training, these 4,300 officers of the Reserve Corps and National Guard, H. R. 3220, is a lot of bunk.

It puts an Army officer who is injured under the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, and if any of you have ever had a constituent injured on a Federal project and got over 15 cents out of that outfit, I would like to see the record.

The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs says this will apply to the Marine Corps and Navy. The Marine Corps and Navy already have the benefit. Why take the three main branches of our national defense and treat two of them in one manner and the Army in another?

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman want me to answer the question? I will do so.

Mr. EDMISTON. All right; answer it.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman stated that H. R. 3220 is pure bunk.

Mr. EDMISTON. It is.

Mr. MAY. How is he going to find out whether it is bunk or not until we hold hearings on it?

Mr. EDMISTON. I say when any Army officer or enlisted man of the United States is injured in line of duty, or in the service of his country, he should not have to look to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission for compensation for his injury. You are putting him alongside of the fellow who gets hit in the foot with a pick on a W. P. A. ditch.

You are drawing 3,000 young officers into the Air Service. It is a hazardous service. When we used the officers to carry the mail and put them into that service of carrying the mail, we provided this same provision in that bill. That provision carried in the House and Senate in 1933. We recognized the hazards of the service then, and this is just as hazardous a service, if not more so, because those were trained officers, with no equipment to fly the mail. They were trained. These are youngsters who are going to be trained. You are going to crack them up and you are going to kill them.

Do you know what their beneficiaries would get under existing law? The most they could get if the officer is killed would be $45 a month, and the most a widow may get would be $28 per month.

Let us consider two officers, one a Regular Army officer and one a Reserve officer in the same plane, on the same mission and under the same orders. The plane cracks up and both of them are injured to the same degree. The Regular Army officer is retired for life on two-thirds of the pay of one grade in advance and the fellow officer in the Reserve or in the National Guard flying with him gets what he can out of the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. As I understand the import of the gentleman's proposition it is to place a Reserve officer who is called into extended active duty in the Air Corps on the same basis of retirement pay that a Regular Army officer draws in case of injury?

Mr. EDMISTON. That is exactly correct. The Army is the only branch of our national defense that does not now enjoy this privilege, and the War Department can give you no argument against this thing. The thing they are afraid of, and I want you to know this, is the cost. They say it will cost $500,000 the first year. It will not cost them a nickel if they do not crack up the boys or kill them.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Did the gentleman even ask the clerk of the committee or the chairman of the committee or anybody in the War Department for a report on his amendment when he offered it in committee? Did he not offer it at the very last minute of the consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMISTON. I notified the committee I was going to offer the amendment. I offered it and the committee agreed to it.

Mr. MAY. When did the gentleman give notice to the War Department that he was going to offer it?

Mr. EDMISTON. I do not pay any attention to the War Department. I know they are against it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in defense of the language proposed to be stricken from the bill of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. The retention in the bill of this language is nothing more than simple justice.

A Reserve officer called to active duty in the Air Corps, or anywhere else, who is killed in the proper performance of that duty is just as dead as a Regular officer killed under the same circumstances. If he leaves a family, most likely he leaves the family under similar circumstances as that of a Regular Army officer of like grade and like length of service. Whatever may be the condition of his family, they are entitled to the protection of this Government just the same as is the family of a Regular officer.

Anyone in the Reserve Corps who comes out to serve his country, although it may be in a training period, does so very often at a sacrifice of his time and money. He furnishes the most unselfish service to his country of any man who serves the Nation. In his own time and at his own expense he goes through a period of training that is most valuable to this Nation, and by the unselfish service rendered to the Nation by such individuals it does away with the necessity of maintaining in this Nation an army such as we find maintained in foreign countries at tremendous expense. Largely because of the service of the Reserve officers, we are able to maintain a system of national defense with only a small standing Army. The Officers' Reserve Corps is the framework upon which we can build the Army we must raise in case of necessity. Therefore, if we are going to have an esprit de corps in the Officers' Reserve Corps, if we are going to have them give unselfishly in the future as they have in the past, we certainly should give them the same protection, if they are injured in the proper performance of their duty, as we extend to the Regular officers in connection with this service.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman think it is fair to afford the same rights and privileges to a man who has been in the service for a day or two only and happens to get hurt as against a man who has been in the service for 10 years and has served for all these years?

Mr. FADDIS. I say to the gentleman, "Yes." I say to the gentleman that although this man may have been in the service only a few days he has come there to render to his Government just as much service as he is capable of rendering, and his life is just as valuable to him as the life of a man who has been educated at West Point is to him. His life is just as valuable to him, because he has paid for his own education, as if the Government had paid for it, and he is entitled to the full benefit of all the protection this Government can give him.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman believe that a man who has been in the service for 3 days and has been hurt is as much entitled to retirement pay as a man who has served 15 years?

Mr. FADDIS. If he is in a war or engaged in any other hazardous duty; yes, indeed, he is.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that this service the men will be entering is an extremely hazardous service?

Mr. FADDIS. That is quite true.

May I answer the gentleman from Kentucky further by saying that this is a poor place to quibble about instances of that kind. It might have been written into the bill and properly taken care of in the proper time.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman mentioned the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON]. The situation now, however, is that this provision for the protection of these officers is in the bill.

Mr. FADDIS. Yes. The gentleman from West Virginia placed it in there in committee.

Mr. HEALEY. If we wish to keep the provision in the bill we will vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. FADDIS. Exactly.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that this demand represents a feeling that has existed for years between the officers of the Regular Establishments of either the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps and the officers in the Reserve Corps?

Mr. FADDIS. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is defeated.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I find myself in accord with all the statements made by my friends on the committee, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] but this is not a question of how this proviso got in the bill but a question of just what it means and how wide its scope. If the gentleman from West Virginia would so amend the section which he offered in the closing minutes of the committee's sessions and state that all men brought into the service as a result of this particular act shall have the benefit of retirement pay and benefits, same would have my very cordial support. However, I invite the attention of the committee to the very, very broad language of this amendment:

That all officers (including warrant officers) and all enlisted men of the National Guard, Reserve Corps, or any other armed forces of the United States, however designated, other than the officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, if called into the active military service by the Federal Government for extended military service for 30 days—

Mr. EDMISTON. Or more.

Mr. THOMASON. Or more, shall receive the benefits of the present Retirement Act.

The Congress in the past has had a good deal of experience with legislation regarding retired emergency officers, and some of it none too pleasant. I find myself in sympathy with the purpose the gentleman has in mind, but I also find myself in accord with my chairman, who states that a matter of this importance, concerning which the War Department through the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff state there ought to be hearings both on the part of the War Department and the Veterans' Administration to see that justice is done not only to the officers and men but also to the Treasury of the United States, and such broad legislation should not be passed without hearings and deliberation.

I say this is not an unreasonable request, when the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs comes on the floor of the House and says he will see to it that there will be hearings and that the matter will be decided upon its merits and legislation adopted that will do justice to everybody. Therefore, I believe either this language ought to be modified to cover only the officers brought in as a result of this measure, or else we should have a full and fair hearing and come in here with legislation on the subject. This is the fair way to do it, as I view it, and in saying this I do not want to be understood as being in opposition to providing retired benefits for the young officers who are brought into the aviation branch of the service by reason of this act. In fact, I will support fair and just legislation to provide retirement benefits for all officers and enlisted men, but I want to be sure we do not go back to the abuses of the old days.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. EDMISTON. Did we not hold hearings during the last session on this identical principle as embodied in the emergency officers' retirement bill? We spent weeks on those hearings.

Mr. THOMASON. The gentleman knows what happened to that bill.

Mr. EDMISTON. We passed it here, and the President vetoed it. That is what happened to it.

Mr. THOMASON. I know; but the bill did not become law.

Mr. EDMISTON. That still does not make it right.

Mr. THOMASON. No; perhaps not; but I say we ought not just absolutely open the floodgates here by a special provision inserted into what might be termed an emergency aviation and army bill. This is a national-defense bill. I hope we can bring in a special bill dealing with the subject of retirement that will be so fair and just that it will not be vetoed.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am sure the gentleman would not want us to think this provision gives retirement pay without some cause for it. The provision requires that the officers must suffer disability or death in line of duty.

Mr. THOMASON. Certainly; but any legislation on such an important subject should not be discriminatory or all-inclusive.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Why should you discriminate between the Reserve officer and the Regular officer who might happen to be injured or killed in the same ship or under the same circumstances?

Mr. THOMASON. I do not draw that line. That is not the issue involved here. I believe the record will show that the Reserve officers do not have a better friend than I.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman believe the Reserve officers should be given added protection? The Regular Army officers are in training every day, all their lives, while the Reserve officers do not have that opportunity of training to protect themselves.

Mr. THOMASON. I agree with you and I favor legislation on the subject, but I believe it ought to be seasoned legislation. Certainly, hearings ought to be had, including all interested parties, the Reserve Officers' Association, the National Guard, the Veterans' Administration, and the War Department, to the end that a bill may be worked out that will be fair not only to the officers who may be injured or killed in service but to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. I understand the statement has been made here that protection similar to that provided for in the so-called Edmiston amendment to the bill is now given to officers and enlisted men of the Navy and of the Marine Corps. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMASON. I do not know the details. I am sure there is some law that gives them some benefits, but I am also sure that it is not so general or far-reaching as this provision. I think we need legislation on the subject, and I will support it, but in my judgment this bill should only cover those brought in by this act. I hope the gentleman from West Virginia will so amend, and I will support it.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I am not entirely clear about what the provision referred to in the bill actually covers but if it is intended to protect Reserve officers who are injured while in the service, then I am most emphatically against the amendment to strike out, offered by my friend the chairman of the committee.

I know a specific instance where a Reserve officer, as fine a gentleman as ever lived and as patriotic an individual as ever served his Government, went up at Selfridge Field in what they call a 2-to-1 dog fight under orders, and was hopelessly and helplessly injured. A bill to make him a captain and to retire him was passed here, I believe, twice, but because the War Department reported on it adversely to the White House the bill was vetoed.

How long is this Committee going to stand idly by and permit patriotic citizens who are rendering a service to their Government, whether in the air or otherwise, to be maimed or crippled and made helpless for life without some provision being made for them? The War Department assumes the attitude that only the lives of Regular officers are precious. I am personally resentful about this matter, and I believe this House should once and for all determine this question and show the War Department that others are entitled to some consideration. If a private pension bill covering a meritorious case is passed by Congress, the War Department vetoes it by an adverse recommendation. Thus a superlegislative action overrides Congress.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I suppose the gentleman heard my statement made awhile ago that the War Department had suggested legislation to take care of these very people, and that I had assured the gentleman that he should have a hearing on it.

Mr. DINGELL. The War Department for a long time has neglected its duty in respect of this matter and it is about time they recommended some remedy.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman think that far-reaching legislation involving the matter of retirement should be brought up in this way and considered without any hearing, or should be written on the floor here?

Mr. DINGELL. It should not be written here on the floor, but the Committee should see to it that these people are protected. Their lives and their patriotism are just as essential to the Nation as the lives or the patriotism of the men in the Regular Army. If the gentleman will assure me that he will go along in trying to correct some of the inequities of the present law and will seek to control the selfishness of the War Department, or rather certain individuals in it, then I could go along with him in his effort to strike out the section in order that legislation properly considered could be brought before the House at a later date.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman is now getting around to my position, because that is exactly what I want to do. I think we should have adequate hearings and give everybody a chance to be considered.

Mr. DINGELL. But I will say to my friend that I do not want to wait 10 years, because we are 20 years behind right now.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I want to ask the gentleman this question: I am in sympathy with what the gentleman wants, but assuming the case the gentleman spoke of about the young man who cracked up on Selfridge Field and had only been called out for service for 10 days, under this provision in the bill he would not get any retirement pay because it applies only to service in excess of 30 days.

Mr. DINGELL. I will answer the gentleman by saying that I think if he was in the service 1 day or if he went up in a plane for the first time and was killed or injured in 30 minutes, he should be compensated.

Mr. BULWINKLE. But we are dealing here with this particular provision in the pending bill.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. EDMISTON. I will explain the 30-day provision. That was to take out the Reserve officer who is called into the service for a 2 weeks' training period. This does not apply to him, but when they call upon him for extended duty of 30 days or longer, he goes in on the same basis as a Regular Army officer.

Mr. DINGELL. I am glad to have that statement from the gentleman.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that if we were to adopt the policy incorporated in the pending bill, we would make a great contribution to national defense by encouraging these officers to keep their Reserve commissions with the Government?

Mr. DINGELL. I would think so, but there seems to be some controversy about the section and on the assurance of the chairman of the committee that proper legislation will be brought out, squaring with my ideas, I am considering I might vote with him.

Mr. EDMISTON. Have you not been waiting for it for 20 years?

Mr. DINGELL. I agree with that statement.

Mr. EDMISTON. You will never get it that way.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman would assume that the same sentiment would exist when he grants hearings as exists now.

Mr. DINGELL. That might be his opinion.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think those who favor this legislation, who have been fighting for it for years, now that we have it in this bill, ought to keep it in the bill. [Applause.]

We are not trying to put an amendment into the bill. We are trying to stop the chairman of the committee from striking out a part of the bill as reported to the House. Therefore, we on both sides of the aisle, are supporting the committee report.

Now, my distinguished friend, the chairman of the committee, says we should introduce a separate bill. Oh, yes, I know he will give it a hearing, but if his committee were to report out a separate bill to reach the same objective, you and I know, as practical Members of the House, that the invisible opposition of the Department along the line would ultimately kill the bill. Also, with this provision in the pending bill we need not worry about any veto.

This provision is logical, this provision is fair, and the committee exercised proper judgment and good judgment in reporting the bill out with this provision in it. Do not let us take any chances on having a separate bill introduced, with separate hearings upon it, and then when that bill comes out, having it meet with invisible opposition along the line that such a bill will encounter. Let us keep the present language in the bill which the chairman of the committee now undertakes to strike out. Then, if it stays in the bill as it goes to the White House, we who have favored this legislation for years, with the hope of having it enacted into law, will have accomplished the objective we have so long sought.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman favor a policy of writing legislation by putting an amendment in a bill without hearings of any kind whatsoever or without consulting the various agencies that are to enforce it, especially far-reaching legislation of this character?

Mr. McCORMACK. This matter has been considered for years.

Mr. MAY. By whom?

Mr. McCORMACK. Apparently when the committee reported this out the Members of the House were justified in assuming that your committee had given it consideration; otherwise it would not have been included in the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. As a matter of fact, is it not only right and proper when a measure like this comes out proposing to bring into the active service several thousand young Reserve officers, that the same provision be made in the bill and adequate opportunity given them?

Mr. McCORMACK. A well-rounded-out program, as contemplated by this bill, should include a provision of that kind, and the committee is to be congratulated for having included it. Let us all support the committee by keeping it in the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAY) there were—ayes 39, noes 149.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. Section 2 of the said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That for the period of 10 years, beginning July 1, 1939, the Secretary of War is authorized to select annually, to be commissioned in the Regular Army in approximately equal annual increments, in accordance with the provisions of, and from the groups described in, section 24e of the National Defense Act, as amended, such proportion of the total number of officers as, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, will be required to bring the commissioned personnel of the Regular Army to peacetime strength, as hereinafter provided, on June 30, 1949."

SEC. 7. Section 24e of the National Defense Act, as amended (41 Stat. 774), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Except as otherwise herein provided, all appointments in the Regular Army shall be made in the grade of second lieutenant from the following groups: Group 1, from graduates of the United States Military Academy; group 2, from warrant officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army who have had at least 2 years' service; group 3, from honor graduates of the senior division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps; group 4, from members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and flying cadets, who during the current calendar year have completed 1 year's active duty, under the provisions of this act, which duty may include service as a flying cadet in the Air Corps Training Center; and group 5, from officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard, members of the Enlisted Reserve Corps, and graduates of technical institutions approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That, after all qualified members of group 1 have been appointed, appointments from the second, third, fourth, and fifth groups shall be made in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, from persons between the ages of 21 and 30 years: Provided further, That the number to be selected from each of the second, third, fourth, and fifth groups, and the number to be assigned to each branch of the service within the limits prescribed by law from all groups shall be determined by the Secretary of War in his discretion: Provided further, That until June 30, 1949, the total number of officers to be appointed annually from group 4, not including flying cadets, in the promotion list branches other than the Air Corps shall be not less than 10 percent of the total number of Reserve officers of such branches other than the Air Corps authorized to be called annually under appropriation acts, and in no event less than 50, and that any officers added to the Army under existing authorizations shall be within the total authorized commissioned strength of 16,719: And provided further, That immediately upon the effective date of this act, the President is authorized to commission not to exceed 300 second lieutenants in the Air Corps of the Regular Army, from among Reserve officers and flying cadets who have qualified for such appointment under existing laws. Any vacancy in the grade of captain in the Judge Advocate General's department, not filled by transfer or detail from another branch, may, in the discretion of the President, be filled by appointment from Reserve judge advocates between the ages of 30 and 36 years, and such appointee shall be placed upon the promotion list immediately below the junior captain on said list. Appointments in the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps in the grade of first lieutenant shall be made from Reserve Medical, Dental, and Veterinary officers, respectively, between the ages of 23 and 32 years. Appointments in the Medical Administrative Corps shall be made in the grade of second lieutenant from pharmacists between the ages of 21 and 32 years who are graduates of recognized schools or colleges of pharmacy requiring 4 years of instruction for graduation, under such regulations and after such examination as the Secretary of War shall prescribe. To be eligible for appointment in the Dental Corps, a candidate must be a graduate of a recognized dental college, and have been engaged in the practice of his profession for at least 2 years subsequent to graduation. Appointments as chaplain shall be made from persons duly accredited by some religious denomination or organization, and of good standing therein, between the ages of 23 and 45 years."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Page 7, lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "during the current calendar year" and insert after the word "completed" the words "not less than."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. On and after July 1, 1939, the peacetime commissioned strength of the Regular Army to be attained by approximately equal annual increments, as hereinbefore provided, shall be 16,719 officers, including 67 general officers of the line as now authorized by law. Commissioned officers, other than general officers, shall be assigned to the several branches as follows: Infantry, 4,184; Cavalry, 1,034; Field Artillery, 1,726; Coast Artillery Corps, 1,341; Air Corps, 3,203; exclusive of officers detailed from other arms and services for training and duty as aircraft observers and other members of combat crews; Corps of Engineers, 795; Signal Corps, 341; Adjutant General's Department, 131; Judge Advocate General's Department, 121; Quartermaster Corps, 1,016; Finance Department, 176; Ordnance Department, 417; Chemical Warfare Service, 124; Medical Corps, 1,424; Dental Corps, 316; Veterinary Corps, 126; Medical Administrative Corps, 16; and Corps of Chaplains, 152: Provided, That the President may increase or diminish the number of officers assigned to any branch by not more than a total of 30 percent: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall affect the number of professors, United States Military Academy, as now authorized by law, or require the reparation from the service of any officer now commissioned in the Medical Administrative Corps. Subject to the authorized increase or decrease of 30 percent hereinabove provided, the number of officers detailed in the Inspector General's Department shall be 55.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARTER of Ohio: Page 10, line 5, after the word "three" where it occurs the second time in the line, strike out the semicolon.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. The act approved June 11, 1938 (ch. 337, 75th Cong., 3d sess.), is hereby amended by striking out the words "twenty-one thousand five hundred" in the last line thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the words "forty-five thousand."

SEC. 10. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect the operation of the act of August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1028), with respect to the selection and commissioning, in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of that act, of Reserve officers now on active duty under the provisions of that act. Upon the effective date of this act, Air Corps Reserve officers who are then on active duty under the provisions of section 1 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat. 1524), shall be deemed to be on active duty under the provisions of this act: Provided, That on and after the effective date of this act no Air Corps Reserve officers shall be called to active duty under the provision of section 1 of the said act of June 16, 1936. Except as otherwise herein provided, nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect the number of Reserve officers that may be called to active duty under existing laws, nor the conditions and the purposes for which they may be called.

SEC. 11. Section 2 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat. 1524), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Any Air Corps Reserve officer who has not been selected for commission in the Regular Army shall be paid upon release from active duty following the termination of any period of active duty of 3 years or more in duration a lump sum of $500, which sum shall be in addition to any pay and allowances which he may otherwise be entitled to receive."

SEC. 12. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $23,750,000 to be expended for the construction, rehabilitation, and installation in the Panama Canal Department of such buildings, utilities, and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary to house antiaircraft, seacoast defense, and auxiliary units most urgently needed for defense of the Panama Canal.

SEC. 13. That section 4 of the act approved June 16, 1938, entitled "An act to provide for placing educational orders to familiarize private manufacturing establishments with the production of munitions of war of special or technical design, noncommercial in character," be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 4. That funds appropriated to accomplish the purposes of this act shall be available for expenditures incidental to the accomplishment of the procurements made thereunder, including production studies, factory plans, and other production data and the storage and maintenance of gages, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances procured thereunder. To carry out the provisions of this act there is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $34,500,000, which amount shall be available during the fiscal years 1939, 1940, and 1941, and there is further authorized to be appropriated the sum of $2,000,000 during each of the 4 fiscal years succeeding the fiscal year 1941."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUDLOW: On page 13, after section 13, add a new section, as follows:

"Sec. 14. The United States would welcome and support an international conference for limitation of armaments and in the event of an agreement of the world powers to which the United States is signatory, providing for such a reduction of armaments, the President is hereby authorized and empowered to suspend so much of the program as it may be necessary to eliminate in order to conform to said agreement."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, it is the same identical provision, in substance, which was held in order on the naval expansion bill, introduced in the last session. It would seem that a provision that was in order on a naval expansion bill would also be in order on a military expansion bill. I fail to see that the proposal is not in order on this bill. I had hoped that the chairman of the committee would not raise the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of opinion that to the bill pending before the House to provide more effectively for the national defense, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is not in order. The Chair is of opinion that the proposed amendment comes within the jurisdiction of another committee and is therefore not germane, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Under the rule the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly, the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress, and that in accordance with House Resolution No. 88 he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 367, nays 15, not voting 50, as follows:

[Roll No. 13]

YEAS—367

Alexander	Arnold	Beckworth	Bradley, Mich.
Allen, Ill.	Ashbrook	Bell	Bradley, Pa.
Allen, La.	Austin	Bender	Brewster
Allen, Pa.	Ball	Blackney	Brooks
Anderson, Calif.	Barden	Bland	Brown, Ga.
Anderson, Mo.	Barnes	Bloom	Brown, Ohio
Andersen, A. H.	Barry	Boehne	Bryson
Andrews	Barton	Boland	Buck
Angell	Bates, Ky.	Boren	Buckler, Minn.
Arends	Bates, Mass.	Boykin	Buckley, N. Y.

Bulwinkle	Gerlach	Ludlow	Rogers, Mass.
Burch	Geyer, Calif.	McAndrews	Rogers, Okla.
Burgin	Gibbs	McCormack	Romjue
Byrne, N. Y.	Gilchrist	McDowell	Routzohn
Byrns, Tenn.	Gillie	McGehee	Rutherford
Byron	Goldsborough	McGranery	Ryan
Caldwell	Gore	McKeough	Sabath
Cannon, Fla.	Gossett	McLaughlin	Sacks
Cannon, Mo.	Graham	McLean	Sandager
Carter	Grant, Ala.	McLeod	Satterfield
Cartwright	Grant, Ind.	McMillan, John L.	Schaefer, Ill.
Case, S. Dak.	Green	McMillan, Thos. S.	Schiffier
Casey, Mass.	Gregory	Maas	Schuetz
Celler	Griffith	Magnuson	Schulte
Chilperfield	Griswold	Mahon	Schwert
Church	Gross	Maloney	Scrugham
Clark	Guyer, Kans.	Mapes	Shafer, Mich.
Clason	Gwynne	Marcantonio	Shanley
Claypool	Hall	Marshall	Shannon
Clevenger	Hancock	Martin, Colo.	Short
Cluett	Hare	Martin, Ill.	Simpson
Cochran	Harrington	Martin, Iowa	Sirovich
Coffee, Nebr.	Hart	Martin, Mass.	Smith, Conn.
Coffee, Wash.	Harter, N. Y.	Mason	Smith, Ill.
Cole, Md.	Harter, Ohio	Massingale	Smith, Maine
Colmer	Hartley	May	Smith, Ohio
Connery	Havenner	Merritt	Smith, Va.
Cooper	Hawks	Michener	Smith, Wash.
Costello	Healey	Miller	Smith, W. Va.
Cox	Heinke	Mills, Ark.	Snyder
Crawford	Hendricks	Mills, La.	Somers, N. Y.
Crosser	Hennings	Mitchell	South
Crowe	Hess	Monkiewicz	Sparkman
Crowther	Hill	Monrone	Spence
Culkin	Hinshaw	Moser	Springer
Cullen	Hobbs	Mott	Starnes, Ala.
Cummings	Horton	Mouton	Steagall
D'Alessandro	Hull	Mundt	Stearns, N. H.
Darrow	Hunter	Murdock, Ariz.	Stefan
Delaney	Izac	Murdock, Utah	Sumner, Ill.
Dempsey	Jacobsen	Myers	Sutphin
DeRouen	Jarman	Nelson	Sweeney
Dickstein	Jarrett	Nichols	Taber
Dies	Jeffries	Norrell	Talle
Dingell	Jenks, N. H.	Norton	Tarver
Disney	Jensen	O'Connor	Tenerowicz
Douglas	Johns	O'Day	Terry
Dowell	Johnson, Ill.	O'Leary	Thomas, N. J.
Doxey	Johnson, Ind.	Oliver	Thomas, Tex.
Drewry	Johnson, Luther A.	O'Neal	Thomason
Duncan	Johnson, Lyndon	Osmer	Thorkelson
Dunn	Johnson, Okla.	O'Toole	Tibbott
Durham	Johnson, W. Va.	Owen	Tinkham
Dworshak	Jones, Ohio	Pace	Tolan
Eaton, Calif.	Jones, Tex.	Parsons	Treadway
Eaton, N. J.	Kean	Patman	Turner
Eberharter	Kee	Patrick	Van Zandt
Edmiston	Keefe	Patton	Vincent, Ky.
Elliott	Keller	Pearson	Vinson, Ga.
Ellis	Kennedy, Martin	Peterson, Fla.	Voorhis, Calif.
Elston	Kennedy, Michael	Peterson, Ga.	Vorys, Ohio
Engel	Kennedy, Md.	Pfeiffer	Vreeland
Englebright	Keogh	Pierce, N. Y.	Wadsworth
Evans	Kerr	Pierce, Oreg.	Wallgren
Faddis	Kilday	Pittenger	Walter
Fenton	Kinzer	Plumley	Weaver
Ferguson	Kirwan	Poage	Welch
Fernandez	Kitchens	Polk	West
Fitzpatrick	Kleberg	Powers	Wheat
Flaherty	Kramer	Rabaut	Whelchel
Flannagan	Kunkel	Ramspeck	White, Idaho
Flannery	Landis	Randolph	Whittington
Folger	Lanham	Rankin	Wigglesworth
Ford, Leland M.	Larrabee	Rayburn	Williams, Mo.
Ford, Miss.	Lea	Reece, Tenn.	Wolcott
Fries	Leavy	Reed, Ill.	Wolverton, N. J.
Gamble	LeCompte	Reed, N. Y.	Wood
Garrett	Lesinski	Richards	Woodruff, Mich.
Gartner	Lewis, Colo.	Risk	Woodrum, Va.
Gathings	Lewis, Ohio	Robertson	Youngdahl
Gavagan	Lord	Robinson, Utah	Zimmerman
Gehrmann	Luce	Rodgers, Pa.

NAYS—15

Andersen, H. Carl	Curtis	Lambertson	Rich
Bolles	Hope	Lemke	Rockefeller
Burdick	Houston	Murray	Thill
Carlson	Knutson	Rees, Kans.

NOT VOTING—50

Beam	Ditter	Hook	Seger
Bolton	Dondero	Jenkins, Ohio	Sheppard
Chandler	Doughton	Kelly	Sullivan
Chapman	Fay	Kocialewski	Summers, Tex.
Cole, N. Y.	Fish	McArdle	Taylor, Colo.
Collins	Ford, Thomas F.	McReynolds	Taylor, Tenn.
Cooley	Fulmer	Maciejewski	Warren
Corbett	Gearhart	Mansfield	White, Ohio
Creal	Gifford	O'Brien	Williams, Del.
Curley	Halleck	Robson, Ky.	Winter
Daly	Harness	Schaefer, Wis.	Wolfenden, Pa.
Darden	Hoffman	Secombe
Dirksen	Holmes	Secrest

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:
General pairs:

Mr. Warren with Mr. Wolfenden of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Mansfield with Mr. Dirksen.
Mr. Doughton with Mr. Holmes.
Mr. Cooley with Mr. Ditter.
Mr. Fulmer with Mr. Robson of Kentucky.
Mr. McReynolds with Mr. Taylor of Tennessee.
Mr. Sullivan with Mr. Secombe.
Mr. Collins with Mr. Hoffman.
Mr. Kelly with Mr. Jenkins of Ohio.
Mr. Darden with Mr. Halleck.
Mr. Secrest with Mr. Bolton.
Mr. Summers of Texas with Mr. Dondero.
Mr. Chandler with Mr. Fish.
Mr. Taylor of Colorado with Mr. Harness.
Mr. Beam with Mr. Seger.
Mr. Fay with Mr. White of Ohio.
Mr. Sheppard with Mr. Cole of New York.
Mr. Hook with Mr. Gearhart.
Mr. Curley with Mr. O'Brien.
Mr. Chapman with Mr. Winter.
Mr. Daly with Mr. Schaefer of Wisconsin.
Mr. Thomas F. Ford with Mr. Corbett.
Mr. Kocialewski with Mr. Williams of Delaware.
Mr. Creal with Mr. Maciejewski.
Mr. McArdle with Mr. Gifford.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, four of the Members from Illinois, due to important business, are absent. If they were present, they would have voted "aye" on the bill. Those gentlemen are: Mr. BEAM, Mr. KELLY, Mr. MACIEJEWSKI, and Mr. KOCIALEKOWSKI.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. MANSFIELD, is unavoidably absent. Had he been present when this vote was taken, he would have voted "aye."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. CHAPMAN, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would have voted "aye" on this roll call.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, Messrs. JENKINS, SECCOMBE, DONDERO, BOLTON, DITTER, WHITE of Ohio, WOLFENDEN, HARNES, CORBETT, DIRKSEN, HOLMES, HOFFMAN, and GIFFORD, are unavoidably absent, either through illness or on account of business. Had they been present they would have voted "aye" on the passage of the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a short resolution from the Common Council of Oneonta, N. Y., which contains about 17 lines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, to include a letter on our foreign relations which I have received from the Secretary of State, Mr. Hull.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FIRST CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution—House Concurrent Resolution 8—which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 8

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the first paragraph of House Concurrent Resolution 4 of the Seventy-sixth Congress is hereby amended to read as follows: "That in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution, begun and held at the city of New York on Wednesday, the 4th of March 1789, the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12 o'clock meridian on Saturday, March 4, 1939."

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD to include an address which I delivered this afternoon at the United States battleship Maine memorial services, held at Fort Myer, Va., under the auspices of the United Spanish War Veterans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD two statements which I made in support of the bill (H. R. 2) before the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a speech I made.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a resolution from the National Student Legislative Council.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday, February 17, 1939, immediately after the reading of the Journal and disposition of other matters on the Speaker's desk, I be privileged to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a Lincoln Day address by the Governor of South Dakota before the National Republican Club of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including in the Appendix an address by my colleague, Hon. THOMAS E. MARTIN, Representative from the State of Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that leave of absence be granted to my colleague, Hon. JOSEPH A. McARDLE, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes. I have asked the permission of the gentlemen who have special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON]?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker.
Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. That is agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WOLFENDEN of Pennsylvania (at the request of Mr. KINZER), for 1 week, on account of illness in his family;

To Mr. THOMAS F. FORD, for the balance of the week on account of illness.

DIRECT RELIEF AND WORK RELIEF

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULLEN). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] for 2 minutes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, 8 days have elapsed since the President of the United States requested an additional $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration. Only 44 days remain before approximately 2,000,000 people on the W. P. A. will be laid off.

The overwhelming majority of the American people demand action. Why is it that the Appropriations Committee is not acting on this request which is so vital to the welfare not only of the unemployed of this country but so vital to the welfare of the entire Nation? Why is it that the committee indulges in this delay? There can be no alibi or excuse for any delay. We face an emergency. The President stated in his message, "I ask that the Congress commence immediate consideration of these simple and alarming facts." Immediate consideration means now and not a month from now; today and not tomorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not see any member of the majority on the Appropriations Committee here at the moment, but I may say in fairness to them that the President said he would report to the Congress again the first week in March. This would give the Appropriations Committee plenty of time to make an additional appropriation for the 3 remaining months until July 1 if they so desire.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous special order of the House the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] for 30 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, now that the committee presided over by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DRES] has been reorganized and is ready to proceed with its work, I deem it my duty to address this House on the subject of the committee and on what I consider would be the important angles of inquiry to be pursued by it.

A few days ago, along with other Members of the House, I had occasion to speak of the work of the committee and its record up to that time, which was by no means inspiring. I then saw fit to point out some of its shortcomings, not by way of destructive criticism but by way of constructive suggestions as to how the committee might best serve the interests of the country.

After all, this is a committee of the House of Representatives, and all of us owe a duty to this House as well as to the country at large, a duty which must be discharged in an honest, straightforward, and patriotic manner, and I have no fear that a few suggestions might go a long way toward the achievement of that object.

It is unnecessary for me to tell you in detail as to my particular reasons for being so vitally concerned in the success of the committee's work. After all, the committee is my brain child and far back in 1933, when most of the Members of this House did not even know or suspect the existence of foreign propaganda, it was I, as chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, together with eight members of that committee, who undertook to make a thorough study of this situation. After holding hearings during the recess of Congress, we obtained enough evidence to focus the attention of the country upon the existing menace of foreign propaganda. It was only after earnest pleading with the Members of the House that I finally succeeded, on March 20, 1934, in obtaining the appointment of a committee to investigate subversive propaganda in the United States. This committee was created by House Resolution No. 198, reading as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee to be composed of seven Members for the purpose of conducting an investigation of (1) the extent, character, and objects of Nazi propaganda activities in the United States, (2) the diffusion within the United States of subversive propaganda that is instigated from foreign countries and attacks the principle of the form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution, and (3) all other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation.

That said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States—whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned—to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpoena or otherwise, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpoena shall be issued under the signature of the chairman and shall be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives was authorized to appoint this special committee, and the then Speaker, the Honorable Henry T. Rainey, who is now deceased, promptly communicated with me urging me to accept the chairmanship of that committee. I declined this honor, feeling that my work would best be done if another Member of the House were to be selected as the chairman of that committee, and the Speaker thereupon appointed the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] as such chairman. I was made a member of the committee and elected the vice chairman thereof. It was then that this committee conducted a very intensive and thoroughgoing investigation with a very small appropriation, $30,000. Very carefully, prudently, and without undue publicity, the committee then pursued its task of obtaining for the benefit of this House and the country at large the knowledge of such facts as would enable the House of Representatives to pass remedial legislation to do away with subversive propaganda.

The situation was very serious. From the right and from the left pressure was brought on the American public to do away with our time-honored democracy and to reorganize our constitutional set-up by way of fascism or communism. The pressure from the right and the pressure from the left was beating on our democracy, and the business depression which had then been in existence for a number of years made this country a fertile ground for the reception of foreign "isms." It was at this stage of the world's affairs that our committee set itself the task to educate the people of our country to the dangers of intolerance and hatred. We tried to make the people realize that intolerance and bigotry could not help to lift us out of our depression, but on the contrary, would result in a feeling of suspicion and distrust engendered against our fellow citizens and ultimately would bring about a cleavage and division among the members of our citizenry which could bode no good to the continuance of our democratic institutions. Our investigation was conducted along constructive lines and we prepared a report which showed the dangers of both fascism and communism to the continuance of our democratic institutions. We did not subpoena ex parte investigators, but subpoenaed James Ford, Browder, and other Communist leaders. We did not slander or attack the reputation of prominent Americans without having any definite evidence as to their guilt. May I suggest that the Dies committee follow this line of procedure? It certainly does not enhance the reputation of the committee, nor does it result in having the committee held in esteem, if it attacks the officials of our home Government and criticizes the conduct of our public officials who are doing their best to help eradicate from our midst any insidious attempts at the destruction of our form of government. We surely do not want to give aid and comfort to the enemy by attacking our own public officials. If the object of the committee is to show the dangers of foreign propaganda, let us not unnecessarily involve officials of our own Government who are the living exponents of our own democratic form of government.

In addition to foreign organizations, to which I will refer again in a moment, let me at this time briefly mention some of our domestic organizations which are as obnoxious to the maintenance of our democracy as are foreign groups working toward the same aim, that is to array citizen against citizen, or one group, one religion, one class, or one race against another. Among these dangerous and malignant groups are some 120 organizations. The committee presided over by the gentleman from Texas says there are some 60. A superficial examination of these organizations shows the diversity of the elements composing the sources of the assault upon our democracy. There are, as I said before, elements of the right as well as of the left, there are equally obnoxious and equally a necessary subject for investigation by this committee.

In addition to these organizations there are other sources of subversive activities in the United States. There are subversive groups of alien origin working in our navy yards, in our National Guard, and among the contractors employed by the agencies of our Government in the manufacture of munitions, airplanes and other scientific instruments. Those are the groups which seek to sabotage naval and military plans in the event this country should be drawn into war. Those are the groups which seek to obtain information about our national resources and our military and naval equipment. Those are the groups which communicate to foreign governments the result of their espionage activities.

The committee until the present time has not in any way submitted to the attention of the public any of these facts, nor has the committee made a study of the vast possibilities of destruction which face us if the activities of spies and saboteurs are allowed to go unchecked. For they eventually may result in another Black Tom or Kingsland explosion.

In March of last year one of my investigators made a study of the situation prevailing in the National Guard of the State of New York and found that there was a large number of aliens, both of German and of Russian origin, serving in the ranks of our State militia. It was with the cooperation of the Governor of the State of New York, to whose attention this matter was brought, that within 24 hours after advising the Governor about it an order was issued discharging from service every alien then serving in our National Guard, and requiring that hereafter only citizens should be eligible for service in our State militia. This is an instance of prompt official action when the facts were brought to the attention of the proper authority of our Government. It is such prompt action which should be imitated by this committee, and undoubtedly results will be just as effective. I do not know how many States in the Union suffer from the same situation at the present time, but perhaps a little activity on the part of the committee will ascertain the facts and cause the respective Governors of other States to take action similar to that heretofore taken by the Governor of my own State.

The German steamship lines have established a thorough system of bringing into this country tons of material used for vicious antidemocratic propaganda against our President, officials of our Government, and many groups of our citizens. This propaganda emanates from a totalitarian country, and the committee has done nothing to ascertain its sources or to stop its further operation. There are also uniforms for storm troopers, youth groups, and other totalitarian organizations being shipped on these boats, but nothing has been done by the committee to ascertain the origin of this type of propaganda. There are also books which have been withdrawn from circulation in this country because of their vicious and un-American character, only to be reprinted in Berlin and other places and to be sent back to us on German boats. This has likewise been ignored by the committee and not been investigated.

I take it for granted, or at least wish to express my hope that when the committee resumes its activities it will make a thorough study of the so-called German-American Bund, and that it will ascertain its objects, purposes, manner of organization, and particularly the source of its funds. It is unthinkable that out of the meager contributions levied on German merchants in this country it should be possible to manage a totalitarian organization like the bund which not only keeps up a network of activities stretching from coast to coast, but also embraces the North American Continent from Canada to Mexico. These bunds maintain over 30 camps in various parts of the United States, camps which are nothing but the training grounds for military drills and for the organization of a private army in opposition to and contrary to our own Army and Navy. To permit a foreign group to maintain an army on our own soil is, to say the least, the height of complacency. We surely cannot permit such unchecked activity, and it will be up to the committee to make a thorough study of this phase of foreign activities.

There are also chemical laboratories to manufacture noxious gasses and bombs for the destruction of our Army and Navy. There are secret laboratories, to work out dangerous processes, conducted by men who had experience in the chemical-warfare service of other nations and who wish to utilize that experience against our citizens.

There are exchange students who ostensibly come to this country to study, but are really here to indulge in widespread propaganda against our democracy as has been more fully discussed by me in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 5, 1939. There are activities of a more insidious kind, which, taking advantage of diplomatic immunity enjoyed by consuls, center around the various consulates of foreign nations. Would an American consul in any foreign country be permitted to appear on the public platform and speak against the form of government of the country to which he has been accredited? And yet that is precisely what German consuls have been doing from time to time and are still doing. They appear on the public platform and openly, because we cherish the ideal of free speech, tell our citizens that our Government is no good.

I do not have to dwell too long on the spy activities which recently resulted in a series of convictions meted out in the city of New York, as well as in our Canal Zone, after an impartial judicial trial. But did the trial stop these activities? On the contrary, in the Canal Zone the German consul was brazen enough to denounce the processes of our American justice and to criticize our officials for doing their duty.

There has been a noticeable change in methods of propaganda in recent years. While in former years it was the practice of propagandists to be vociferous, and the tactics they used to convert the public was to be shouting from the housetops, today their methods are more insidious. The idea is to drop a hint here and there, to whisper a remark here and there, and to cause dissatisfaction and unhappiness wherever possible. A propagandist can only fish in muddy waters, and agitators who become experts in their field make it hard for us to find a proper method to combat their activities. For the guidance of the committee may I add that most of this propaganda originates in countries already committed to a Fascist ideology, but an important part comes from countries that have democratic governments. There are Irish, Swiss, Swedish, French, and other foreign groups that are carrying on through Nazi inspiration and assistance anti-democratic and anti-Semitic propaganda. Ukrainian organizations of the pro-Nazi variety are active here, as well as Japanese societies which are spreading pro-Nazi propaganda. Among other organizations to be mentioned here are the Arab Racial League, the Palestine-Arab Delegation, the Gold Shirts of Mexico, which organization carries on anti-Semitic propaganda not only in Mexico but also among the Mexicans in the United States, and several White Russian organizations lined up with the Nazis, namely, the Russian National Union, White Guard Russian troops, Russian National League of America, and the Ancient and Noble Order of the Blue Lamoo. There are also several Canadian groups active in spreading pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic propaganda not only in Canada but in the United States as well. Among them are the Montreal Women's Anti-Communist League, the Canadian Nationalist Party, the Thunderbolt, Canadian Union of Fascists, and similar organizations.

Among the English organizations operating in the United States from England are: British Union of Fascists and National Socialists, Boswell Publishing Co., Britons Publishing Co., Christian Aryan Protection League, Imperial Fascist League, Militant Christian Patriots, and the Universal Racial Alliance.

Fascist Italy, too, is carrying on a vigorous propaganda in the United States today and the Italian consuls and the Italian press in this country have been forced to join in this campaign. For example, there are such organizations as the American Italian Union, Italian Library of Information, the Lictor Federation, successor to the Fascist League of America. The Italian Historical Society, the Dante Alighieri Society, and the Italian Black Shirts.

Of course Nazi Germany, too, has set up numerous organizations, the purpose of which is to propagandize the United States. In addition to the travel and steamship agencies, the German consuls, the press correspondents, and the news agencies of Nazi Germany active in spreading pro-Nazi and antidemocratic and antisemitic propaganda, there are also the following organizations operating in the United States from Nazi Germany: Institute of Germans Living Abroad, the foreign organizations of the labor front, the foreign political office under Dr. Alfred Rosenberg, the People's League for Germanism Abroad, Nordic Society, German Colonial Society, Aryan Christian Alliance, Institute for the Study of the Jewish Question, German Students' Foreign District, Hitler Youth, Anti-Jewish World League, Anti-Comintern League, Fichte Bund, World Service, Julius Streicher's world clearing house for Jew-baiting, Nuremberg, Germany, Judenkenner.

Nazi Germany also has set up in the United States numerous organizations composed of German citizens and American citizens of German extraction, to carry on the Nazi propaganda campaign. Naturally these overlap in their activities. Among them all there is the closest cooperation and Fritz Kuhn, head of the German-American Bund, successor to the Friends of the New Germany, seems to direct the activities of all of them. Among these organizations now active or recently active are: Order of Service (American storm troopers), League of German Girls, German-American Business League, the Steel Helmets, German Veterans' League, German Legion, German Edda Culture League, German Commonwealth for Art and Literature (with the storm troop and political divisions).

But there are also numerous native American organizations that are carrying on antidemocratic, antisemitic, and pro-Nazi propaganda in the United States. They are national, regional, and local, though most of them are local or regional in character. There are also churches, usually German churches or Fundamentalists, that are centers of such propaganda. In defending the Fatherland, German churches naturally fall into the Nazi propaganda set-up and along with the defense of the Fatherland the German churches usually exploit antisemitic propaganda and thus lend very definite aid and comfort to the Nazi propagandists in the United States.

The other churches involved in this antisemitic and pro-Nazi propaganda are usually of the Fundamentalist variety extremely orthodox and reactionary in their theological views. In general, they say that the coming of Jesus is imminent. However, before he comes, the anti-Christ must come. Their further reasoning is that anti-Christ has come in the form of Jewish communism or Soviet atheism, both of which are synonymous, and that Hitler is the great bulwark against that anti-Christ. Thus they find themselves in the Nazi propaganda camp. There are several hundred important churches in the class of antisemitic propagandists in the United States, besides several thousand smaller ones that preach antisemitism intermittently.

There are also many individuals who act as centers of propaganda. These individuals act through and for other organizations, distribute literature of numerous groups, and send in the names of prospective victims of Nazi propaganda to both foreign and native propaganda groups. These individuals, of whom there are a great many, are very important agents of subversive propaganda. There is scarcely a community of any size without at least one of these individual propagandists.

Also, there are a good many important so-called patriotic groups and reactionary economic groups that might be classed as marginal. They believe themselves to be genuinely patriotic, but when a serious crisis arises they often find themselves in the pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic camp. Also, many of these reactionary, economic, and so-called patriotic groups exploit the propaganda furnished by regular anti-Semitic organizations. Types of individuals and organizations represented in these groups have been classified as antiathen, antidemocratic, antilabor, anti-Negro, anti New Deal, anti-pacifist, anti-Catholic, and vigilante, but all of them pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic.

With few exceptions all of these organizations have come into existence since Hitler came to power, and whether innocently or not they are all therefore agents of Hitler in the United States.

As a friend of the committee I must earnestly warn them that their task will not be an easy one. It will require a high degree of statesmanship and real ability to unearth some of the propaganda which does not squarely meet the eye. I am sure that the committee will be able to find complete cooperation whenever it will direct its energies to the eradication of dangerous propaganda. The press has been very helpful, and the Members of this body will give their assistance whenever called upon. We must not, however, let our vigilance relax. We must be forever mindful of our duty to this House as well as the people of the United States and perform our tasks with ability, dispatch, and dignity. The committee has an adequate appropriation, and no reason exists why it could not provide itself with an efficient and well-trained staff to assist it in its work. Its investigators should be chosen for their ability to obtain real information and to present all of the necessary facts to the committee for its action. The committee should guard against the type of investigators who are men of little knowledge and less ability, men who repeat hearsay without taking the trouble to check facts, for very often it is this type of investigator that may be held responsible for the failure of a committee to secure important information.

I am presenting the matter now to the Congress of the United States for the benefit and guidance of the Dies committee, and I assure the committee that if they will follow the suggestions made in this carefully prepared document, they will have sufficient evidence to expose the agitators who seek to undermine the Government.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. The gentleman indicated that the list of names covered 120 different organizations which should be investigated.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There are 120 such organizations in the United States. They call themselves 200 percenters; yet they practice and preach intolerance and hatred amongst the citizens of the United States.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. What good purpose is served by not putting those additional 120 names into the Record so that the world may know, rather than make the list a confidential communication?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. For the simple reason that I want the committee to have the opportunity of using this list for the purpose of subpoena and obtaining some of their records. The moment I put the names of those 120 organizations into the Record the most important evidence would disappear, because those groups are clever enough to destroy some of their incriminating records. I have incorporated in my statement now, however, names of some subversive organizations and their activities in the United States, which must be exposed if we desire to preserve our democracy.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I appreciate the work the gentleman has been doing throughout the years, and I want to take this opportunity of congratulating him upon this splendid work and for his cooperation, because I know that his intimate knowledge of the subject will make the success of the Dies committee more assured.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] now has everything he has asked for, an extension of his committee, sufficient funds for an efficient staff, and the cooperation of the House of Representatives. There is no earthly reason why he should not succeed in his endeavor and we all hope that he will accomplish the great and important task of ridding our country of all groups organized for the purpose of undermining our liberal form of government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON] yields back his time. He does not desire to address the House at this time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona and Mr. MARCANTONIO asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the Record.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record by printing in the Record a speech delivered in a previous session of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH]?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, February 16, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Public hearings will continue Thursday, February 16, 1939, at 10 a. m., on social-security legislation, in the Ways and Means Committee room in the New House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m. Thursday, February 16, 1939. Business to be considered: Continuation of hearing on H. R. 2531—transportation bill. Mr. John N. Beall, a representative of the American Trucking Association, will be the witness.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives on Thursday, February 16, 1939, at 10:30 a. m., for the purpose of continuing the consideration of H. R. 2880, "To authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes," carrying out partially the recommendations of the Hepburn report.

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on the Public Lands on Thursday, February 16, 1939, at 10:30 a. m., in room 328, House Office Building, to consider H. R. 2184, H. R. 2317, H. R. 2957, H. R. 2958, H. R. 2959, H. R. 2960.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors will meet Thursday, February 16, 1939, at 10:30 a. m., to hold hearings on the report on Calumet-Sag Channel, Ill., and Indiana Harbor and Canal, Ind.

COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in room 213, House Office Building, Thursday, February 16, 1939, at 10 a. m., for the public consideration of H. R. 3230.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m. Tuesday, February 21, 1939, on the bill (H. R. 3576) to make effective the provisions of the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936.

It is contemplated that the hearing on Tuesday, February 21, 1939, on H. R. 3576 will deal particularly with legislation necessary to make effective the provisions of the treaty and problems arising in connection with the provisions of the treaty.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m., on the bills and dates listed below:

Tuesday, March 14, 1939:

H. R. 180, H. R. 202, construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201, additional facilities for Panama Canal; H. R. 2667, construction of a Mexican Canal.

In listing the bills to be heard on March 14, 1939, House Joint Resolution 112 (TINKHAM), to create a commission to study and report on the feasibility of constructing the Mexican Canal, was inadvertently omitted from the notice.

This is to advise all interested parties that House Joint Resolution 112 will be considered at that time with the following bills: H. R. 180 (IZAC), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 202 (BLAND), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201 (BLAND), need for additional lock facilities at Panama; H. R. 2667 (TINKHAM), relative to the construction of a Mexican Canal.

Tuesday, March 21, 1939:

H. R. 137, H. R. 980, H. R. 1674, relating to annuities for Panama Canal construction force.

Thursday, March 23, 1939:

H. R. 139, H. R. 141, H. R. 142, H. R. 1819, miscellaneous Panama Canal bills.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

421. A letter from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, for the Treasury Department to provide for payment to Federal land banks on account of the reduction in interest rate on mortgages under the provisions of the act of July 16, 1938, in the amount of $10,250,000 (H. Doc. No. 154); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

422. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to authorize payment of certain unpaid Creek equalization claims; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

423. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to amend the act of June 30, 1936, providing for the administration and maintenance of the Blue Ridge Highway; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 950. A bill to exempt from the provisions of Draft Convention No. 53 of the International Labor Conference Treaty of 1936 all American vessels under 200 tons; with amendment (Rept. No. 41). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANSFIELD: Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Senate Joint Resolution 57. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to cause a completion of surveys, test borings, and foundation investigations to be made to determine the advisability and cost of putting in a small experimental plant for development of tidal power in the waters in and about Passamaquoddy Bay, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such examinations; with amendment (Rept. No. 42). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. EBERHARTER:

H. R. 4166. A bill prohibiting the importation of the United States flag or emblem from foreign countries, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KING:

H. R. 4167. A bill to extend further time for naturalization of alien veterans of ineligible race who served in the armed forces of the United States during the World War; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

H. R. 4168. A bill to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of certain rivers and their tributaries on the island of Kauai, T. H., for flood control, for run-off and water-flow retardation, and for soil-erosion prevention; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. KUNKEL:

H. R. 4169. A bill to provide for the sale of certain arms to war veterans' organizations; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MUNDT:

H. R. 4170. A bill to prevent the pollution of the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. RAMSPECK:

H. R. 4171 (by request). A bill to authorize the President to bestow a meritorious-service medal upon civil officers and employees of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. RANDOLPH:

H. R. 4172. A bill to provide for deportation of certain aliens who do not make declaration of intention to become citizens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. KNUTSON:

H. R. 4173. A bill to establish the Department of Military Defense, to limit the activities of the military establishments to defense purpose only, to make such establishments instruments of national peace, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. LAMBERTSON:

H. R. 4174. A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a revocable license to the Union Pacific Railroad Co. to maintain certain railroad trackage on the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. IGLESIAS:

H. R. 4175. A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to build an American Army monument in Mayaguez, P. R.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 4176. A bill for a survey and examination of Punta Santiago Harbor, Fajardo, P. R.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. RANKIN:

H. R. 4177. A bill to provide for the conveyance to Tombigbee Post, No. 69, of the American Legion, Columbus, Miss., of the old post-office building and the site thereof in such city; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 4178. A bill to provide for loans to farmers on first mortgage at a 3-percent interest rate, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

H. R. 4179. A bill to authorize the issuance of a special series of postage stamps commemorative of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando de Soto; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma:

H. R. 4180 (by departmental request). A bill to repeal section 9 of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L. 450), as amended; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri:

H. R. 4181. A bill to amend section 14 of the act approved June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1069), entitled the "Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938"; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. HARRINGTON:

H. R. 4182. A bill to allow credits against the tax imposed by section 901 of the Social Security Act for the calendar year 1937 for certain contributions to State unemployment funds; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HULL:

H. R. 4183. A bill to amend an act approved December 17, 1928, entitled d"An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment thereon in claims which the Winnebago Tribe of Indians in Wisconsin may have against the United States, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Maine:

H. R. 4184. A bill to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the town of Bristol, Maine, of a portion of the Pemaquid Point Lighthouse Reservation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. D'ALESSANDRO:

H. R. 4185. A bill to repatriate native-born women residents of the United States who have heretofore lost their citizenship by marriage to an alien; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. FAY:

H. R. 4186. A bill to adjust benefits under war-risk insurance policies in cases of specific disabilities; to the Committee on World War Veterans Legislation.

By Mr. McCORMACK:

H. R. 4187. A bill to designate United States Highway No. 6 as the "Grand Army of the Republic Highway"; to the Committee on Roads.

H. R. 4188. A bill to authorize the erection of a United States Veterans' Administration hospital in or near the city of Boston, Mass.; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H. R. 4189. A bill to provide national flags for the burials of honorably discharged former service men and women; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H. R. 4190. A bill to permit classification of certain unclassified employees of the United States by noncompetitive examinations; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. WHELCHER:

H. R. 4191. A bill to provide annuities for widows of retired civil-service employees of the United States and District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. McCORMACK:

H. R. 4192. A bill to impose a tax upon imported bread; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CARTWRIGHT:

H. J. Res. 169. Joint resolution proposing a plan for the adjustment of the claim of the State of Oklahoma against the United States arising from the tax exemption of Indian lands and the products thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. PETERSON of Florida:

H. J. Res. 170. Joint resolution to amend Public Resolution No. 112, Seventy-fifth Congress; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. COCHRAN:

H. Res. 95. Resolution to authorize payment of expenses of Select Committee on Government Organization authorized by House Resolution 60; to the Committee on Accounts.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their House Concurrent Resolution No. 14, concerning the multiple-use development of the White River Basin in Arkansas and Missouri; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BALL:

H. R. 4193. A bill for the relief of Desiderio Mazzella; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. BOEHNE:

H. R. 4194. A bill granting a pension to Lola Frances Sumner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BREWSTER:

H. R. 4195. A bill granting an increase of pension to Emma C. Orr; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROWN of Ohio:

H. R. 4196. A bill granting a pension to Belle Robinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CASE of South Dakota:

H. R. 4197. A bill granting a pension to Jennie Zimmerman; to the Committee on Pensions.

H. R. 4198. A bill for the relief of M. L. Parish; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CLUETT:

H. R. 4199. A bill granting an increase of pension to Pearl F. Pratt; to the Committee on Pensions.

H. R. 4200. A bill granting an increase of pension to Anna Belle La Fay; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRIES:

H. R. 4201. A bill granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Pearson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

H. R. 4202. A bill for the relief of Fred T. Gordon and Bert N. Richardson; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4203. A bill for the relief of William H. Harris; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAVENNER:

H. R. 4204. A bill granting an increase of pension to Minnie Wetmore Cole; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

H. R. 4205. A bill for the relief of Aloha Motors, Ltd.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McLEOD:

H. R. 4206. A bill granting a pension to Walter B. Stevens; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARCANTONIO:

H. R. 4207. A bill for the relief of Henrietta Vendemmia; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. MASSINGALE:

H. R. 4208. A bill granting a pension to Carolyn M. Clawges; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

H. R. 4209. A bill for the relief of the heirs of the late George L. Lawrence; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4210. A bill for the relief of Oliver Ellison; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PETERSON of Georgia:

H. R. 4211. A bill for the relief of Homer H. Adams; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REECE of Tennessee:

H. R. 4212. A bill granting a pension to Chanley C. Freeman; to the Committee on Pensions.

H. R. 4213. A bill for the relief of William Taft (deceased); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 4214. A bill granting a pension to William Allen Estep; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. ROUTZOHN:

H. R. 4215. A bill for the relief of George E. Kinner; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SUTPHIN:

H. R. 4216. A bill for the relief of Berthel Christopher; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TIBBOTT:

H. R. 4217. A bill for the relief of Joseph Kochinich; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1115. By Mr. BREWSTER: Petition signed by 320 citizens of Orono, Maine, protesting against the discharge of citizens from Works Progress Administration projects; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1116. By Mr. CARTER: Petition of the City Council of the City of Alameda, Calif., protesting against the enactment of Senate Joint Resolution No. 24 relative to the ownership of tidelands in the State of California; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

1117. Also, petition of the City Council of Richmond, Calif., urging a continuation of an appropriation for Works Progress Administration and Public Works Administration work to provide funds to meet the needs of the unemployed and to do the necessary work of public improvement; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1118. Also, Resolution No. 7 of the California State Legislature, memorializing the Congress to enact legislation to secure all aged citizens against want or poverty by means of a system of Federal old-age pensions; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1119. Also, petition of the City Council of the City of El Cerrito, Calif., urging the enactment of legislation to provide funds to meet needs of the unemployed and to carry on the work of necessary public improvements when present funds are exhausted; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1120. By Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Resolution passed by South Dakota Woman's Temperance Union, of Rapid City, S. Dak., petitioning Congress to pass legislation to prevent advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1121. Also, House concurrent resolution passed by the South Dakota State Legislature, memorializing the Congress to appropriate funds under Farm Forestry Acts; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1122. Also, concurrent resolution passed by the Legislature of South Dakota, memorializing the Congress to enact such legislation that will enable our farmers and stockmen to be self-sustaining and able to repossess their homes and property; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1123. Also, Concurrent Resolution No. 5 of the South Dakota Senate, memorializing Congress of the United States to make the appropriation authorized in the Hayden-Cartwright act for construction and maintenance of highways within Indian reservations; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1124. By Mr. FULMER: Resolution submitted by T. H. Cribb, manager, South Carolina Peach Growers' Association, Spartanburg, S. C., and the directors of the South Carolina Peach Growers' Association assembled in a meeting in Spartanburg, S. C., on Saturday, February 11, 1939, at 11 o'clock a. m., requesting that they go on record as opposed to all punitive and discriminatory legislation, either State or National, that will tend to reduce our incomes and add to the consumer's food costs by taking away any system of food distribution; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1125. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, concerning congressional regulation of freight rates; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1126. Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, concerning repeal of Silver Purchase Act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1127. By Mr. KERR: Petition of the North Carolina State Senate; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1128. By Mr. SCHAEFER of Illinois: Petition of the Fairmount Smelters Workers, Local No. 82, International Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelters Workers, Joseph Verdu, secretary, East St. Louis, Ill., opposing amendments to the National Labor Relations Act; to the Committee on Labor.

1129. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Mitchell Carbide & Light Co., Kimball, S. Dak., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the Townsend plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1130. Also, petition of certain citizens of Puerto Rico, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to embargo; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and eternal God, with whom is no mutability or changing shade, no night or winter, no ebbing tide: We bow before Thee at this morning hour, knowing that we, the children of time and sense, are stained by childish faults and petty sins, while Thy holiness and perfection transcend all human thought.

As Thou hast made us restless among the things we see, longing for the higher things, we beseech Thee to forgive whatever is amiss in these poor lives of ours; and do Thou teach us never to neglect the task of today because we cannot see its eternal effect, nor the little duties which are training us for an ever greater stewardship.

May we always remember that this life of ours has been divinely lived and that this robe of flesh and strange infirmity has been Thy garment to help us to live as sons of God and to walk worthy of our vocation in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, February 13, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Andrews	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Austin	George	Logan	Shipstead
Bailey	Gerry	Lucas	Smathers
Bankhead	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Barbour	Gillette	McKellar	Stewart
Barkley	Glass	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bilbo	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Guffey	Mead	Tobey
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Townsend
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Truman
Burke	Harrison	Murray	Tydings
Byrd	Hatch	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Herring	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hill	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Holman	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Pittman	White
Connally	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wiley
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reed
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Donahay	King	Russell

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] is absent on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE LATE CARY T. GRAYSON

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, yesterday was the first anniversary of the death of the late Cary T. Grayson, one of the finest men who ever occupied a position in the public service and well known to virtually every Member of the Senate. The Legislature of Virginia adopted resolutions in regard to his death. The American Red Cross and the League of Red Cross Societies did likewise. Many newspapers noticed editorially his death. I ask that the resolutions and editorials may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

House Joint Resolution 24

On Cary T. Grayson

Resolved by the house of delegates (the senate concurring), That the general assembly hears with profound sorrow of the passing of Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, one of Virginia's most distinguished sons, who departed this life early today. As a friend, physician, and counselor of Presidents, a humanitarian, a devoted father and son, and true sportsman, born in Culpeper County, Va., October 11, 1878, the son of a country doctor, Virginia and the entire United States has suffered a great loss.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the members of the family.

Agreed to by the house of delegates February 15, 1938.

E. GRIFFITH DODSON,
Clerk of the House of Delegates.

Agreed to by the senate February 15, 1938.

O. V. HANGER,
Clerk of Senate.

The above is a true copy.

E. GRIFFITH DODSON,
Clerk of the House of Delegates.

CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN RED CROSS IN RESOLUTION
LAMENTING LOSS OF ADMIRAL GRAYSON

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Central Committee on February 17, 1938:

"Rear Admiral Cary Travers Grayson, United States Navy, retired, was appointed chairman of the central committee of the American Red Cross March 1, 1935, and occupied this important position until his death, February 15, 1938.

"Admiral Grayson led an active life in many varied fields of usefulness. Through the years his work was characterized by his constant, unselfish, sympathetic, and loyal devotion to the service of others. It was quite fitting that such a man with such experience should have been summoned to duty as chairman of the American Red Cross.

"The 3 years of his service have been replete with problems both national and beyond our borders, requiring vision, courage, tact, tireless effort, human sympathy, and understanding. All of these he gave, and gave wisely and tirelessly, quite indifferent to the telling demands upon his own strength. Within the headquarters he showed limitless capacity in problems of organization, in questions of personnel, its welfare, and its efficiency, as well as in the broader aspects of the relationship between the headquarters and the chapters. He sought continuously by his visits throughout the country, both in times of disaster and in times of quiet, to bring the headquarters and the field closer together in order that the Red Cross might always be prepared, through unity of effort and purpose, to render its best service in time of need or distress. And he sought always to find new and better fields of usefulness for the Red Cross, not content with the limitations of the past.

"He was elected chairman of the board of governors of the League of Red Cross Societies on April 29, 1935. He won the admiration and cooperation of the members of the league, representing many nations.

"His cordial and frank relationship with the members of the central committee, his readiness to listen to their counsel, his fair judgment of their advice, made him a wise leader and an inspiration to his fellow-workers throughout the Red Cross. Best of all, he was truly beloved by those with whom and for whom he labored. His outstanding qualities of unselfish friendliness endeared him to men and women everywhere, in all walks of life.

Resolved, That in the death of its chairman, Cary Travers Grayson, the members of the central committee of the American Red Cross and the entire organization have suffered a loss that words are too poor to express, and that to his family the Red Cross of our country extends its deepest understanding sympathy for the great loss and sorrow that have come upon them, and pledges as a token of their respect and affection for him to carry on his service as he would wish it carried on."

Upon the news of Admiral Grayson's death, President Roosevelt, who is president of the American Red Cross, issued immediately the following statement:

LXXXIV—92

THE WHITE HOUSE.

As physician, as humanitarian, and as Red Cross executive, Admiral Grayson touched life at many angles and did outstanding work in every field of his endeavor. His earlier activities were logical preparation for his work in these later years as chairman of the American Red Cross. Whether directing relief at home or co-operating in the alleviation of human misery in far lands, his tact, industry, and genius for getting things done made his work outstanding.

But it is as a friend that so many of us will always think of Cary Grayson—a friend in the truest and finest sense of that fine word. A staunch friend, an old and close friend, has been taken from us.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Admiral Grayson was chairman of the League of Red Cross Societies, of which 64 nations are members. The following resolution was passed by the board of governors of the League of Red Cross Societies, meeting in Paris, France:

RESOLUTION

"The board of governors pays heartfelt tribute to the memory of Admiral Grayson, in whom the Red Cross world has lost a great friend whose qualities of leadership and generous spirit were admired by all who had the privilege of knowing him; expresses its deepest sympathy with the American Red Cross and with Admiral Grayson's family in their sad loss."

[Editorial from the Army and Navy Journal of February 19, 1938]

The country, and particularly the Navy, will cherish the memory of Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, United States Navy, retired, because of the great and patriotic influence which he wielded upon matters important to their welfare. When the history of his time is revealed in fullness it will be established that this modest, unassuming Virginian played the role not only of physician but of statesman; that he never offered but, when called upon made, suggestions that, adopted, beneficially promoted the destiny of the Nation. His appointment to the grade of rear admiral was not a mere expression of favoritism. It was the deliberate decision of President Wilson, based upon personal recognition of his medical ability and upon knowledge of the help in state affairs, which he had received from him. President Roosevelt, who first brought the young medical officer to the White House, and President Taft entertained for him the same affection and high regard as did the World War President. They knew of his concern for the Navy, that he was always solicitous for its condition and enlargement, and his advice regarding it, and occasionally of the Army as well, generally was accepted because it was sound and stood the test of experience. He accompanied President Wilson to Europe and served as the guardian of his health and as his confidant, and his association with the men in power in the Old World eased the tension in many developments and thereby enabled the President to bring about an adjudication. His selection as president of the Red Cross was a graceful recognition by President Roosevelt of the service he had rendered the country, and in that office he demonstrated by his handling of disasters his high executive leadership. His loss naturally is irretrievable to his devoted wife and children, and in sympathizing with them the country realizes there has gone to his fathers a true patriot, an outstanding physician, a great humanitarian, and a friend to everyone no matter what his position or his condition, in the truest meaning of that word.

[From a letter addressed to Mrs. Grayson]

FEBRUARY 15, 1938.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have learned with deep regret of the death of Washington's beloved and distinguished citizen, Admiral Cary T. Grayson.

The world can ill afford to lose such a man, and his legion of friends mourn his loss to the community.

On behalf of all the citizens of Washington and in their own name, the Commissioners wish to express to you their deepest sympathy. Your great consolation is in his good deeds.

MELVIN C. HAZEN.
GEO. E. ALLEN.
DAN I. SULTAN.

[From the Richmond (Va.) News Leader of February 27, 1924]

CARY GRAYSON, FRIEND

Almost too intimate for publication, the picture in yesterday's New York Times of Admiral Grayson's weeping as he made official announcement of Mr. Wilson's death was an accurate exhibit of the relationship that existed between him and the great man whose life he prolonged and whose sufferings he assuaged.

Dr. Grayson was infinitely more than physician to Mr. Wilson; he was his close and loyal friend—the type of friend that every man craves and not one in a thousand possesses; a friend that did not have to be cautioned what to say or not to say; a friend about whose prudence, whose absolute lack of self-interest, and whose complete fidelity there could be no shadow of misgiving; a friend who wholly understood. Whenever Dr. Grayson spoke of Mr. Wilson, his voice softened as his eyes lit up with devotion. There was no pose in his friendship, no sentimentality in his behavior toward

Mr. Wilson, no pride in the confidences he held. Closer to Mr. Wilson for years than any other man, and sharing secrets that were known to less than half a dozen people in the world, Cary Grayson was and is as natural, as unaffected, and as considerate as a Virginia gentleman should be. The future doubtless holds much for him. His memoirs of Mr. Wilson will be the most authoritative that ever can be published. With his great capacity for friendship and his amazing charm he will advance far in the naval service or out of it. But he is a man to whom no reward can be more precious than the knowledge that Virginia is proud of him and lists him among those of her sons most obedient to her spirit. He deserves well of the Commonwealth.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF A JOINT RESOLUTION

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Hess, one of his secretaries, who also announced that on February 10, 1939, the President approved and signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) providing additional funds for the expenses of the special joint congressional committee investigating the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 53, Seventy-fourth Congress, the Speaker had appointed Mr. McGRANERY and Mr. DARROW members, on the part of the House, of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission.

The message further announced that pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 4 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, the Speaker had appointed Mr. COX, Mr. SCHULTE, and Mr. DIRKSEN members, on the part of the House, of the Joint Committee on Government Organization, to fill existing vacancies.

The message also announced that pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 64 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, the Speaker had appointed Mr. CROWE and Mr. HARTER of Ohio members, on the part of the House, of the General Anthony Wayne Memorial Commission, and that the Speaker had also appointed Mr. CLEVINGER a member, on the part of the House, of said Commission, vice Mr. WOLCOTT, resigned.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 8), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the first paragraph of House Concurrent Resolution 4 of the Seventy-sixth Congress is hereby amended to read as follows: "That in commemoration of the one hundred fiftieth anniversary of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution, begun and held at the city of New York on Wednesday, the 4th of March 1789, the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12 o'clock meridian, on Saturday, March 4, 1939."

STATEMENT OF AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR ON ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, at the conclusion of its recent meeting at Miami, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor issued an important and deeply significant statement of its belief in private enterprise and private initiative, its conviction that only in these directions may be found an answer to the curse of unemployment, and its demand for the removal of the causes of economic fear. The statement is a sturdy expression of belief, and a sturdy challenge to every governmental influence and action to the contrary, which, in my humble judgment, presents the precise formula which the Government and the country need to pursue. It is a refreshing discussion of realities. It is the key to recovery. We would do well to abandon counter philosophies and thus to give American recovery a chance. I ask that the statement of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MIAMI, February 14.—Government, industry, and labor must cooperate to remove "fear" or "a lack of confidence and distrust in governmental, social, and economic procedure," the executive council of the American Federation of Labor stated today.

Summarizing its view of the business and economic situation, the council, on the last day of its session, expressed the conviction that governmental spending of whatever nature was only a temporary measure and was not the permanent solution for the problem of unemployment.

The statement called for a "sound economic policy" which would supply the masses with purchasing power and also stimulate private industry to increase production and thereby create additional employment. It emphasized that the "rules and laws under which industry should operate should be more definite, clear, and understandable."

William Green, president of the federation, said that the executive council believed that the Government should make "the rules of the game" clear for business and that when industry launched its enterprises new rules should not be issued that called for readjustment of industrial plans.

THE UNEMPLOYMENT QUESTION

The continued existence of "an army of unemployed numbering more than 10,000,000 workers is appalling," the executive council stated. In the last 10 years the Nation had "experimented with various relief measures and many organizations affiliated with the A. F. of L. have expended millions of dollars from their treasuries in supplying relief to their unemployed members."

Responsibility for absorbing the unemployed in industry "should be placed squarely upon the owners and management of private industry and the Government." The council was ready to assist "in the promotion of a plan which will provide for the employment, in private industry, of the millions who are now idle."

After saying that the conclusion was "inevitable that private industry" should be stimulated, the statement continued:

"What can be done and what should be done, therefore, are the problems which, at the moment, call for consideration and a proper solution. We do not believe that the Nation has reached the maximum in production or consumption of manufactured goods. For that reason we cannot accept the reasoning of those who maintain that we must prepare to maintain constantly an army of unemployed as the wards of the Government."

"We must turn to private industry for the solution. It should and must serve the Nation. Our national interests require that private industry be accorded the widest opportunity to do so. That involves expansion and an increase in productivity. Such action must be considered as the primary step necessary to create work opportunities for the millions who are unemployed."

CALLS FOR CONFIDENCE

"Obviously, the next step must be the establishment of credit and the will and purpose on the part of the owners of industry to risk, invest, build, and construct. The basis for such procedure must be found in the creation of a favorable state of mind. Fear, a lack of confidence, and distrust in governmental, social, and economic procedure should be removed."

"A political and economic state of mind should be created which would enable all financiers and the owners and management of industry to face the future with confidence, willing to risk in the expenditure of funds for the development of industrial enterprises and in the manufacture and sale of manufactured products."

"We are firmly convinced that the realization of this objective should be the primary purpose of Government, industry, and labor. Whatever stands in the way—whatever barrier may have been created, either as a result of fear or as a result of affirmative action on the part of those who administer the affairs of Government—ought to be broken down so that our industrial processes may function in a proper way and unemployment may thus be overcome."

"Some strong, powerful, and influential representatives of private industry maintain that in order that private enterprise may go forward it is necessary that the rules and laws under which industry should operate should be more definite, clear, and understandable. This, it is asserted, would stabilize industrial conditions and would serve to release financial and industrial forces necessary to the enlargement and expansion of private industry."

"The executive council is firmly of the opinion that this issue should be met squarely. All should understand that no new rules or stipulations will be promulgated by some administrative bureau other than the rules and regulations definitely set forth in regulatory statutes enacted by the Congress of the United States. Such action will serve to help business, labor, and the people generally. Under such a plan industrial management would be accorded the widest opportunity to render service in the solution of our unemployment problem."

UPHOLDS PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

"The executive council reaffirms the position of the American Federation of Labor regarding private enterprise and private initiative. We are firmly committed to such an economic philosophy. We believe that private initiative, private investment, and private endeavor in private industry should be encouraged and supported. We assert that those who invest in private industry should earn a fair return upon such investment and that labor should be paid a price which would accord to all workers and their families an opportunity to live in decency and comfort."

"We urge the development of the highest and most perfect form of cooperation between management and labor. We are convinced that the best interests of all the people of the entire Nation can be served through the acceptance by those who administer the affairs of our Government and by the lawmaking bodies of the Nation of the well-considered plans and recommendations which both management and labor can, as a result of long and varied experience, submit for information and consideration."

AMERICAN AID TO FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram addressed to me under date of February 8, 1939, by Mr. Frank Gannett, chairman, National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 8, 1939.

Senator GERALD NYE,

Senate Office Building:

We learn today that Mr. Roosevelt has decided to help Britain and France to arm. He told the Senate Military Affairs Committee yesterday that our Government was prepared to back Europe's democracies against dictatorships in every way short of war. This may or may not be a proper course to pursue. But whatever course is taken must be the decision of a free people. In this case neither we nor our elected representatives have had an opportunity to make up our minds. Mr. Roosevelt is doing it for us on the basis of facts which he has reported to have stated might alarm us.

We wish that Mr. Roosevelt would not put himself into a position of laying himself open to criticism and misunderstanding of his acts. For this might lead to the erroneous impression in some foreign quarters that we are a divided people.

Certainly the cause of democracy is weakened and the hand of dictatorship is upheld if we are to be committed in the dark by the decision of one man.

Possibly when the facts are known, it will be found that what Britain and France want, namely, to buy airplanes in this country, is a perfectly routine business transaction and one that the great majority of Americans would heartily approve, but we must not permit inept leadership to make a secret of what should be an open and aboveboard sale and purchase, nor needlessly to create war atmosphere nor to make commitments, without our knowledge, that might lead us to war. In his message to Congress Mr. Roosevelt uttered words that expressed the ideals of free peoples everywhere. A free people is not afraid to face facts. Consequently, Congress and the American people are entitled to share with their President the facts, and their knowledge of them should strengthen Mr. Roosevelt's hand in any sound policy.

No leader in a democratic country has a right or a mandate to lead his people to the brink of war upon facts that are hidden from them.

This does not mean that our country should be committed to or against any course. But the lives of our young people which would be sacrificed by war must be guarded by our elected representatives and not entrusted to the judgment of any one person or small interested group.

FRANK GANNETT,
Chairman, National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government.

DEATH OF POPE PIUS XI—LETTER FROM THE APOSTOLIC DELEGATE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letter from the apostolic delegate, Washington, D. C., which was ordered to lie on the table:

APOSTOLIC DELEGATION,
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: The resolution for adjournment adopted Monday, February 13, in the Senate, as an expression of sorrow at the death of Pope Pius XI and in tribute to him as a man of peace, has deeply moved me, and I wish to thank you, Mr. Vice President, and all the Members of the Senate for the sentiments expressed in memory of the deceased Pontiff.

It has been my duty to inform His Eminence Cardinal Pacelli and the Sacred College of Cardinals, now in Rome, of the significant and unprecedented gesture by which the legislative bodies of these United States have expressed their sympathies.

With sentiments of profound respect and appreciation, I have the honor to remain, sir,

Your most obedient servant,

A. G. CICOGNANI,
Archbishop of Laodicea, Apostolic Delegate.

WITHDRAWALS AND RESTORATIONS OF PUBLIC LANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of withdrawals and restorations of public lands for the year ended December 31, 1938, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PAYMENT OF CERTAIN CREEK EQUALIZATION CLAIMS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for the payment of certain Creek equalization claims, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LAW OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, VIRGIN ISLANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copy of a law enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

ACQUISITION OF COLLECTIONS BY GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Director of the Geological Survey, under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, to acquire certain collections for the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE LANDS AND BUILDINGS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to extend the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to grant privileges, leases, and permits to all lands and buildings under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

ADMINISTRATION AND MAINTENANCE OF BLUE RIDGE PARKWAY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act of June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2041), providing for the administration and maintenance of the Blue Ridge Parkway, in the States of Virginia and North Carolina, by the Secretary of the Interior, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

LOAD LINES FOR AMERICAN VESSELS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act establishing load lines for American vessels, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, favoring the enactment of legislation for the complete multiple-use development of the White River and its tributaries, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce. (See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mrs. CARAWAY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Townsend Club, No. 1, of Baker, Oreg., favoring the adoption of the so-called Townsend plan for old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate, resolutions adopted by Local Union No. 1513, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Maxim Gorki Branch, No. 4275, International Workers Order, Local Union No. 250, United Automobile Workers of America, and L. I. U. No. 83, United Dairy Workers, all of Detroit, Mich., favoring the allotment of adequate funds to the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor, investigating violations of civil liberties, etc., which were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from Frysinger Evans, Esq., of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against confirmation of a recent nominee to the Circuit Court of Appeals, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions signed by 155 members of the Kansas Farmers' Liberty League and sundry farmers of Marshall County, Kans., praying for repeal of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Downs, Kans., praying that the United States adopt a policy of non-participation in foreign aggression and discontinue the shipment of war supplies to Japan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Local No. 206, Workers' Alliance, of Fort Scott, Kans., favoring an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for the W. P. A. for the balance of the current fiscal year, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RADCLIFFE presented a letter from the Association of Clerical Employees of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., of Baltimore, Md., relative to the operation of the social-security system, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying that the shipment of all war materials and supplies to Japan be stopped during the present conflict in China, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of Fitchburg, Mass., praying for the enactment of House bill 4199, a general-welfare bill granting old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in existing law and extend the law to include civil as well as international conflicts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution adopted by the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of legislation to impose a retroactive tax on State and municipal employees, and favoring the adoption of a constitutional amendment relative to reciprocal State and Federal taxation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the council of the city of Oneonta, N. Y., favoring the establishment of a training school for airplane pilots and mechanics at Oneonta, N. Y., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MEAD presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Transport Workers Union of America, of New York City; the Tri-City Newspaper Guild, Schenectady; and the American Communications Association, of Southampton, all in the State of New York, praying for an adequate appropriation for the National Labor Relations Board, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, No. 1, of Buffalo, N. Y., praying that adequate funds be allotted to the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor investigating violations of civil liberties, etc., which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Local Union No. 12033, C. I. O., of Cohoes, N. Y., remonstrating against any amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. REED presented petitions of 17 citizens of Downs and 45 citizens of Fredonia, both in the State of Kansas, praying that the shipment of arms and munitions to Japan for use in Chinese operations be stopped, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of 40 citizens of Girard, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent and punish the crime of lynching, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 35 citizens of Syracuse, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of 21 citizens of Wichita and 40 citizens of Conway Springs, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to limit railroad employees to not more than 208 hours of service in one month, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, on February 6 the Legislature of Wyoming adopted a resolution memorializing Congress to give immediate consideration to the General Welfare Act and the enacting of legislation affording proper pensions to our elder citizens.

Furthermore, on January 25 a similar resolution memorializing Congress was adopted by the Legislature of Wyoming urging the Congress to consider and act at the present session upon legislation embodying the principles of the Townsend plan. That resolution was noted in the RECORD of February 1.

Another resolution was adopted by the Legislature of Wyoming on January 25, 1939, expressing opposition to any increase in the area of the Teton National Park in the State of Wyoming.

The resolution adopted by the Wyoming State Legislature protesting against the inclusion of any more private or public lands in the Teton National Park was passed by our house of representatives by unanimous vote and passed by the senate on a roll call by a vote of 20 to 1.

The resolution states some reasons why, in the judgment of the legislature, there should be no increase in the area of the Teton National Park, although there are not included in the resolution many of what I believe to be more cogent reasons why no further extension should be permitted.

I ask unanimous consent that these three memorials from the State Legislature of Wyoming be included in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be received, printed in the RECORD, and properly referred.

To the Committee on Finance:

Senate Joint Memorial 1

Joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to consider and act upon proposed Federal legislation related to the Townsend plan

Whereas there is now pending, or will be pending in the current session of the Congress of the United States of America, proposed legislation embodying essential principles of the so-called Townsend plan, in which thousands of Wyoming citizens are keenly interested: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Wyoming (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress aforesaid be, and it is hereby memorialized to promptly, diligently, and fairly consider and act upon, at said session, by its legislative branches as such and not merely in committee, the proposed legislation aforesaid; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies hereof be promptly transmitted to the President and Vice President of said United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of said Congress, United States Senator JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, United States Senator HARRY H. SCHWARTZ, and Representative FRANK O. HORTON.

Approved January 25, 1939.

NELS H. SMITH, Governor.

House Joint Memorial 2

Joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States to immediately consider the General Welfare Act

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Wyoming (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized as follows:

Whereas the age limits of employment are constantly getting lower, and the problem of our aged citizens is becoming more burdensome; and

Whereas the need for a satisfactory national old-age pension program is becoming more evident: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-fifth Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the senate concurring), That we hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to immediately consider the General Welfare Act with a view of increasing the amount of old-age benefits.

To the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

House Joint Memorial 1

Joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States to defeat any legislation providing for the purchase or acceptance as a gift by the United States, or any of its agencies, of privately owned lands in Teton County, Wyo.

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States legislation providing for the acquiring of certain lands in Teton County, Wyo., and providing for the extension of the Grand Teton National Park, by transferring from private ownership to the ownership of the United States large tracts of land in Teton County, Wyo.; and

Whereas the transfer of such privately owned lands to the United States Government would remove said lands from the assessment roll of said Teton County and would exempt the same from taxation; and

Whereas Teton County, Wyo., as now organized, has within its borders privately owned property subject to taxation of a value of approximately $2,200,000; and

Whereas if the boundaries of the Grand Teton National Park should be extended as provided in said legislation, Teton County, Wyo., would be unable to continue to function as a county; and Whereas a large part of the big-game hunting areas of the State of Wyoming lie within the boundaries of the proposed extension, as well as a large part of the game and fish of the State of Wyoming inhabiting the areas involved; and

Whereas such park extension would be detrimental not only to Teton County, Wyo., but as well to the large number of sportsmen who, annually, pay large sums of money into various trade channels for the privilege of hunting and fishing in the areas involved: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Wyoming (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby memorialized to defeat and reject any legislation which would remove from private ownership any lands now subject to taxation in Teton County, Wyo.; be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to United States Senators JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY and HARRY H. SCHWARTZ, and to Congressman FRANK O. HORTON.

Approved January 25, 1939.

NELS H. SMITH, Governor.

Mr. BYRNES presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to provide funds for sudden destruction of agricultural crops

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to provide an adequate fund, under proper supervision, to protect the farmers of this Nation from sudden destruction of their crops by flood, hail, and wind; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senators and Representatives from South Carolina in Congress assembled and also a copy to the Secretary of Agriculture in Washington, D. C.

Mr. GREEN presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to defeat S. 286, introduced by Senator M. M. NEELY, of West Virginia, and its companion bill, H. R. 2196, introduced by Representative JOHN KEE, also of West Virginia, which bills seek to place a 3-cent-per-gallon tax on the sale of fuel oil used for heating and for the generation of power

Whereas Senator M. M. NEELY, of West Virginia, has introduced a measure in the Congress of the United States known as S. 286, which measure, if passed, would impose a 3-cent-per-gallon tax on all fuel oil sold for the generation of heat and power; and

Whereas a companion bill, known as H. R. 2196, has been introduced in the Congress of the United States by Representative JOHN KEE, also of West Virginia, which bill, if passed, would likewise impose a 3-cent-per-gallon tax on all fuel oil sold for the generation of heat and power; and

Whereas subsection (c) in each of the above bills provides that if either of the same be enacted into law the 3-cent-per-gallon tax would become a permanent tax on all fuel oil sold for the generation of heat and power in the United States; and

Whereas a study of these bills clearly reveals that the same are discriminatory in their effects and are productive of no possible good except to burden fuel oil with a tax for the benefit of a competing commodity, namely, coal; and

Whereas statistics reveal that in the city of Providence alone there are approximately 20,000 homes, or 30 percent of the total number of homes in this city, using fuel oil for the heating and comfort thereof; and

Whereas this tax will add $63 to the annual fuel bill of every householder in the State of Rhode Island who consumes fuel oil; and

Whereas the annual fuel-oil bill for the State of Rhode Island for its public buildings would increase approximately $250,000, which will be added to the public tax burden; and

Whereas an additional $20,000,000 will be added to the annual fuel-oil bill of owners and operators of apartment houses, hotels, industrial establishments, churches, hospitals, office buildings, and such other commercial enterprises who depend upon fuel oil for heat and power; and

Whereas the imposition of a 3-cent fuel-oil tax will throttle and annihilate one of the largest industries of this State, which depends upon the sale of fuel oil for the generation of heat and power for its existence: Be it therefore

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Rhode Island (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, respectfully memorialized to defeat with all convenient speed not only S. 286, introduced by Senator M. M. NEELY, of West Virginia, and H. R. 2196, introduced by Representative JOHN KEE, also of West Virginia, but all other sundry and divers legislation whatsoever which proposes to place any tax on fuel oil used for heating and power generation purposes; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and to each Member of Congress elected from the State of Rhode Island, and that the latter be urged to use their best offices to procure the defeat of such legislation as will accomplish the purposes of this resolution.

Mr. KING presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Joint memorial by the Legislature of the State of Utah on the proposed supplement to Cuban trade agreement

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States: Your memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Utah, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the notice issued by the Acting Secretary of State of the United States to negotiate with the Republic of Cuba a trade agreement supplemental to the trade agreement signed at Washington on August 24, 1934, depressed the retail price of sugar in the United States by approximately 25 points, with the result that within recent weeks sales of sugar in numerous instances have netted the processor a profit of less than 3 cents per bag; that if, as proposed by said amendment, the tariff on Cuban sugar is reduced from 90 cents to 75 cents per 100 pounds, utter demoralization in the market may ensue and the domestic sugar industry is now fighting with its back to the wall, its very existence threatened: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urge all Members of the Congress of the United States to exert their best efforts to prevent any reduction in the present tariff on Cuban sugar; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to each of the Representatives and to each of the Senators from Utah in Congress as well as to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of State, and the President of the United States.

Mrs. CARAWAY presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Concurrent Resolution 13

Requesting the United States Senators and Members of Congress from Arkansas to initiate and cooperate in supporting legislation to restore cotton to its former economic importance in world commerce

Whereas by reason of legislation creating trade barriers to the cotton trade, discriminating freight rates, the tariff, and other legislation, and by reason of world economic conditions and competition from cotton growers in foreign countries with living standards below that of this country the cotton farmers in the Southern States have been reduced to a tragic financial condition, their export markets have been almost lost, they are subject to competition which they are handicapped in meeting, and the growing of cotton made economically impossible under existing conditions; and

Whereas unless concerted action is immediately taken by the Senators and Members of Congress from the cotton States, looking to the relief of the cotton farmers from the handicaps under which such conditions have come about, the growing of cotton may soon become a thing of the past in this country, and the welfare and income of large sections of the United States seriously affected: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Arkansas (the senate concurring), That the attention of the Congress of the United States is respectfully directed to the fact that cotton is the leading product in America's commerce and international trade, and that the cotton farmer represents the world's largest primary wealth-producing group and that it is of paramount importance to the producers of this commodity, as well as to the continued life of world trade on the part of the United States, that this interest be adequately rehabilitated and fostered. To that end, the Senators and Members of Congress from the State of Arkansas are respectfully urged to take immediate steps to meet with the Senators and Representatives from all other cotton States for the purpose of securing concerted action by the Congress for the relief of the cotton farmers and of the industry from the handicaps and barriers under which they and it now suffer in the marketing of cotton, domestic and foreign, and it is respectfully suggested that among the things they are called to advocate are the following:

(1) Legislation for the removal of statutory trade barriers, as far as possible, against our cotton trade, such as the modification or repeal of the Johnson Act, the enactment of legislation bringing about the equalization of transportation rates, the revision of the tariff to relieve discrimination against the cotton farmers, and other legislation.

(2) The sale to and use by the Government for the manufacture of equipments and munitions of war of 6,000,000 bales of surplus cotton.

(3) Allocation to producers of cotton from the cotton being carried under Government loans a sufficient number of bales to pay them the balance due on 3-cents-per-pound subsidy authorized by national legislation, effective on 1937 cotton crop, and on which only 1.8 per pound had been paid.

(4) Increase the subsidy payment to the cotton producers by the further distribution of Government loan surplus cotton to 65 percent of parity prices on cotton during the crop years 1937, 1938, and 1939.

(5) Allocation or reapportionment of 4,000,000 bales of cotton being carried by the Commodity Credit Corporation to the cotton growers in lieu of their making an additional reduction of one-third or less in their cotton acreage allotment for 1939, each farmer so additionally reducing his allotted cotton acreage to be allotted the amount of cotton he would have produced on this acreage based upon his average yield as allowed by the Government, and farmers so reducing to be paid the same soil-building and other amounts they would have been paid had they planted the full cotton acreage allotted by the Government for 1939.

(6) Selling to the Post Office Department 1,000,000 bales of cotton now being carried by the Government under loans, this cotton to be used to be manufactured into twines and other materials for use of the United States Mail Service, the Post Office Department to place this cotton through bids to be manufactured for their use.

(7) To allocate or reapportion from the cotton being carried by the Government under the loans, 1,000,000 bales to be manufactured into cotton bagging to be distributed to cotton farmers as an additional subsidy without charge for baling their 1939 cotton and cotton of subsequent years.

(8) The allocation of cotton, in point of time to comply with the time now required under the law for the sale thereof.

(9) The retention of soil-conservation payments as now made, pending the working out of a definite permanent plan for the future of cotton.

(10) The pledging of the Government to a definite support of cotton production profitable to the cotton growers.

(11) The protection of cotton growers, through a subsidy payment increasing the selling price to 65 percent of the parity price of cotton, so that they may successfully compete with foreign growers and regain lost export markets.

(12) The granting to cotton growers of the privilege of planting other money crops than cotton on surplus lands resulting from reduction of cotton acreage, and not needed for production of feed and food crops for home consumption, without imposing a penalty against compliance payments, as now done.

(13) The immediate payment to cotton farmers of all amounts due for 1938 compliance, as was promised.

(14) There is no one in the United States Department of Agriculture whose primary interest is the promotion of the welfare of the cotton farmer. To remedy this condition, create an office of Cotton Commissioner in the United States Department of Agriculture. It should be the Commissioner's duty to develop new uses and markets for cotton and to represent producers of cotton in developing farm programs.

(15) In addition to finances otherwise available that a sufficient fund be appropriated from the general funds of the Treasury and made available to the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect this program here recommended, and that funds for agriculture be raised in the same manner that funds are raised for other Government expenditures.

(16) The formation in each House of Congress of a bloc to advocate measures for the protection, encouragement, and support of the cotton, both now and in the future.

Be it further

Resolved, That the legislative bodies of the cotton States be urged to take immediate action to request from their Senators and Members of Congress similar cooperation and support of such action and measures; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house do forthwith transmit copies of this resolution to the United States Senators and Members of Congress from this State.

Mrs. CARAWAY also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Concurrent Resolution 14

Resolution petitioning the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, appropriate legislation for the complete multiple-use development of the White River and its tributaries

Whereas the Corps of Army Engineers working under the direction of the Congress of the United States has made a study of the White River Basin as reported in House Document No. 102, Seventy-third Congress, first session, recommending the construction of certain dams and hydroelectric plants when sufficient market for power justifies; and

Whereas the demand for cheap electric power, adequate flood control, and recreational facilities has increased since the earlier report of the Corps of Army Engineers; and

Whereas over 50 percent of the electric energy used in Arkansas is imported from other States; and

Whereas the market for electric energy has increased over 200,000,000 kilowatt-hours since 1932 and is increasing at the rate of approximately 60,000,000 kilowatt-hours each year; and

Whereas 50,000 farmers will be ready for electrical service requiring 50,000,000 additional kilowatt-hours before the hydroelectric plants could be constructed; and

Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, assembled, do believe that under present circumstances the construction of multiple-use dams and hydroelectric plants on the White River would open up for cultivation thousands of acres of fertile agricultural land along the banks of the lower White River, would supply the State with much needed electric generating capacity, producing power at low costs, would stimulate and assist the development of the vast undeveloped mineral resources of the State, would encourage diversified agriculture, particularly in the hill sections of the State, would provide navigation facilities at lower transportation costs, which would further assist the development of the State, would be beneficial for irrigation in the rice area, would provide recreational facilities in the most picturesque setting in the whole country, would provide labor for many persons in the State badly in need of work, would eliminate the great hazards of floods and the cost of maintaining thousands of people during flood periods, and would in every way be to the economic and social betterment of the State: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas assembled:

SECTION 1. That we hereby petition the Congress of the United States to pass and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, adequate legislation providing sufficient funds for the complete multiple-use development of the White River Basin in Arkansas and Missouri.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of the resolution, properly authenticated, be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to the Members of Congress from the States of Arkansas and Missouri by the chief clerk of the house of representatives.

Mrs. CARAWAY also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

House Concurrent Resolution 9

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the fifty-second general assembly (and the senate concurring therein), That whereas Senator THOMAS, Democrat, from the State of Utah, has now pending before the United States Senate a bill providing that the Civilian Conservation Corps be made permanent; and

Whereas thousands of boys of the State of Arkansas are now in the C. C. C. camps; and

Whereas that the C. C. C. has done much toward the education of the youth of America, both practical and educational; and

Whereas in several instances the boys that are in the camps at present, and have been heretofore, did much for the financial condition of their families; and

Whereas the C. C. C. boys are ready, able, and willing at all times to aid and assist in any emergency that may exist: Therefore be it Resolved by the Fifty-second General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, with the senate concurring therein, this concurrent resolution be adopted and that the same be spread upon the journals of the house of representatives, and that the chief clerk of the house of representatives is hereby instructed to mail a copy of said resolution to each Member of Congress from Arkansas and to our dearly beloved Senators, HATTIE W. CARAWAY and JOHN E. MILLER.

Mrs. CARAWAY also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

House Resolution 27

Whereas Congressman W. F. NORRELL and Senators CARAWAY and MILLER are seeking to obtain a Federal building for Hot Springs; and

Whereas Hot Springs is in serious need of such a building because of the overcrowded condition of the present Federal building due to the number of permanent Federal agencies with offices in said building; and

Whereas the present structure is not easily accessible to the large number of sick and crippled people who annually visit this national spa: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representative of the fifty-second general assembly, That this body endorse the efforts of Members of the Congress to secure for the city of Hot Springs this needed Federal building, and that the United States Post Office Department be urged to construct such a building; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. James A. Farley, Postmaster General, and to members of the Arkansas delegation in Congress.

Mr. NYE presented the following resolutions of the Senate of the State of North Dakota, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Resolution C

Resolution relating to the eradication of grasshoppers by arsenic poison

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota: Whereas the senate committee on agriculture unanimously agreed on the following: That grasshoppers cannot be eliminated by the spreading of arsenic poison, and to the best judgment of the committee less than 3 percent were killed by the use of arsenic poison in 1933.

Whereas the farmers were more willing to cooperate in the spreading of arsenic in 1938 than they will be in 1939, and to the best judgment of the committee 80 percent of the farmers in North Dakota will not be willing to cooperate in the spreading of the bait in 1939, because of the poor results in the 1938 experiment and of great losses of livestock from such poison, and also the killing of upland birds, which are the natural remedy for the eradication of insects.

Whereas several million dollars of the taxpayers' money collected by the Federal, State, and counties have been spent for this purpose and hardly any benefit has been received therefrom.

Whereas the greatest benefit resulting from the preparation of grasshopper poison goes to the manufacturers of arsenic and other ingredients used in the preparation of the grasshopper poison, all of which is promoted and recommended by the extension department of the agricultural college of this state: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we recommend that all Federal money appropriated for the eradication of insects be allotted to the States according to amount or degree of infestation, to be spent and used by the State grasshopper committee according to their best judgment; and be it further

Resolved, That the State grasshopper committee make use of parasitic fungus prepared by Charles C. Hess, of Whitewood, S. Dak., and other methods which they may see fit to adopt; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States at Washington, D. C., to each Member of Congress of this State, to the director of the county agent's extension department of the agricultural college at Fargo, and to the chairman of each board of county commissioners of the State of North Dakota.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 67

Requesting Congress to enact legislation permitting payment of seed loans bushel for bushel

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas it seems to have been impossible to secure legislation necessary to stabilize the market price of farm crops in these United States; and

Whereas the difference in the price of grains when bought for seed and feed, and when sold in the market, has been so great that the farmers who have been compelled to borrow money from the various Federal agencies for the purpose of buying such feed or seed are frequently required to sell 4 or more bushels in order to discharge the cost of each bushel purchased; and

Whereas under such conditions it will be utterly impossible for many of our farmers to discharge their obligations to the Federal agencies: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That through this resolution we earnestly appeal to the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as will permit any person now indebted, or who may hereafter become obligated for a Federal seed or feed loan, to discharge such debt by payment in kind, bushel for bushel; be it further

Resolved, That one copy of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture and one copy to the President of the United States; one copy to each of our Congressmen; one copy to each of our United States Senators; one copy to M. W. Thatcher, 423 East Leland Street, Chevy Chase, Md.; these copies to be forwarded to them by our secretary of state immediately upon the passage of this resolution.

Mr. NYE also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

House Resolution H

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota:

Whereas President Franklin Roosevelt in his message to Congress specifically pointed out the unjust and unfair operation of the present embargo act which prevents the victims of aggressor nations from obtaining the necessary materials and supplies for proper self-defense; and

Whereas with the lifting of the present embargo loyalist Spain stands ready to buy for cash and provide necessary transportation for large quantities of agricultural products which now constitute the surplus in our country and aggravates the depression here; and

Whereas such sale of surplus commodities will definitely improve the economic position of our farmers while at the same time it will be of incalculable aid to the cause of democracy in Spain and serve to unite democratic nations against the encroachments of undemocratic and dictatorial forms of government which now seek to displace the form of government which we revere: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota hereby memorialize Congress and the President of the United States to take immediate steps in lifting the present unjust and unfair embargo in keeping with the conditions as set forth hereinbefore; and be it also

Resolved, That one copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of the following: The President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt; Vice President John Garner, President of the United States Senate; the Secretary of State, Cordell Hull; Speaker Bankhead, House of Representatives; Senator Lynn J. Frazier; Senator Gerald P. Nye; Congressman William Lemke; Congressman Usher L. Burdick.

Mr. NYE also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 64

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring therein):

Whereas the Federal Government has purchased and is contemplating the purchase of large tracts of land in North Dakota, which lands were the property of private owners, and as such were assessed and taxed with the other property located in the same taxing districts; and

Whereas when such purchases are completed the land can no longer be taxed by the State of North Dakota or its subdivisions; and

Whereas the removal of large tracts of land from the tax rolls of the taxing districts of the State of North Dakota has created a very critical situation in such districts, which are largely dependent upon the property tax for the support of schools and other necessary governmental functions; and

Whereas at the time of such purchases by the Federal Government such lands were encumbered by a debt representing tax levies due annually to pay the principal and interest on bonded indebtedness, as required by section 184 of the Constitution of the State of North Dakota; and

Whereas the removal of large tracts of land from the tax rolls through such Federal purchases seriously impairs the value of the contracts represented by outstanding bonds and other evidences of indebtedness, issued by the subdivisions in which such lands are located, contrary to section 10 and the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and contrary to section 16 of the Constitution of the State of North Dakota; and

Whereas in some instances the areas left in private hands are insufficient to pay outstanding indebtedness of the taxing districts; and

Whereas it is unjust and inequitable that the remaining property owners in such taxing districts be compelled to pay the whole of such outstanding indebtedness: Be it therefore

Resolved, That we, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota—

Do petition and memorialize the Congress of the United States to provide funds for the payment of such proportion of the outstanding indebtedness of the taxing districts in which the Federal Government has made or will make such land purchases in the proportion that the value of such land so purchased bears to the valuation of the entire taxing district; be it further

Resolved, That copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and each of the United States Senators and Congressmen from the State of North Dakota.

Mr. GEORGE presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolution by the General Assembly of Georgia urging the President of the United States to expedite construction of the power and flood-control dam on the Savannah River near Clarks Hill

Whereas the feasibility of the construction of a power and flood-control dam across the Savannah River near Clarks Hill has been repeatedly determined and recommended; and

Whereas such decisions and recommendations were contained first in a report of Army engineers, acting pursuant to a congressional resolution approved in 1927, and subsequently by a report of an executive appointed board, assisted by distinguished economists and engineers; and

Whereas by Executive direction the National Resources Board has made a complete investigation and study of all of the facts and reports, and said Board has endorsed and recommended that the Clarks Hill project be put in group 1 for immediate construction; and

Whereas the Federal Power Commission has rendered a highly favorable report and recommendation based on a study of the potential market for the sale of electric energy within the area to be affected; and

Whereas the citizens of Georgia and of our sister State of South Carolina are entitled to receive the benefits that will inure, as well as the protection to be afforded by the construction of a dam across the longest river in the United States on the Atlantic seaboard; and

Whereas the unquestioned feasibility, propriety, and wisdom of its construction has been fully demonstrated by the many reports of those best qualified to inquire into such matters: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of Georgia (the senate concurring), That we respectfully urge the President of the United States to use his good office in expediting the construction of the proposed flood-control and power dam across the Savannah River near Clarks Hill, inasmuch as the claims of the two States affected, for the protection and public benefits afforded, have been recognized and recommended repeatedly over a period of several years; be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of these resolutions be forwarded to President Franklin D. Roosevelt; Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of Interior; Hon. Walter F. George and Richard B. Russell, Jr., United States Senators from Georgia; Hon. Paul Brown, Representative in Congress from the Tenth Congressional District of Georgia; Hon. Frank R. McNinch, Chairman of the Federal Power Commission; Hon. Roger B. McWhorter, chief engineer of the Federal Power Commission; Hons. E. D. Smith and J. F. Byrnes, United States Senators from South Carolina; Hon. H. P. Fulmer, Representative in Congress from the Second Congressional District of South Carolina; and Hon. Butler B. Hare, Representative in Congress from the Third Congressional District of South Carolina.

Mr. GEORGE also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas all civilization began with and will end with the plow; and

Whereas when agriculture prospers the Nation prospers and plenty and peace rule the land; and

Whereas when agriculture is impoverished despair, discontent, and want stalk the country; and

Whereas cotton is still king and our Southern States are dependent upon a market for their cotton crop as the only means by which they can materially prosper; and

Whereas coconut oil, peanuts, cottonseed, and other foreign oils and fats are being imported into this country to directly compete with cottonseed oil to the detriment of our southern farmers; and

Whereas the importation of jute into this country is invited, sponsored, and condoned by certain interests who do not have the welfare of the farmers and American agriculture at heart; and

Whereas the said jute directly competes with cotton in our domestic markets; and

Whereas when the southern farmer prospers in the economic flow, his prosperity moves to the money markets of the East, and the East, in turn, receives prosperity from the hands of the southern farmers, and the prosperity of the East and South, in turn, causes the other sections of this great country to prosper: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the United States Congress be memorialized to prohibit the importation of coconut oil, peanuts, cottonseed, and other foreign oils and fats into this country, and further, that the importation of jute be curtailed and prohibited; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to each member of the Georgia congressional delegation in the Congress, and that they be urged to launch a movement in the Congress to bring about the prohibitions herein suggested.

Mr. RUSSELL presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas at the extraordinary session of the Georgia Legislature in 1937-38 the General Assembly of Georgia memorialized the Senators and Congressmen from Georgia to use their every effort to secure an appropriation by the Congress of the United States to repay the cotton and tobacco farmers of the South the amount of tax paid by such farmers in the purchase of cotton and tobacco exemptions certificates; and

Whereas at the last session of said Congress there was enacted into law an appropriation authorizing the refund to said farmers of cotton taxes actually paid at the cotton gins and of tobacco taxes actually paid at tobacco warehouses: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Georgia, That the Senators and Congressmen of Georgia are hereby respectfully urged and requested:

1. To urge upon the Seventy-sixth Congress now in session an appropriation providing for the refund of all money paid by cotton and tobacco farmers through the purchase of certificate under the regulation of the Bankhead cotton-control bill and of the Kerr-Smith Tobacco Control Act.

2. That the General Assembly of Georgia express to the Senators and Congressmen of Georgia by these presents their appreciation of the successful procurement of said appropriation at the Seventy-sixth Congress.

3. That a copy of this resolution be mailed by the clerk of the house to each of the Senators of Georgia and to the Members of the House of Representatives of Georgia.

Whereas all civilization began with and will end with the plow; and

Whereas when agriculture prospers, the Nation prospers and plenty and peace rule the land; and

Whereas when agriculture is impoverished, despair, discontent, and want stalk the country; and

Whereas cotton is still king and our Southern States are dependent upon a market for their cotton crop as the only means by which they can materially prosper; and

Whereas coconut oil, peanuts, cottonseed, and other foreign oils and fats are being imported into this country to directly compete with cottonseed oil to the detriment of our southern farmers; and

Whereas the importation of jute into this country is invited, sponsored, and condoned by certain interests who do not have the welfare of the farmers and American agriculture at heart; and

Whereas the said jute directly competes with cotton in our domestic markets; and

Whereas when the southern farmer prospers in the economic flow, his prosperity moves to the money markets of the East, and the East, in turn, receives prosperity from the hands of the southern farmers, and the prosperity of the East and South, in turn, causes the other sections of this great country to prosper: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the United States Congress be memorialized to prohibit the importation of coconut oil, peanuts, cottonseed, and other foreign oils and fats into this country, and further, that the importation of jute be curtailed and prohibited; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to each member of the Georgia congressional delegation in the Congress, and that they be urged to launch a movement in the Congress to bring about the prohibitions herein suggested.

Mr. RUSSELL also presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas it appears that approximately one-half of the persons in Georgia who are eligible for old-age pensions are not receiving pensions because of Georgia's inability to raise sufficient funds with which to match Federal funds to pay such pensioners; and

Whereas it appears that the persons in Georgia who are receiving old-age pensions are receiving only approximately $8 each per month—$4 from the State and $4 from the Federal Government; and

Whereas the Federal Government has set up and provided sufficient funds with which to pay $15 per month to each pensioner, or such portion of said sum as the State matches; and

Whereas because of Georgia's inability to raise sufficient sums to match more than $4 per month per pensioner the pensioners in Georgia receive only $4 per month from the Federal Government; and

Whereas the pensioners of the more wealthy States receive $15 per month from the Federal Government as a result of those States' ability to match the full Federal allowance; and

Whereas under the present laws requiring the States to match Federal pensions the old people of Georgia and other States which are unable to raise sufficient sums to adequately match Federal funds for pensions are not receiving equal protection, security, and benefits from the Federal Government as compared with the old people of the wealthier States which are able to match in full the Federal pensions; and

Whereas the number of old persons in Georgia who are eligible for old-age pensions but who are not receiving pensions because of Georgia's inability to raise sufficient funds to match Federal funds available greatly exceeds the number of old persons actually receiving old-age pensions; and

Whereas it is manifestly unfair and unjust for some old people to receive pensions while others equally as eligible and deserving receive no pension; and

Whereas the Federal Government already has available funds which have been allocated for the payment of $15 per month to old-age pensioners on condition that such amount be matched by the States; and

Whereas in the year 1936 the annual per capita income in Georgia was $246 and the annual per capita income in the Nation was $525; and

Whereas the present system of old-age pensions requiring States to match Federal pensions is manifestly unjust and unfair to States like Georgia whose financial capacities are limited as the result of the low per capita income of their citizens; and

Whereas the present system requiring matching penalizes the citizens of the State, like Georgia, whose financial capacities are limited as a result of the low per capita income of their citizens; and

Whereas States with limited financial capacities, like Georgia, are penalized by other Federal statutes requiring matching in order for such States to receive Federal relief funds: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Georgia, That it does hereby go on record as favoring the amending of the old-age pension laws, as enacted by the Congress of the United States, so as to eliminate therefrom the requirement that the States match Federal pension funds before the pensioners are eligible to receive old-age pensions from the Federal Government; be it further

Resolved, That this body does hereby go on record as favoring the payment by the Federal Government of old-age pensions to eligible old-age persons, all pensions to be of equal amounts, without requiring the States to match said pensions or any part thereof, the amount of the pensions so paid to be determined by the number of persons eligible and amount of funds available for the purpose; be it further

Resolved, That the Representatives in the House and Senate of the United States Congress from Georgia be, and they are hereby, urged to sponsor legislation as hereinbefore outlined in order all old persons might receive equal and impartial treatment from the Federal Government and in order that the badly strained financial condition of the State of Georgia might be relieved; be it further

Resolved, That this body does hereby go on record as protesting and opposing the present method of distributing relief funds by requiring States, counties, and municipalities to match such relief funds, said system as now operated working a most unfair and unjust penalty against the States of limited financial capacities and in favor of the States with greater financial resources; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of this senate be, and he is hereby, instructed to furnish a copy of this resolution to each Congressman and Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL also presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

Whereas there are now pending in the United States Senate bills to require fingerprinting of all aliens in the United States, and also the fingerprinting of aliens entering the United States in the future; and

Whereas there are now pending in the United States Senate bills for the deportation of all aliens whose presence in the United States is inimical to the public interest; and

Whereas there are now pending in the United States Senate bills requiring the deportation of all aliens who have been on relief rolls for 6 months or more during the past 3 years; Now

Therefore, believing this to be vital legislation, we, the State Senate of Georgia, do hereby urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to help pass this legislation for the benefit of our country; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent each member of the Georgia delegation in Congress.

Mr. RUSSELL also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Whereas title to Blackbeard Island, off the coast of Georgia, is now lodged in the Government of the United States of America; and

Whereas the said Blackbeard Island, comprising approximately 1,500 acres, was acquired by the United States in 1799 for the purpose of using the timber thereon for building wooden ships; and

Whereas it has not been used by the Federal Government for years for any practical purposes and today is of no value, good, or service to the United States or any citizen thereof in its present condition; and

Whereas the said Blackbeard Island consists mainly of five sand beaches approximately 7 miles in length which would afford the State of Georgia a stretch of the very best beaches on the South Atlantic seaboard; and

Whereas the said Blackbeard Island could be developed into a splendid and attractive recreational and vacation spot for the people of our State by our State government; and

Whereas by acquisition of this land by the State there would accrue to the State government considerable money each year from the sale and rentals of property on this island; Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Governor be requested to immediately importune the Government of the United States to cede and deed the said Blackbeard Island back to the State of Georgia, and also that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each Member of the Senate and House from Georgia in our National Assembly.

AMERICAN CHINA AND EARTHENWARE BUSINESS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance a statement under date of January 13, 1939, I have received from Mr. Roger W. Rowland, president of the New Castle Refractories Co., New Castle, Pa., concerning the effect which the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act is having on American china and earthenware business.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW CASTLE REFRACTORIES Co.,
New Castle, Pa., January 13, 1939.

The Honorable JAMES J. DAVIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: For your information I am giving you some general facts concerning the pottery industry.

The total production of American china and earthenware for table use is approximately $35,000,000 per year.

Out of every 100 dishes sold at retail in the United States, 60 of those dishes were made in the United States and 40 from foreign countries. Of those made in foreign countries about 65 percent were made in Japan. The average wage of a potter in the United States is $6.50 per day, male. In Japan, from 50 to 75 cents per day, male; and in England, $2 to $2.50 per day, male. In manufacturing china and earthenware labor represents 60 percent of the selling price. This, of course, means that any product in which labor is the greatest part of the total manufacturing cost that low-wage countries have a tremendous advantage. Japan delivers and sells ware in the United States after paying transportation, packing, custom duties, insurance, etc., at one-half or less of the American price on high-grade articles.

There are about 100,000 individuals in the United States dependent on the pottery industry. This, of course, includes not only workers in the industry and their families but also those connected with supplies, etc.

The industry has always fought against the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act. Under this act if we deal with Great Britain, any concession given to Great Britain goes to every other nation with the exception of Germany.

For your information, the potteries of Japan are equipped with American machinery, American tunnel kilns, etc. While they will not get quite as much production per hour, per man, their length of workday, which I understand averages about 12 hours, more than makes up of this deficit.

I am confident that you are well aware of the necessity of protecting the American wage earner and the manufacturer who pays him his wages, but I thought you would be interested in having a few statistics that would give you a little familiarity with the problems of the industry.

Sincerely yours,

NEW CASTLE REFRACTORIES Co.,
By ROGER W. ROWLAND, President.

ADMISSION OF GERMAN REFUGEE CHILDREN

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred an editorial from the Washington Post of February 14, 1939, entitled "A Bipartisan Move"; an article from the Washington Post of February 13, by Ernest K. Lindley, entitled "Humane Plan"; a telegram from Clara Savage Littledale, editor of the Parents Magazine; and a letter from Samuel McCrear Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, New York City.

There being no objection, the editorial and other papers were referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of February 14, 1939]

A BIPARTISAN MOVE

Humanitarianism in the United States knows no party lines or sectarian divisions. This is borne out by the fact that a companion bill to that introduced in the Senate by Senator WAGNER for the admission of a certain number of German refugee children in the next 2 years has been introduced in the House by Representative EDITH NOURSE ROGERS.

Senator WAGNER is a Democrat; Representative ROGERS a Republican. But the desperate plight of the youthful unfortunates who find themselves for racial, religious, or political reasons unwelcome and unwanted in the Third Reich touches no partisan chords.

Indeed, with regard to this question other than political divisions tend to disappear. The proposal on behalf of the German refugee children of 14 and younger has the endorsement of both the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O., of Catholics and Protestants alike. Thus, recently a group of prominent clergymen of leading denominations presented a petition at the White House calling on all Americans to join together, "without regard to race, religion, or creed, in offering refuge to children as a token of our sympathy and as a symbol of our faith in the ideals of human brotherhood."

Among the many signatories of this petition are Cardinal Mundelein; Bishop James E. Freeman; the Reverend Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick; Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel, of New Orleans; Archbishop John T. Cantwell; Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin; Bishop Edwin H. Hughes; the Very Reverend Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., president of Georgetown University; the Reverend Maurice S. Sheehy, of Catholic University; Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes; Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder.

Great Britain, the Netherlands, Belgium, France, and other countries have already hearkened to the appeal sent out on behalf of the refugee children of the Third Reich. In this great work of mercy the United States cannot afford to be behindhand.

[From the Washington Post of February 13, 1939]

HUMANE PLAN (By Ernest K. Lindley)

Humanitarian impulses so often get caught in blind alleys that it is cheering to see brought forward a plan which is both irresistibly humane and, in its main outlines, thoroughly practical.

This is the plan to afford a sanctuary in this country for a limited number of German refugee children of every race and creed.

The idea was set forth a few weeks ago by 49 of the outstanding Catholic and Protestant churchmen of the United States, including Cardinal Mundelein, as a token of our sympathy and as a symbol of our faith in the ideals of human brotherhood.

In line with that appeal, Senator WAGNER has introduced a resolution—which undoubtedly will also have Republican sponsorship—authorizing the issue of immigration visas to a maximum 10,000 German children 14 years old or younger during each of the years 1939 and 1940. These would be in addition to the 27,370 immigration visas that can be issued annually to Germans of all ages under existing law.

We can no longer offer refuge to the oppressed of all nations and all ages. With millions of unemployed on our hands, there is good reason for examining with the greatest of care any proposal to relax our present immigration restrictions.

But the objections to letting down the bars to men and women of working age do not apply to children. No one will be deprived of a job. In fact, the money in caring for these children will provide more employment for American citizens. Both branches of the labor movement have endorsed the plan in principle.

The plan looks practical for two other reasons. One is that there are individuals and agencies in this country who are eager to care for these children, to see that they are fed, clothed, housed, and educated. No child would be given an immigration visa until satisfactory provision for its care has been guaranteed by a responsible American citizen or private agency. Thus, within the maximum of 10,000 a year for 2 years the number actually admitted would be restricted to the number for which responsibility is voluntarily assumed in this country.

The plan looks practical at the other end because the children are ready to come or to be sent. The young of the persecuted minority groups have long since lost the chance to enjoy a normal childhood. They are unable to obtain a proper education; they are forbidden to play in the parks and, in some instances, even to play on the streets.

Now even their lives have become unsafe. During and after the pogrom of last November, thousands of children, some of them tots without any identification, were hastily put on trains by their parents and shipped to the border. Great Britain, waiving visa regulations, provided refuge for 2,800 of them, and has made preparations to take 5,000 more. Others found haven in Holland, Belgium, and France, which is already overcrowded with refugees.

In the February 11 issue of Collier's, Quentin Reynolds, describes the behavior of a group of Jewish children when they discovered, on their arrival in England, that they were allowed to go near the grass:

"And so when they heard the incredible news that no 'verboden' signs existed at Dovercourt they gave happy cries and rushed out onto the grass and rolled in it like kittens rolling in catnip. They tore tufts of it and pressed it against their cheeks. This was the first freedom any of them had ever known."

Some of the children left in Germany are homeless, their parents having disappeared in concentration camps. Some have been chased out of orphan asylums. With the confiscation of "non-Aryan" property, following on the gradual confiscation of jobs, thousands of persons are literally on the edge of starvation—and among them are young children.

In ratio to the whole persecuted population of Germany, the number of children is surprisingly small, especially among the Jews. The best private estimates available indicate that during the last 6 years, since Hitler came into power, the Jews have almost ceased having children. In all of old Germany, the number of Jewish children under the age of 6 is estimated at only 7,000—out of a total Jewish population of approximately 320,000. In the years 6 to 14 there are 20,500.

In addition to the children of the confessional Jews, there are, of course, those of the other "non-Aryans"—persons who in many instances are of the Protestant and Catholic faith but have been found to have had one or more Jewish grandparents. Among the children who need sanctuary are also some of purely Teutonic stock whose parents are in political disfavor.

Including what used to be Austria, it is estimated that there remain in Germany between 75,000 and 100,000 distressed children in the age group under 15. Some of them certainly could be taken care of in this country without harm to anyone, and with immense satisfaction to those who provide the foster homes. In the course of time, the parents of some will be able to reestablish themselves in other lands and so resume the care of their children.

Private individuals and agencies in this country are ready to work out the details of the arrangements for caring for these children who are in desperate need. Mrs. Calvin Coolidge has broken her standing rule of silence on all matters involving legislation to express her approval of this plan, as one of the women of Northampton, Mass., who want to take care of 25 children. Former President Hoover has endorsed the proposal.

The main thing that seems to be needed is the stamp of approval of Congress.

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 14, 1939.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

May I express hearty approval of your bill to permit 20,000 German refugee children, 14 years and under, of every race and creed, to enter this country during the next 2 years. I am convinced through this magazine's contact with families and with child-placing agencies that these children can be quickly and efficiently cared for with resulting happiness to the children and their foster or temporary parents. There is a greater demand here for children for adoption than there are children now available. Both England and Holland have already opened their doors to these suffering children. The United States has never failed to answer such a call for help. There are thousands of American homes eager to welcome these young refugees. May your bill permitting them to enter be passed with the least possible delay.

CLARA SAVAGE LITTLEDALE,
Editor, the Parents Magazine.

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA,
New York, February 10, 1939.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: I am greatly pleased to read in the press this morning of the resolution which you have introduced calling for the admission of German refugee children in excess of the immigration quota. I congratulate you heartily upon your stand in this matter and feel that we are all deeply indebted to you for your leadership.

I take pleasure in communicating to you the following resolution which was adopted by the executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at its meeting on January 20:

"The executive committee has learned with appreciation of the efforts being made to secure special legislation by which there would be admitted to this country, outside of the regular quota, a group of refugee children from Germany. It is the understanding of the committee that this is the same type of action already taken in England under the leadership of the churches and that the children to be thus admitted would be under 14 years of age so that adoption and placement in homes would not be impracticable.

"In the extraordinary circumstances which have created the problem of Jewish and Christian refugees from Germany we feel that it is not enough to call upon other nations to help or to voice our protests but some such practical step as the one here contemplated is imperative and will do much to facilitate a larger approach to the problem of which it is but one part."

Very sincerely yours,

SAMUEL MCCREA CAVERT,
General Secretary.

DECLARATION OF POLICY BY AMERICAN MINING CONGRESS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, an important organization in the United States is the American Mining Congress. It meets from time to time and discusses important public questions. At a recent meeting, being its forty-first annual meeting, a number of resolutions were adopted. I ask that they may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN MINING CONGRESS,
MUNSEY BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1939.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KING: We are pleased to submit for your information a copy of the declaration of policy adopted by the American Mining Congress at its forty-first annual meeting. This represents the considered viewpoint of our widespread membership, representative of all branches of mining in this country.

Very respectfully yours,

THE AMERICAN MINING CONGRESS,
JULIAN D. CONOVER, Secretary.

A DECLARATION OF POLICY

The American Mining Congress in annual meeting in Washington, D. C., January 27, 1939, herewith declares its views upon the following subjects of public policy:

RELATION OF GOVERNMENT AND BUSINESS

Confidence is the foundation of economic recovery and stability. Essential to confidence are balanced budgets; stable money; thoughtful, well-considered legislation confined to sound, general principles; impartial administration of the law; and encouragement of private enterprise and initiative.

Government should not engage in competition with private industry.

EMPLOYEE RELATIONS

The interests of the general public, of employees, employers, and of capital, are mutual and can be served best through the fullest measure of cooperation.

The National Labor Relations Act: We recognize and accept the principle of collective bargaining. We regret that the application of the National Labor Relations Act has resulted in undeniable injustice to employees, employers, and the public, and urge proper amendments to the act and changes in methods of enforcement to insure its equitable application and administration.

Health and safety: We believe in the best possible working conditions for employees in the mining industry, and approve all reasonable and proper measures for promoting their health and safety. We recognize the good effect of adequate laws that will protect the employee from health hazards and the employer from unfair claims.

TAXATION

The constant threat of continually increasing taxation and annual changes in tax laws, combined with adverse policies in other fields, create constant uncertainty as to present and future tax liabilities and consequently restrict and curtail business enterprise, impose severe and unnecessary limitations upon employment, and discourage and retard the growth of national income on which the tax revenues of the Government must depend. Maximum yields from taxation over a period of years can be obtained only through the adoption of policies which do not discourage, deter, or destroy business initiative, enterprise, expansion, and employment. Only under such policies can our national income be sufficiently increased to provide adequate Government revenues. Only under such policies can the Federal Budget be relieved of heavy demands for unemployment relief.

A sound fiscal system requires adequate control over expenditures, which must be kept within the revenue yields of a sound and reasonably permanent system of taxation. Congressional responsibility for expenditures should be united with congressional responsibility for revenues. We urge that each House of Congress create a Committee on the Budget, the membership of which will include members responsible for appropriations and members responsible for taxation. The annual executive Budget, containing estimated revenue yields and the proposed expenditures for the year, should be referred to this committee. After appropriate committee consideration and full debate, each House of Congress should then determine and fix the maximum amount of expenditures for the year, and require that the separate appropriation bills, as well as legislation authorizing appropriations, conform to this determination, and the aggregate be kept within this maximum amount. With a ceiling thus placed upon expenditures, an effective control by Congress over both taxation and appropriations can be restored and maintained.

The Congress made substantial progress toward a fairer system of business taxation through the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1938 which greatly modified the penalty tax on the so-called undistributed profits of corporations, assured more equitable treatment of capital gains and losses, preserved the principle of reasonable depletion allowances and permitted periodical redeclaration of value for capital stock tax purposes. These provisions and the fact of their enactment have had an encouraging and stimulating effect on employment and business enterprise and will yield increased rather than decreased revenues to the Government. We urge the repeal of the remnant of the undistributed profits tax and the elimination of this and other needless complexities of the law.

The flat-rate tax upon corporate income should be reestablished; business losses of 1 year should be carried forward and deducted from future income; taxable income should be computed upon the basis of consolidated returns compulsory for affiliated corporations; the tax on dividends received by corporations should be removed; the deduction of capital losses, should be allowed without limitation; taxable income should conform more nearly to true income computed in accordance with accepted accounting practices, and the capital-stock tax should be repealed at the earliest possible date, and until repealed an annual declaration of value should be granted. We are confident that these are all appropriate features of tax legislation designed to yield maximum revenues over a period of years.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Reciprocal-trade agreements should not become effective until they have received the approval of the United States Senate.

MONETARY POLICY

We favor the return of control of our monetary system to the Congress. We favor a currency with a metallic base as opposed to a so-called managed currency. We favor the use of both metals—gold and silver—in such monetary system, and we favor the continuation of purchases of newly mined domestic gold and silver as a means of maintaining a metallic base for our currency.

We urge repeal of the law prohibiting ownership of gold coin or bars by our citizens, thus reestablishing the right of such ownership. We also urge that, to avoid further additions to present excessive gold stocks in the hands of our Government, further gold purchases be paid for with gold coin or gold certificates redeemable in such coin.

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

We endorse the report of our committee on cooperation with the Securities and Exchange Commission, dated October 24, 1938. We urge prompt adoption of the recommendations for simplification of the Securities and Exchange Commission regulations and administration, and the establishment, within the Commission, of a Division of Mining, headed by a man of experience and recognized standing in the mining industry, with supervision over the issues of mining companies.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AND POWER PROJECT

We oppose the pending treaty with Canada providing for the construction of a Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway and for immense hydroelectric power developments. The project has no economic justification, the proposed transportation and power facilities being neither needed nor desirable. It would impose unwarranted additional tax burdens. It would be of principal benefit to foreign production and shipping at the expense of American industries, agriculture, railroads, and water carriers. Millions of tons of American-produced commodities, particularly coal, iron ore, and metal products, would be displaced through the invasion of the vast interior American market by heavy imports from countries having low living standards, forced labor, and government-subsidized commerce. Markets for large tonnages of coal would be closed by the huge surplus of hydroelectric power and by lessened fuel requirements of our railroads and water carriers.

The project would disrupt and demoralize a great section of our economic life, producing serious unemployment and reduction in living standards, and would tend to destroy great mining, metallurgical, and other industries which are vital to the welfare and self-sufficiency of our country.

WATER POLLUTION

We commend the action of the Seventy-fifth Congress in rejecting amendments to the Barkley-Vinson water-pollution bill, which amendments would have vested regulatory control over water pollution in a Federal agency instead of leaving such control in the hands of State governments, to be supplemented by interstate compacts where necessary.

PUBLIC LAND POLICY

We reaffirm our endorsement and approval of the historical and time-honored system of locating mining claims and granting of patents which has proved to be such a factor in the discovery and development of mineral resources. This system is thoroughly grounded both in practice and law, and for the future well-being of the national economy should be continued without change.

We deplore governmental prohibition of the development of valuable mineral areas in the national game preserves and needless restrictions to such development on other public lands.

STRATEGIC MATERIALS

We recognize that the troubled state of the world today makes it necessary for our Government to lay plans to meet with success any national emergency.

Our defense plans must of necessity include provisions for an adequate supply of strategic and critical war materials.

As one of the essential industries in the furnishing of such materials, we pledge our cooperation in the development and execution of a program directed to that end. We ask Congress to make possible, under the direction of the Bureau of Mines and Geological Survey, a discovery and research program for minerals in which our country is deficient.

UNITED STATES BUREAU OF MINES—UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

We endorse the work of the United States Bureau of Mines and United States Geological Survey. Their services have been invaluable to the mining industry.

We disapprove any impairment of their functions. We further disapprove any alteration of the duties of the Bureau of Mines and especially its diversion from a broad program of research in safety and health problems to work of inspection and control, which should properly be handled by the State governments.

LEGISLATIVE PRINCIPLES

We urge careful, thorough, and independent investigation and consideration by the legislative branch of the Government, not merely as to the objectives of proposed legislation but also as to means proposed for accomplishing such objectives.

The enactment of laws, admitted to be defective and designed to be made workable only after amendment, is unsound and detrimental to the country's prosperity and development and to the people's confidence in their Government.

COMMITTEE REPORTS FILED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under authority of the order of the 13th instant, the following reports were filed during adjournment of the Senate:

On February 14, 1939:

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 1102) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 54) thereon.

On February 15, 1939:

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 186. A bill to amend section 798 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia relating to murder in the first degree (Rept. No. 55);

S. 1123. A bill to amend paragraph 57 of section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes" approved March 4, 1913 (Rept. No. 56);

S. 1125. A bill to provide for the appointment of research assistants in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 57);

S. 1129. A bill to amend paragraphs 31 and 33 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 7 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1932 (Rept. No. 58);

S. 1130. A bill to amend Public Law No. 111, Sixty-sixth Congress, entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia" (Rept. No. 59); and

S. 1294. A bill to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to regulate the hours during which streets, alleys, etc., shall be lighted (Rept. No. 60).

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 494) to name the bridge to be erected over the Anacostia River in the District of Columbia after the late "March King" John Philip Sousa, composer of The Stars and Stripes Forever, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 61) thereon.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 1126) to provide alternative methods of enforcement of orders, rules, and regulations of the Joint Board and of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 62) thereon.

Mr. OVERTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 1295) to amend section 9, article V, of an act known as "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia,' approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 63) thereon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 745) for the relief of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 64) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1315) for the relief of the Corbitt Co., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 65) thereon.

Mr. SCHWARTZ, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 303. A bill for the relief of The Ocilla Star (Rept. No. 66); and

S. 463. A bill for the relief of The Fitzgerald Leader (Rept. No. 67).

Mr. BILBO, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 316) to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to set aside the trial board conviction of Policemen David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner and their resultant dismissal, and to reinstate David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner to their former positions as members of the Metropolitan Police Department, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 69) thereon.

COMMITTEE ON CIVIL AVIATION AND AERONAUTICS (REPT. NO. 53, PT. 2)

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and myself, I submit minority views on Senate Resolution 74, amending rule XXV by providing for the appointment of a standing Committee on Civil Aviation and Aeronautics, and ask that they may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the minority views will be received and printed.

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROADS, HOLDING COMPANIES AND AFFILIATED COMPANIES (REPT. NO. 25, PT. 4)

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted an additional report, pursuant to Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-fourth Congress, authorizing an investigation of interstate railroads and affiliates with respect to financing, reorganizations, mergers, and certain other matters pertaining to the control of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railway Co., which was ordered to be printed.

LOANS BY THE DISASTER LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. WAGNER. By direction of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I report a bill for the calendar and I submit a report (No. 68) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

The bill (S. 1367) to extend the time for making loans by the Disaster Loan Corporation and increasing its capital stock was read twice by its title and placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

S. 1351. A bill to establish a Racing Board in the District of Columbia; to provide for the licensing of horse-racing meets where the pari-mutuel system of wagering thereon may be conducted; and to levy a license fee and tax on same; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HILL:

S. 1352. A bill to amend the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, section 301 (b), paragraph (3); to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 1353. A bill to increase the lump-sum payment made under the Workmen's Compensation Act in cases of permanent total disability suffered prior to February 12, 1927; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1354. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

S. 1355. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain lands within the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 1356. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Jesus Leyvas; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 1357. A bill for the relief of Chester J. Babcock; to the Committee on Civil Service.

S. 1358. A bill to amend section 2 of the act of March 4, 1915, as amended by the act of June 25, 1936 (Public, No. 808, 74th Cong.); to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 1359. A bill for the relief of Rosalia Cataudella Di Rosa and son, Georgio Di Rosa; to the Committee on Immigration.

S. 1360. A bill for the relief of the city of New York; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. CAPPER introduced Senate bill 1361, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BARKLEY:

S. 1362. A bill for the erection of a memorial to the memory of Corp. James Bethel Gresham, in McLean County, Ky.; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

S. 1363. A bill to amend subsection (4) of subsection (c) of section 101 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938;

S. 1364. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests; to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes," approved August 20, 1912 (37 Stat. 315); and

S. 1365. A bill to amend Title I and Title IV of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, relating to the promotion of more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, the correction of the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. WAGNER:

S. 1366. A bill to amend section 4442 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 214), with respect to licenses of pilots of steam vessels; to the Committee on Commerce.

(Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported Senate bill 1367, which was ordered to be placed on the calendar.)

By Mr. BAILEY:

S. 1368. A bill to authorize contingent expenditures, United States Coast Guard Academy; and

S. 1369. A bill to authorize necessary facilities for the Coast Guard in the interest of national defense and the performance of its maritime police functions; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 1370. A bill for the relief of James Edward Gill;

S. 1371. A bill for the relief of Julian S. Mann;

S. 1372. A bill for the relief of W. B. Tucker, Helen W. Tucker, Lonie Meadows, and Susie Meadows;

S. 1373. A bill for the relief of H. D. Bateman, P. L. Woodward, and J. M. Creech;

S. 1374. A bill for the relief of Cohen, Goldman & Co., Inc.;

S. 1375. A bill for the relief of John T. Dula;

S. 1376. A bill for the relief of Cothran Motors, Inc.; and

S. 1377. A bill for the relief of Mrs. H. A. Davis, Sr.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BROWN:

S. 1378. A bill to extend to political subdivisions of States the same treatment accorded to States which borrowed for relief purposes under the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 by eliminating discrimination in the case of certain loans made to cities and counties under that act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

S. 1379. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Mackinac Straits Bridge Authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the Straits of Mackinac at or near a point between St. Ignace, Mich., and the Lower Peninsula of Michigan; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 1380. A bill to amend the Wisconsin Chippewa Jurisdictional Act of August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. L. 1049); to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 1381. A bill for the relief of Charles Albert Goetz;

S. 1382. A bill to amend the act of June 24, 1935, so as to include certain alien veterans of the World War who left the United States prior to their being called in the draft, to serve in the military or naval forces of any of the countries allied or associated with the United States;

S. 1383. A bill to restrict habitual commuting of aliens from foreign contiguous territory to engage in skilled or unskilled labor or employment in continental United States; and

S. 1384. A bill for the relief of Egon Karl Freiherr von Mauchenheim and Margarete von Mauchenheim; to the Committee on Immigration.

S. 1385. A bill for the relief of the Barkman Lumber Co.;

S. 1386. A bill for the relief of Katherine Caulley;

S. 1387. A bill for the relief of Ida May Lennon; and

S. 1388. A bill for the relief of Herbert Therrien; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1389. A bill granting a pension to Ruth Iola Goulette Pridham;

S. 1390. A bill granting a pension to Martha Bertha Rapin; and

S. 1391. A bill granting a pension to Delta Teachout; to the Committee on Pensions.

(Mr. HOLMAN introduced Senate bill 1392, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. WILEY:

S. 1393. A bill for the relief of Dr. M. Kellogg Mookerjee; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. VANDENBERG:

S. 1394. A bill for the relief of Johannes or John, Julia, Michael, William, and Anna Kostiuk; to the Committee on Immigration.

(Mr. VANDENBERG introduced Senate bill 1395, which was referred to the Special Committee on Unemployment and Relief, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BARBOUR:

S. 1396. A bill for the relief of M. Brown and S. H. Brown; and

S. 1397. A bill for the relief of S. H. Brown and M. Brown, also known as the Universal Steamship Co., a Georgia corporation, to cover the loss of their bark Brown Brothers, destroyed by a German raider during the World War; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1398. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, as amended, to increase the penalties for peacetime violations of such act; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

S. 1399. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the preservation of American antiquities," approved June 8, 1906; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

S. 1400. A bill to discontinue certain emergency powers of the President with respect to the weight of the gold dollar; and

S. 1401 (by request). A bill to provide for the payment in gold certificates or gold coin of all gold hereafter purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 1402. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California," approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602); to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MILLER:

S. 1403. A bill for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Billings; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. TOBEY:

S. 1404. A bill granting an increase of pension to Marilla F. Dodge; to the Committee on Pensions.

(Mr. LEE introduced Senate bill 1405, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BURKE:

S. 1406. A bill to provide for the reincorporation of the Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War, 1861-65; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1407. A bill for the relief of Maude Isabel Rathburn Miner; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE:

S. 1408. A bill for the relief of Eric Randall Arey; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1409. A bill to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the town of Bristol, Maine, of a portion of the Pemaquid Point Lighthouse Reservation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah:

S. 1410. A bill to authorize the Archivist of the United States to cause to be edited and published a collection of documents relative to the ratification of the Constitution of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

S. 1411. A bill for the relief of August H. Krueger; and

S. 1412. A bill for the relief of Otis M. Culver, Samuel E. Abbey, and Joseph Reger; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

S. 1413. A bill for the relief of Capt. Robert J. King; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELLENDER:

S. 1414. A bill for the relief of Allie Holsomback and Lonnie Taylor; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LOGAN:

S. 1415. A bill for the relief of certain disbursing agents and employees of the Indian Service; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ASHURST:

S. 1416 (by request). A bill to make the provisions of the Employees' Compensation Act applicable to civil officers of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MINTON:

S. 1417. A bill for the relief of W. T. McGuire; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1418. A bill granting an increase of pension to Minerva C. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 1419. A bill for the relief of Louis Gershon; and

S. 1420. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the production of designs, plans, drawings, and specifications for construction projects in the interest of national defense; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. NYE:

S. 1421. A bill relating to the making of certain payments in connection with the 1937 soil-conservation program; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 1422. A bill for the relief of William R. Kellogg; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BILBO:

S. 1423. A bill to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

S. 1424. A bill to authorize the purchase of originals or copies of portraits of former Chief Justices and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States and the present Chief Justice and Associate Justices thereof for the new building occupied by the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. RUSSELL:

S. 1425. A bill to amend section 501 (Price Adjustment Act of 1938) of House Joint Resolution 679 entitled "Joint Resolution making appropriations for work relief, relief, etc."; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 1426. A bill for the relief of the State of New Mexico; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TRUMAN:

S. 1427. A bill granting a pension to Eugene R. Dobel; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ANDREWS:

S. 1428. A bill relating to pensions for persons who served as contract nurses during the War with Spain; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1429 (by request). A bill for the relief of Earl J. Reed and Giles J. Gentry; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

S. 1430. A bill for the relief of Dorothy Elizabeth Sisson, a minor (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McNARY:

S. 1431. A bill to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at or near Depoe Bay, Oreg.; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 1432. A bill authorizing the Snake or Piute Indians of the former Malheur Indian Reservation of Oregon to sue in the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 1433. A bill to add certain lands to the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

S. 1434. A bill extending the classified executive civil service of the United States;

S. 1435. A bill to extend the Classification Act of 1923, as amended;

S. 1436. A bill to establish a system of automatic salary increases within the Federal service; and

S. 1437. A bill to increase the compensation of employees in the Federal service and to establish a minimum annual rate of pay of $1,200; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mrs. CARAWAY:

S. 1438. A bill to incorporate the Women World War Veterans; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1439. A bill granting a pension to Bill McCarty; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1440. A bill for the relief of Leo Janes;

S. 1441. A bill for the relief of Nannie Kyle; and

S. 1442. A bill for the relief of Max J. Mobley; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GREEN:

S. 1443. A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to make a survey of the coast line at East Providence, R. I., which was damaged by the hurricane and flood of September 21, 1938; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 1444. A bill for the relief of Phebe Letitia Myers McCann; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1445. A bill for the relief of Bruno Arena;

S. 1446. A bill for the relief of Mary, Ethel, and Richard Farrell;

S. 1447. A bill for the relief of Roy W. Olsen;

S. 1448. A bill for the relief of Anna H. Rosa; and

S. 1449. A bill for the relief of Robert Stockman; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. 1450. A bill to provide funds for cooperation with school district No. 13, Froid, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

S. 1451. A bill for the relief of Chris Nelsen; and

S. 1452. A bill for the relief of Loyd J. Palmer; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1453. A bill authorizing the establishment of aids to navigation on Rainy Lake in the State of Minnesota; and

S. 1454. A bill relating to hours of work of licensed officers and seamen on tugs operating in the inland waters of the United States; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 1455. A bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to execute an easement deed to the city of Duluth for park, recreational, and other public purposes covering certain federally owned lands; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1456. A bill granting a pension to Mary C. Miller; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1457. A bill to provide for the payment of certain indebtedness on lands acquired by the United States; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 1458. A bill for the relief of Maj. George Nicoll Watson; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1459. A bill to readjust the allowances of retired enlisted men of the Army;

S. 1460. A bill to provide uniform reciprocal hospitalization in any Army or Navy hospital for retired personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and for other purposes;

S. 1461. A bill to remove discriminations against retired Army enlisted personnel and to equalize hospitalization and domiciliary benefits of retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard; and

S. 1462. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, so as to confer on the commanding general, General Headquarters Air Force, the same retirement privileges now enjoyed by chiefs of branches; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. CONNALLY:

S. J. Res. 1463. A bill to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BROWN:

S. J. Res. 68. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1939, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. J. Res. 69. Joint resolution proposing a plan for the adjustment of the claim of the State of Oklahoma against the United States arising from the tax exemption of Indian lands and the products thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri:

S. J. Res. 70. Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the Panama Canal; to the Committee on Intercoastal Canals.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

S. J. Res. 71. Joint resolution relating to pay to certain employees of the Government Printing Office for uncompensated leave earned during the fiscal year 1932; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. RUSSELL:

S. J. Res. 72. Joint resolution readmitting Mary Cohen Bienvenu to citizenship; to the Committee on Immigration.

S. J. Res. 73. Joint resolution authorizing the issuance of a special postage stamp in honor of the late Thomas E. Watson for his services in the origination of the Rural Free Delivery Service; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

INTEREST RATES ON FEDERAL LAND-BANK LOANS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to provide lower interest rates on Federal land-bank loans and on land bank commissioner loans; also, for moratoriums on principal payments on these loans until July 1, 1943, under certain conditions.

While I have the floor I desire to say to the Senate that it is imperative that something be done along this line. There are hundreds of communities in the drought sections of the Great Plains where farmers as a whole are barely holding onto their farms, with the help of the Federal Government. What little cash they realize from short crops, and from benefit payments in many instances, is being required to pay interest on loans. It seems only fair and right, and very much in the public interest, that under such conditions payments on the principal be postponed until better conditions prevail.

I have held for a year or more that farm interest rates are too high. Agriculture cannot pay these high rates of interest with the prevailing low prices and lack of markets for farm products. The bill which I have introduced provides a 3-percent interest rate on farms. I shall press for its passage. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and that a very brief explanatory statement, summarizing the provisions of the bill, be printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred, as requested by the Senator from Kansas; and without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1361) relating to the payment of principal and interest on certain loans made by the Federal land banks and the land-bank commissioner was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The statement presented by Mr. CAPPER is as follows:

The purposes of this bill are to provide for a further reduction of the interest rates on loans made by the Federal land banks and the land-bank commissioner, and to provide for a moratorium with respect to the principal of such loans until July 1, 1943.

Under existing law the interest rate on loans by the Federal land banks is fixed at 3½ percent per annum for the period between July 1, 1935, and July 1, 1940, and the interest rate on loans by the land-bank commissioner is fixed at 4 percent per annum for the period between July 22, 1937, and July 1, 1940. In addition, existing law provides for an extension of the time for making the payments required under the mortgage securing any such loan when in the judgment of the board of directors of the Federal land bank, or the land-bank commissioner, respectively, conditions justify it.

Section 2 of the bill fixes at 3 percent per annum the interest rate on loans by the Federal land banks for the period between July 1, 1935, and July 1, 1943, and provides that in the case of any such loan which is outstanding on the date of the enactment of the bill (referred to for convenience as the Farm Credit Act of 1939) no payment of principal shall be required prior to July 1, 1943, if the borrower is not in default with respect to any other covenant or condition of his mortgage.

The interest rate is fixed at 3 percent per annum by section 3 of the bill in the case of loans by the land-bank commissioner for the period between July 22, 1937, and July 1, 1943, and the moratorium provision with respect to payment of principal is the same as in the case of loans by the Federal land banks. Provision also is made in this section for applying to future interest payments the difference between the amounts paid under the higher interest rate fixed by existing law and that provided by the bill, and prior payments of principal are to be applied to payments required after July 1, 1943.

FEDERAL GRANTS FOR RELIEF AND WORK RELIEF

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senate has recently enlarged the Special Committee on Unemployment and Relief, headed by the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], and empowered it to report legislative proposals to the Senate. I take it, therefore, that it is the expectation that from this special committee will come the ultimate recommendations for a new Federal relief formula which shall substitute for the present unsatisfactory relief arrangements.

It is my conviction that we shall never approach a satisfactory settlement of this perplexing question until we have restored primary relief responsibility to the States and until the Federal Government has gone out of the relief business except to furnish necessary grants-in-aid and to require the nonpartisan administration of these grants-in-aid to be partially matched by the States.

For three successive years I have offered a substitute relief bill along these lines, in cooperation with the late distinguished Representative Robert L. Bacon, of New York. I now reintroduce this bill, leaving the amounts of appropriation blank, and ask that it be referred to the special committee, of which the Senator from South Carolina is chairman.

The bill (S. 1395) to provide relief, work relief, and increase employment by grants to the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Special Committee on Unemployment and Relief.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I introduce for reference to the Committee on Education and Labor a bill which proposes to amend the National Labor Relations Act with respect to the method of its administration. I ask that the bill and a memorandum explanatory of its purpose be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred, as requested by the Senator from Oregon, and, without objection, will, together with the memorandum, be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1392) to amend the National Labor Relations Act with respect to the method of its administration was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraphs 10 and 11 of section 2 of the National Labor Relations Act are amended to read as follows:

"(10) The term 'Commissioner' means the Labor Relations Commissioner appointed under this act.

"(11) The term 'Board' means the Labor Appeals Board created under this act."

SEC. 2. The National Labor Relations Act is further amended by striking out sections 3 to 6, both inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"COMMISSIONER

"SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby created in the Department of Labor, a Labor Relations Division which shall be under the direction of a Commissioner, to be known as the Labor Relations Commissioner. The Commissioner shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 a year.

"(b) The Commissioner may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such employees as he deems necessary to carry out his powers and duties under this act and shall fix their compensation in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The Commissioner may establish and utilize such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the Commissioner in any litigation, but all such litigation (not including proceedings before the Board) shall be subject to the direction and control of the Attorney General. In the appointment, selection, classification, and promotion of officers and employees of the Commissioner, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency.

"(c) The principal office of the Commissioner shall be in the District of Columbia, but he or his duly authorized representative may exercise any or all of the powers of the Commissioner at any place in the United States.

"(d) The Commissioner, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall from time to time make such rules and regulations as may be necessary or appropriate for carrying out his powers and duties.

"(e) To the extent that the Secretary of Labor determines to be practicable, the Commissioner shall utilize the bureaus and divisions of the Department of Labor for carrying out his powers and duties.

"(f) The Commissioner shall bring all actions to restrain violations of, or enforce, the provisions of this act and orders issued thereunder.

"INVESTIGATIONS AND INSPECTIONS

"SEC. 4. (a) The Commissioner or his designated representatives may enter and inspect such places, may inspect and make transcriptions of such records, may question such employees, and may investigate such facts, conditions, practices, or matters, as he may deem necessary or appropriate for the purpose of carrying out his powers and duties.

"(b) With the consent and cooperation of State agencies charged with the administration of State labor laws, the Commissioner may, for the purpose of carrying out his powers and duties, utilize the services of State and local agencies and their employees and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, may reimburse such State and local agencies and their employees for services rendered for such purposes.

"LABOR APPEALS BOARD

"SEC. 5. (a) There is established an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government to be known as the Labor Appeals Board. The Board shall be composed of nine members, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No more than five of the members of the Board shall be appointed from the same political party; no more than two of such members shall be persons who are not attorneys at law; and no more than one of such members shall be appointed from the same judicial circuit of the United States. The terms of office of the nine members first taking office shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of each calendar year, beginning with the calendar year 1940. The terms of office of all successors shall expire 9 years after the expiration of the terms for which their predecessors were appointed; but any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of his predecessor. Each member shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 a year. The members of the Board may be removed by the President, after notice and opportunity for public hearing, for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office, but for no other cause.

"(b) The Board shall annually designate one of its members to act as chairman. The chairman may from time to time divide the Board into divisions of one or more members, assign the members of the Board thereto, and in the case of a division of more than one member, designate the chief thereof. If a division, as a result of a vacancy or the absence or inability of a member assigned thereto to serve thereon, is composed of less than the number of members designated for the division, the chairman may assign other members to the division or direct the division to proceed with the transaction of business without such assignment of other members thereto.

"(c) A majority of the members of the Board or of any division thereof shall constitute a quorum of the Board or of such division, respectively. A vacancy in the Board or in any division thereof shall not impair the powers or affect the duties of the Board or division, or of the remaining members of the Board or division, respectively.

"(d) The principal office of the Board shall be in the District of Columbia, but the Board or any of its divisions or duly authorized representatives may exercise any of the powers of the Board at any place within the United States. The Board shall have a seal which shall be judicially noticed.

"(e) The Board is authorized in accordance with the civil-service laws to appoint, and in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to fix the compensation of, such employees as it deems necessary to carry out its powers and duties.

"(f) The Board shall from time to time make such rules and regulations as may be necessary or appropriate for carrying out its powers and duties.

"EXPENDITURES AND REPORTS

"SEC. 6. (a) The Commissioner and the Board, respectively, are authorized to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere, and for lawbooks, books of reference, and periodicals), as may be necessary for carrying out their powers and duties. All such expenditures shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by such persons as the Commissioner and the Board, respectively, may designate for that purpose.

"(b) The Commissioner, members of the Board, and their respective employees shall receive their traveling expenses and expenses for subsistence while traveling on duty and away from their designated stations, subject to such limitations as may be provided by law.

"(c) The Commissioner and the Board, respectively, shall submit annually in January reports to the President and to the Congress covering their activities for the preceding year, and including such information, data, and recommendations as they may deem advisable."

SEC. 3. Paragraph (2) of section 8 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended by striking out the words "pursuant to section 6 (a)."

SEC. 4. Subsection (c) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Whenever a question affecting commerce arises concerning the representation of employees, the Commissioner may investigate such question, and may take a secret ballot of employees or utilize any other suitable method of ascertaining the representatives duly designated or selected. In any such investigation an opportunity for hearing before the Board, after due notice to interested persons, shall be provided either in conjunction with a proceeding under section 10 or otherwise. After such an opportunity for hearing has been afforded the Board may certify to the parties, in writing, the names of the representatives that have been designated or selected."

SEC. 5. (a) Subsection (b) of section 10 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Whenever it is charged that any person has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair labor practice the Commissioner may make an investigation of such charge and may issue and cause to be served on such person and filed with the Board a complaint stating the charges in that respect. The Board shall fix a time and place for a hearing before the Board upon such complaint and shall notify the parties of the time and place so fixed. The person complained of may file with the Board and cause to be served upon the Commissioner an answer to the complaint and may appear in person or otherwise and give testimony at the hearing before the Board. The Board may, in its discretion, permit the complaint or answer in any proceeding before it to be amended at any time before the issuance of a final order in the proceedings. In the discretion of the Board, any person may be allowed to intervene in a proceeding before it and to give testimony. Testimony taken before the Board shall be reduced to writing, but the rules of evidence prevailing in courts of law or equity shall not be controlling in proceedings before the Board. The Board may hear argument from any person in its discretion."

(b) Subsection (c) of such section 10 is amended by striking out the first two sentences thereof.

(c) Subsection (e) of such section 10 is amended by—

(1) Striking out the word "Board", where it first appears in such subsection, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Commissioner."

(2) Striking out the words "and shall certify and file in the court a transcript", in the first sentence of such subsection, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "and shall file in the court a transcript, certified by the Board."

(d) Subsection (f) of such section 10 is amended by—

(1) Striking out the words "shall be forthwith served upon the Board" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "shall be forthwith served upon the Commissioner."

(2) Striking out the words "in the case of an application by the Board" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "in the case of an application by the Commissioner."

(3) Striking out the words "grant to the Board such temporary relief" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "grant such temporary relief."

SEC. 6. (a) Section 11 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended by striking out the first paragraph and paragraph No. (1) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 11. (1) Any member of the Board shall have power to issue subpoenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of any evidence that relates to any matter under investigation by the Commissioner or in question before the Board. Any member of the Board, or any person designated by it for such purposes, may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such evidence may be required from any place in the United States or any Territory or possession thereof, at any designated place of hearing."

(b) Paragraph No. (4) of such section 11 is amended by striking out the words "Board, its member, agent, or agency," where they first appear in such paragraph, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Commissioner or the Board or their authorized representatives."

(c) Paragraph No. (6) of such section 11 is amended to read as follows:

"(6) The several departments and agencies of the Government, when directed by the President, shall furnish to the Commissioner, or the Board, upon request, any records, papers, or information in their possession relating to any matter before the Commissioner or the Board."

SEC. 7. Section 12 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended by striking out the words "or any of its agents or agencies" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "or the Commissioner, or any of their authorized representatives."

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 8. (a) The Labor Relations Commissioner and the members of the Labor Appeals Board, authorized to be appointed by the amendments made by this act, shall be appointed within 60 days from the date of its enactment.

(b) The amendments made by this act, other than those authorizing the appointment of such Commissioner and such members, shall take effect when such Commissioner and majority of such members have taken office.

TRANSFER OF PERSONNEL AND PROPERTY

SEC. 9. (a) Such officers and employees, and such property (including office equipment and official records), of the National Labor Relations Board as the President shall determine and specify by Executive order are transferred to the Labor Relations Commissioner and the Labor Appeals Board, respectively, upon such date or dates as the President may specify in such Executive orders. The transfer of such personnel shall be without reduction in classification or compensation, except that this requirement shall not operate after the end of the fiscal year during which such transfer is made to prevent the adjustment of classification or compensation to conform to the duties to which such transferred personnel may be assigned. Such of the personnel so transferred as do not already possess a classified civil-service status shall not acquire such status except (1) upon recommendation of the Commissioner or the Board, as the case may be, within 1 year after such personnel have been so transferred and certification within such period by the Commissioner or the Board, as the case may be, to the Civil Service Commission that such personnel have served with merit for not less than 6 months prior to the transfer, and (2) upon passing such suitable noncompetitive examinations as the Civil Service Commission may prescribe.

(b) Such of the unexpended balances of appropriations available for use by the National Labor Relations Board as the President shall deem necessary and specify by Executive order are transferred to the Labor Relations Commissioner and the Labor Appeals Board, respectively, upon such dates as the President shall specify by Executive order, and shall be available for use by them in connection with the exercise and performance of their powers and duties.

EXISTING ORDERS AND PENDING PROCEEDINGS

SEC. 10. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, and regulations which have been issued or made by the National Labor Relations Board, and which are in effect at the time of the transfer of the functions of such Board under the provisions of this act, shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, set aside, or repealed by the Labor Relations Commissioner or the Labor Appeals Board, or by any court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(b) No investigation or proceeding begun by or before the National Labor Relations Board prior to the time of the transfer of its functions under this act shall terminate by reason of this act; but the Labor Relations Commissioner may continue any such investigation or proceeding begun by such Board, and any proceeding pending before such Board may be continued before the Labor Appeals Board with like effect as if such proceeding had been begun before the Labor Appeals Board.

(c) No suit, action, or other proceeding in any court, lawfully commenced by or against the National Labor Relations Board prior to the time of the transfer of its functions under this act shall abate by reason of such transfer, but the court, upon motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after such transfer, showing the necessity for the survival of such suit, action, or other proceeding, may allow the same to be maintained by or against the Labor Relations Commissioner.

(d) All records transferred to the Labor Relations Commissioner, or the Labor Appeals Board, under this act shall be available for use by them to the same extent as if such records were originally records of such Commissioner or such Board.

The memorandum presented by Mr. HOLMAN is as follows:

MEMORANDUM EXPLANATORY OF A BILL TO AMEND THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT WITH RESPECT TO THE METHOD OF ITS ADMINISTRATION

The bill does not alter or take away any of the substantive rights guaranteed to labor by the National Labor Relations Act. The bill does provide for the reorganization of the agency administering the act. The purpose of the bill is to vest the functions of investigation and prosecution under the act, on the one hand, and the quasi-judicial functions under the act, on the other hand, in agencies which are independent of each other.

A new division in the Department of Labor, called the Labor Relations Division, is established to exercise the functions of investigation and prosecution. The division is to be headed by a commissioner who is authorized to utilize the facilities of the Department of Labor to the extent which the Secretary of Labor determines to be practicable. In this way a duplication of the functions and administrative facilities of the Department of Labor in this field is avoided.

To exercise the quasi-judicial functions under the National Labor Relations Act the bill establishes a Labor Appeals Board. This Board is to be composed of nine members to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No more than five of the members are to be from the same political party; at least seven of them must be attorneys; and not more than one may be appointed from the same judicial circuit of the United States. The members are to have staggered terms of 9 years each. The Board may be divided into divisions for the performance of its work, and the Board can appoint hearing officers and other employees to exercise its functions at any place within the United States.

The employees of the division in the Department of Labor and the employees of the Board are made subject to the civil-service laws. The bill includes the ordinary provisions relating to administrative details and expenditures.

The amendments to the substantive provisions of the act are made by the bill merely for the purpose of dividing between the Commissioner and the Board the functions under the act. The plan to be followed is for the Commissioner to investigate complaints and institute proceedings before the Board for enforcement of the act. After a hearing, the Board makes the decision in the cases brought before it. Any party to the proceedings before the Board, including the Commissioner, who is dissatisfied with the decisions of the Board, may appeal to the courts in the same manner as is now provided by the act.

The existing National Labor Relations Board is abolished and its personnel and property transferred to the Commissioner and the new Board, to be divided between those two agencies in such manner as the President may determine and specify by Executive order.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 243) to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act to lands adjacent to the national forests in the State of Oregon, and that the bill may be indefinitely postponed. It is one of my own bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys is discharged from the further consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Oregon, and the bill is indefinitely postponed.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT—HOPS

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1332) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, with respect to orders and marketing agreements for hops, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

CONTINUATION OF INVESTIGATIONS BY JOINT COMMITTEE ON FORESTRY

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the special joint committee, which was authorized and directed to study and make investigation of the present and prospective situation with respect to the forest land of the United States, its condition, ownership, and management, as it affects a balanced timber budget, watershed protection, flood control, and the other commodities and social economic benefits which may be derived from such land, be authorized to continue the investigation begun under Senate Concurrent Resolution 31, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as were conferred upon it by Senate Concurrent Resolution 31 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and shall report to Congress as soon as practicable, and not later than January 3, 1940, the results of its investigation together with its recommendation for necessary legislation.

DIFFERENCE IN COSTS OF PRODUCTION AT HOME AND ABROAD

Mr. VANDENBERG. I submit a resolution which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The resolution (S. Res. 80), was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Whereas the amended act of June 12, 1934, describing the powers and duties of the United States Tariff Commission, particularly requires the Commission to determine the difference in costs of production at home and abroad in connection with any contemplated tariff changes; and

Whereas more than 1,000 rates of tariff duty have been reduced that before any such agreements are concluded "the President shall seek information and advice from the United States Tariff Commission;" and

Whereas more than 1,000 rates of tariff duty have been reduced as a result of these trade agreements:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is requested and directed to report to the Senate as soon as possible whether these tariff reductions result in tariff rates which are insufficient to offset the difference in costs of production at home and abroad, if such information is available.

SURVEY OF INDIAN CONDITIONS—EXPENSES

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 81), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, authorized by Resolution No. 79, agreed to February 2, 1928, and continued by subsequent resolutions, to make a general survey of the condition of the Indians in the United States, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $10,000 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized for such purpose.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

On motion of Mr. McNARY and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] be relieved from further service on the Committee on Patents, and that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] be assigned to service on that committee; and also that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] be relieved from further service on the Committee on Printing.

THE UNITED STATES AND DOCUMENTARY HISTORICAL PUBLICATION
(S. DOC. NO. 33)

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I present herewith an article entitled "The United States and Documentary Historical Publication," by Clarence E. Carter, which appears in edition No. 1, volume 25, No. 1, of the Mississippi Valley Historical Review, of June 1933, which I ask may be printed as a Senate document.

I will say that the recommendation comes to me from the Counselor of the State Department, and therefore I have every confidence that the article is of interest and worthy of publication as a document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF NATIONALITY LAWS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few days ago I conferred with the Counselor of the Department of State, Hon. R. Walton Moore, respecting a report concerning the Revision and Codification of the Nationality Laws of the United States compiled by an interdepartmental committee after several years of study. It seems to have been buried or to have been resting in the files of the Senate. Judge Moore has written me stating that he has had many requests for the draft code. It deals in part with immigration matters, and in my conversation with Judge Moore I indicated that perhaps it should go to the Committee on Immigration, and that committee, after examining it, might see fit to request authority to have it printed. He assented to that view. Pursuant to my conversation with him and in harmony with his views, I request that the message of the President dated June 13, 1938, with the accompanying documents and draft code, be rescued from obscurity, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMERICA'S FOREIGN POLICY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR NYE

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address by Senator NYE on the subject the Foreign Policy, on Sunday, February 12, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE AMERICAN IDEAL OF EDUCATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR DAVIS

[Mr. McNARY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator DAVIS at the general alumni meeting, Temple University, Philadelphia, Pa., on the occasion of Founders' Day exercises, February 15, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

LEGISLATION AFFECTING WHEAT AND CORN—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LUCAS

[Mr. TYDINGS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject of legislation affecting wheat and corn, delivered by Senator LUCAS at the annual convention of the American Farm Bureau Federation, New Orleans, La., December 13, 1938, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR MEAD BEFORE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CLUB OF NEW YORK

[Mr. MEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by himself before the National Democratic Club of New York on February 11, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

PERMANENT PUBLIC WORKS POLICY—STATEMENT BY SENATOR MEAD

[Mr. MEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by himself on the subject of a permanent public-works policy, which appears in the Appendix.]

LINCOLN DAY ADDRESS BY SENATOR WILEY

[Mr. McNARY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on Abraham Lincoln delivered by Senator WILEY at Fairmont, W. Va., on February 10, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

WOODROW WILSON—ADDRESS BY JAMES T. SHOTWELL

[Mr. SMATHERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on President Woodrow Wilson, by James T. Shotwell, which appears in the Appendix.]

BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY OF SUSAN B. ANTHONY

[Mr. FRAZIER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Mrs. Caroline L. Babcock, campaign secretary of the Woman's National Party, Washington, D. C., in commemoration of the birthday anniversary of Susan B. Anthony, which appears in the Appendix.]

MEANING OF DEMOCRACY—ADDRESS BY EDWARD STAFFORD

[Mr. GIBSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address by Edward Stafford on the subject What Does Democracy Mean? which appears in the Appendix.]

DEVELOPMENT OF THE AIRPLANE—ARTICLE BY HON. O. MAX GARDNER

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by O. Max Gardner relative to the development of the airplane, which appears in the Appendix.]

NATIONAL ARMAMENT—ARTICLE BY OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD

[Mr. NYE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Why Should We Arm Further?" written by Oswald Garrison Villard, and published in the New Year's issue, 1939, of America's Future, which appears in the Appendix.]

BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY—STATEMENT BY AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR

[Mr. BAILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor relative to business and industry, which appears in the Appendix.]

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND FORMER PRESIDENT HOOVER

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Record of February 15, 1939, entitled "To Appreciate Roosevelt—Remember Hoover," which appears in the Appendix.]

JUSTICE LOUIS D. BRANDEIS

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial relative to Mr. Justice Louis D.

Brandeis, published in the Philadelphia Record of February 15, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE ISLAND OF GUAM

[Mr. GIBSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the Navy Department relative to the island of Guam, which appears in the Appendix.]

REJECTION OF NOMINATION OF DISTRICT JUDGE FOR VIRGINIA

[Mr. BYRD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article published in the New York Times, February 12, 1939, and written by Mr. Carr V. Van Anda, in relation to the rejection of the nomination by the Senate of Judge Roberts to the Western District Court of Virginia, which appears in the Appendix.]

FARM RELIEF

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I introduce a bill on the farm question, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The bill (S. 1405) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, for the purpose of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in wheat and cotton, and providing for the orderly marketing of such commodities at fair prices in interstate and foreign commerce, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

I ask unanimous consent that I may explain and discuss the bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, this bill is presented for the purpose of guaranteeing the American market for the American farmer at an American price, and restoring to him the right to regulate his own production. I shall first explain the bill, then I shall show wherein it differs from the cost-of-production bill. I shall then compare it with the present law. Then I shall answer the arguments which have been advanced against it, and, finally, I shall offer some general arguments in favor of farm relief.

Mr. President, the title of the bill is as follows:

A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, for the purpose of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in wheat and cotton, and providing for the orderly marketing of such commodities at fair prices in interstate and foreign commerce.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

The bill is applicable only to wheat and cotton. Its primary purpose is to provide that farmers producing these two commodities shall receive fair prices for that part of their production which is consumed within the United States. Farmers may regulate their own production and produce what they like for disposal in the world markets at the prevailing world market prices. The bill is not made applicable to the 1939 crops of wheat and cotton, but begins its operation with the beginning of the marketing year for the 1940 crops.

PRICE BOTTOM PROVIDED

The prices to be paid to farmers for the portions of the crops which are consumed within the United States are $1.25 a bushel for wheat and 20 cents a pound for cotton, or the parity prices, if they should be higher, with increases or decreases in prices for wheat and cotton not of standard grade. These prices are referred to as "domestic prices."

METHOD OF DETERMINING ALLOTMENT

In order to provide that each farmer shall have a fair opportunity to share in the domestic market, it is necessary to fix some method for determining the quantity of wheat and cotton which each farmer can dispose of at the domestic price for consumption within the United States. This is done in the following manner:

PRODUCTION BASE

The Secretary of Agriculture, through local committees of farmers, establishes production bases for wheat and cotton for farms producing these commodities. These production bases are the quantities of wheat and cotton which would ordinarily be produced on the acreage on the farm which should, in accordance with sound farming practices, be devoted to such crops. When the production base for a farm is once established, it is retained indefinitely, although it may be adjusted upward or downward, or even discontinued, when such action is warranted by changes in circumstances. Thus the farmer knows with some degree of permanency the amount of the commodity which it is thought it is proper for him to raise on his farm.

ALLOTMENT IS PERCENTAGE OF PRODUCTION BASE

Before the planting season for each crop, the Secretary estimates the domestic consumption requirements for the next marketing year and proclaims a tentative percentage of the production bases which he estimates will be sufficient to meet such requirements. By applying this percentage to the production base for his farm, each farmer can estimate what part of his crop he will be able to sell at the domestic price. He can raise as much in addition as he pleases, but he is put on notice that for the additional amount he can expect to get only the world market price.

About 6 weeks before the beginning of each marketing year the Secretary makes his final determination of the percentage of the production bases which will be required for domestic consumption. By applying this percentage to the production base of each farm the domestic allotment for the farm is determined, except that the domestic allotment for the farm cannot be greater than the normal or actual production—whichever is greater—of the acreage actually planted.

Since the quantity of the commodity which can be sold at the domestic price is thus determined on the basis of the production base—the amount which should be raised on the farm—instead of on the basis of the actual production, no farmer is required or encouraged to engage in excessive production in order to retain his share of the domestic market.

TENANTS AND SMALL FARMERS PROTECTED

The domestic allotment for each farm is divided among the landlords, tenants, and sharecroppers in the proportion in which they are entitled to share in the proceeds of the crop. If the total allotments to any person for any year are for quantities of the commodities having a value in excess of $1,500, graduated reductions are made in the size of such allotments. Since the Secretary makes allowances for these graduated reductions in fixing the percentage of production bases needed for domestic use, the effect of this provision is to give much more of the domestic market to small farmers and correspondingly less to large-scale operators.

GOVERNMENT ACTS AS MARKETING AGENT

The farmer obtains the domestic price for his share of the domestic market by selling his domestic allotment to the Commodity Credit Corporation at local markets at the domestic price. He may sell additional quantities above his domestic allotment to the Corporation at the world price, less marketing expenses, or may sell them to private buyers, or dispose of them as he sees fit.

PROTECTION FROM CROP FAILURE

In case a farmer fails, by reason of crop failure, to produce a quantity of wheat or cotton equal to his domestic allotment, the Corporation will pay him an amount equal to the difference between the domestic price and the world market price for the quantity by which he fails to produce his domestic allotment. The Corporation will reimburse its funds by selling at the domestic price a like quantity of the commodity for which it has paid the world market price.

INCENTIVE FOR COMPLIANCE BY PROCESSORS

The Corporation, in disposing of the commodities acquired by it, will obtain the domestic price, plus expenses, for quantities which are to be consumed in the United States and will obtain the world price for quantities which are to be exported. In order to make sure that there will be purchased from the Corporation at domestic prices a quantity of the commodity equal to that consumed within the United States, so that the Corporation will not have to dispose of wheat and cotton at a loss, a tax at a rate equal to the domestic price is imposed on the processing of wheat or cotton, and a credit of 99 percent of the tax so imposed is allowed to the taxpayer for a quantity equal to that which he has purchased from the Corporation.

EVASION PREVENTED

In order to discourage processors from acquiring large stocks of wheat and cotton before the provisions of the bill go into effect, to be used thereafter, a tax is imposed on the processing of wheat and cotton acquired before such date at a rate equal to the difference between the prices actually paid and the domestic prices. In case products on which any tax under the bill has been paid are exported, the tax is refunded.

NO ACCUMULATION OF SURPLUS BY GOVERNMENT

To keep the Corporation from building up a large surplus, the bill requires that it dispose of the wheat and cotton which it purchases under the bill as rapidly as is consistent with orderly marketing, and limits the quantities which the Corporation can have on hand at the end of the marketing year.

PROTECTION OF MANUFACTURERS AND PROCESSORS

Provision is made for compensating taxes and tariff duties to offset any competitive disadvantages which might otherwise arise by reason of the operation of the bill.

The provisions of the present law providing for marketing quotas and loans on wheat and cotton are terminated as of the time the provisions of the bill become operative.

GENERAL PURPOSE

Mr. President, I wish now to give a further explanation of the bill, illustrating in greater detail. Of course, the bill applies only to wheat and cotton, because they are the heavy export crops, and at the present time wheat and cotton farmers are in great distress.

The purpose of this bill is to guarantee not less than 20 cents a pound for cotton and not less than $1.25 a bushel for wheat, for that part of the two crops which is used in the United States.

The bill places no restriction upon production of these commodities, but the farmer is put on notice that he cannot expect to receive more than the world market price for all that he sells above his allotment. Thus each farmer is guaranteed his share of the American market at an American price and is allowed to produce what he wants to above that for the world market at the world market price.

PRODUCTION BASE IS FOUNDATION FOR ALLOTMENT

Under the provisions of this bill, the Secretary of Agriculture shall establish for each farm a production base for wheat and cotton. The production base of each farm is determined by sound farming methods applied to that farm. That is, after taking into consideration crop rotation, the number of acres that should be devoted to soil building and soil-depleting crops, the number of acres that should be devoted to pasture, the number of acres that should be devoted to food and feed, and many other important factors, the Secretary, or his agents, determine the average number of bales of cotton, or the average number of bushels of wheat, which the farm could normally produce year after year under sound farm management. That is not the allotment, but it is a yardstick for determining the production base. This is a most important and fundamental provision of the bill. It is based upon scientific agriculture. It carries out the principle of the soil-conservation program.

Every wheat and cotton farm will be given a production base and that production base becomes a matter of record. This production base is the foundation on which allotments are made. The production base is not made in terms of acres but in terms of bales and bushels.

After the production base has been established for every wheat and cotton farm in the United States it will be a simple matter for the Secretary to determine the total national production base for these two commodities by simply adding all of the individual production bases in the United States.

EXAMPLE OF A COTTON FARMER

Let us take these commodities separately and see how this works. We may say, for example, that the total production base for cotton amounts to 12,000,000 bales. The Secretary then estimates that we will need, let us say, 6,000,000 bales of cotton for domestic use. Then the Secretary will announce that 50 percent of every farmer's cotton production base will be needed for domestic consumption the following year—not 50 percent of all that he produces, but 50 percent of his production base.

Then every farmer will know exactly how much his allotment is in terms of bales. For example, a farmer whose production base is 40 bales would know that his domestic allotment is 20 bales. He would know then that on 20 bales of his cotton he would receive not less than 20 cents a pound. He would also know that on what he raises above that he could not expect more than the world market price, which at present is about 8 cents a pound.

EXAMPLE OF A WHEAT FARMER

Let us now take wheat for an example. In like manner the Secretary adds the individual wheat bases and, let us say, he determines that 80 percent of the total national wheat base will be needed for domestic consumption.

Then, for example, let us say that a wheat farmer has a wheat base of 2,000 bushels. He will know that 80 percent of 2,000 bushels, or 1,600 bushels, is his domestic allotment in wheat. He would know that on 1,600 bushels of wheat he would receive $1.25 a bushel, but that on all he raised above that he would have to take the world market price, which is about 50 cents a bushel.

This production base remains a permanent record, and each year the Secretary announces the percent of this production base that will be needed for domestic use, and every farmer knows immediately just how much his domestic allotment is.

The establishment of a permanent and systematic method of determining each farmer's allotment makes for simplicity in administration and insures much more satisfaction from the standpoint of the farmer.

ADVANTAGE GIVEN FAMILY-SIZE FARM

Graduated reductions are provided in the bill for the allotments to any one individual in order to guarantee special aid to the family-size farm. The bill provides that when one farmer's total allotment figures $1,500, computed at the domestic market price, that the next $500 of his allotment shall be reduced 20 percent; and the next $500 shall be reduced 40 percent; and the next $500 reduced 60 percent, and all above that reduced 80 percent. This means that a farmer's allotment that would figure $3,500 would be reduced to $2,500, and that all of his allotment above that amount would be reduced 80 percent. This, of course, means that much more of the domestic market would be allotted to the small-unit farmers and that increasingly less would be allotted to the big-scale farmers.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not want in any way to interrupt the train of the Senator's very thoughtful remarks. However, I am wondering if some place in his remarks he is going to refer to the question of the attitude toward the new producer under his plan. The thing which has always troubled me about any crop-control program is the fact that it requires almost a certificate of convenience and necessity to permit new people to engage in a particular business, and I wonder if the Senator is going to advert to that phase of the question.

Mr. LEE. I am glad the Senator from Florida raised that question, because by the establishment of a production base it will not be necessary to have had a historical record in any crop in order to get a production base. That is the advantage of such a program.

Mr. PEPPER. So that if a new producer should want to enter the field he is one of those who would be allowed to enter the field?

Mr. LEE. That is correct. All he needs to do is to make application for a production base for his farm.

INCENTIVE FOR HOLDING SURPLUS ON FARM

The bill provides that a farmer may hold his surplus cotton and wheat and turn it in as part of his domestic allotment the next year. That does not mean that his allotment would be increased the following year, but it means that he can use the surplus from the previous year as his domestic allotment.

This is the way it would work: Suppose a farmer's domestic allotment is 20 bales and he produced 30 bales. For the 20 bales of his domestic allotment he would receive 20 cents a pound. On the 10-bale surplus he would receive at present about 8 cents a pound, but by holding those 10 bales surplus over a year he would be guaranteed 20 cents a pound on them. Since there are so many hazards in farming, he would very likely reason that it would be wise for him to hold those 10 bales because he might have a crop failure.

Then, too, he would have enough cash from the 20 bales he had sold at 20 cents a pound so that he would not be forced to sell the 10 surplus bales. It would be as good as a bank account, because the Government guarantees him 20 cents a pound for his domestic allotment the next year. Of course, he might have a bumper crop the next year and want to sell some of his cotton on the world market and hold back just enough to insure him against a crop failure.

Under the provisions of this bill, he can sell as much as he wants to on the world market; but the chances are that every farmer would hold back a reasonable surplus on his farm. It would add to his feeling of security. It would be the best kind of crop insurance. It would be establishing an ever-normal granary where the ever-normal granary ought to be, that is, on the farms throughout the Nation.

It would work even better with wheat, because every farmer would like to be in a position to hold a surplus of grain on his farm.

Suppose, for example, a farmer's allotment of wheat is 1,600 bushels, but he produces 2,600 bushels. He would then have 1,000 bushels of wheat which he could sell on the world market at 50 cents a bushel, or which he could hold and turn in as part of his allotment the next year for $1.25 a bushel. He would very likely reason that it would be sensible for him to store this 1,000 bushels of wheat on his farm, then in case of crop failure, he would have that much to fall back on. He could also feed that wheat to his work stock. He could grind it and feed it to his milk cows. He could fatten hogs on it. He could even grind it and use it for bread.

A surplus of grain on the farm gives any farmer a feeling of security, particularly when there is a guarantee that he can get $1.25 a bushel for it the next marketing year.

Of course, if the farmer produces considerably more than this allotment, either in the case of wheat or cotton, he would want to sell some of his surplus on the world market, and under the provisions of the bill, he would be able to sell all he wanted to.

But it is reasonable to believe that a majority of the farmers, under the provisions of the bill, would hold on the farms enough of the surplus to insure not only the farmers themselves but the Nation generally of an ever-normal supply of these two commodities.

THE GOVERNMENT SERVES AS A MARKETING AGENT

The bill further provides that the Commodity Credit Corporation shall purchase all cotton and wheat offered to it for sale by the producers. It provides that the Corporation shall pay the domestic price for the cotton and wheat which has been designated for domestic use, and that it shall pay the world market price—less a small charge to pay the cost of marketing—for all the wheat and cotton which is not designated for domestic use.

The bill does not provide that the farmer must sell his cotton or wheat to the Corporation, but leaves it so that any person can buy and sell these two commodities. It allows the speculators and the brokers to continue to buy, and the farmer can sell to whomever he wishes.

NO ACCUMULATION OF SURPLUS BY GOVERNMENT

This is an important point, that no accumulation of a commodity can result under the bill. The bill also provides that the Corporation must sell these commodities in an orderly manner but as rapidly as it buys them in order to prevent a surplus from accumulating. That means that if cotton goes to 3 cents a pound on the world market, the Corporation will pay the farmer 3 cents a pound—less a small charge—for all that the farmer offers for sale above his domestic allotment.

That naturally would cause the farmer to increase his production if the world market price went up, which is good, and as it should be, because as the world market price becomes attractive the farmer would furnish more for the world market price. As the world market price went down the farmer would voluntarily curtail his own production. That can happen only when you have a guaranty of security from some other direction. In other words, if the farmer depends solely on the world market for his goods it has the opposite effect. That is, when the world market price goes down—and that is the only market the farmer has—he must increase his production in order to meet the necessary and fixed charges that he must meet. Therefore when we have another provision for economic sustenance, such as a guaranty of a domestic market at a fair price, then the farmer can regulate his own production with the world market price, increasing it when the price is attractive, and decreasing it when the price is not attractive, and that is exactly the way it will work under this bill.

The device used to enforce this provision is a processing tax. A processing tax equal to the domestic price is laid upon all wheat and cotton processed by the millers and the processors. A processing tax of $1.25 a bushel for wheat and 20 cents a pound for cotton is placed upon the processors for all wheat and cotton they process, but a credit of 99 percent of this tax is allowed if all the wheat and cotton which the manufacturers purchase is bought through the Corporation. The reason for maintaining the 1 percent is to insure that the manufacturer will keep books, which he would be required to do. Also, the 1 percent will help pay the cost of operation. Of course, the tax would be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The total tax would never be collected. That is, a credit is allowed, without going through the process of collecting it and returning it, which, of course, is a desirable device in that respect. In other words, the manufacturer purchases his wheat and cotton through the Corporation and pays 20 cents a pound for the cotton and $1.25 a bushel for the wheat. The full tax is never collected, but 99-percent credit is allowed and only 1 percent is actually collected.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator's bill propose that the Corporation purchase all the cotton and all the wheat?

Mr. LEE. Yes and no. It will purchase all of it if the farmer finds no market elsewhere; however, there is no requirement that the Corporation purchase any other than that which is offered to it by the farmer.

Mr. ELLENDER. What method does the Senator propose for financing the operation insofar as the Corporation is concerned?

Mr. LEE. Of course, there would be a revolving fund, which would turn over and over. I presume the Corporation would finance the operation in somewhat the same manner as loans on cotton are financed at the present time.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understand the bill, if a farmer is desirous of selling his crop, the Corporation will pay him 20 cents a pound, let us say, on the cotton which is consumed domestically. Is that correct?

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Where will the Corporation obtain the money to pay the farmer?

Mr. LEE. Of course, it would have to obtain it by an appropriation, if it did not have enough on hand at the time.

The fund would be a revolving fund, because the Corporation then would turn around and sell the commodity to the manufacturer at the domestic price, plus the cost of administering the act. From the standpoint of appropriation from the Treasury, the operation would cost nothing except the amount necessary to establish a revolving fund.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator will grant that considerable money would be required to begin the operation. How much does the bill provide as initial capital for the Corporation?

Mr. LEE. It leaves the Corporation and its regulations just as they are at present. It makes no changes in that regard.

Mr. ELLENDER. If the proposed bill should be enacted, how much would the average cotton farmer of the South receive in dollars and cents?

Mr. LEE. I hope the Senator will defer that question until a little later in my discussion, when I will take it up with him.

There is a reason for allowing the free flow of cotton, and not requiring the Corporation to buy only that used domestically. There are something like 700 different grades of cotton. The manufacturer might want some cotton which was not in the particular amount set aside as the domestic allotment. Therefore, under the provisions of the bill the manufacturer or processor can buy cotton or wheat anywhere, but the provision is that it can buy from or through the Corporation.

Mr. ELLENDER. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. How will it be possible to check up on the amount of cotton that a farmer sells for domestic consumption in comparison to what he should sell for export, if it is not all sold through the Corporation?

Mr. LEE. The Corporation is the only marketing agent which will pay him the domestic price. Therefore he naturally would sell it where he would get the domestic price. He would be foolish to sell it anywhere else, when the Corporation would give him 20 cents a pound, and nobody else would offer him more than the world price.

Mr. ELLENDER. At the fixed price, would the manufacturer then be compelled to pay the farmer 20 cents a pound?

Mr. LEE. That is correct. He would not be compelled, except by indirection. If he should not buy it, or if he bought somewhere else, he would have to pay the tax of 20 cents a pound, so he would be out what he had paid originally. However, if he buys it through the Corporation, he is refunded 99 percent of the tax.

Mr. ELLENDER. So, finally, whether the manufacturer purchases the cotton directly from the Corporation or from the farmer, it must all be accounted for through the Corporation.

Mr. LEE. Not necessarily. The one point where any effort to bootleg would be caught would be at the processing point. That is the throat through which all we are interested in from the standpoint of the domestic market must go, and that is where the law catches it.

Mr. ELLENDER. Who would impose the 20-cent tax if the manufacturer did not have to purchase through the Corporation, or if the Corporation were not given the opportunity of checking up on the cotton which was not purchased from it?

Mr. LEE. I am not sure that I understand the Senator's question, but all cotton must be processed. It is no good unless it is processed. There is one point of processing, and that is the processor.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. LEE. No cotton is used in the United States which is not processed. Therefore, when we catch it at the processing point, we catch all of it that is used domestically.

Mr. ELLENDER. If the processor is permitted to purchase cotton both from the farmer and from the Corporation, how can a check be kept on the amount sold by a farmer through the Corporation or through the processor?

Mr. LEE. It would be satisfactory to me if the manufacturer wanted to buy cotton from the farmer and pay a tax of 20 cents a pound, in addition to what he paid the farmer, because he did not comply with the law and buy it through the Corporation.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator feels that the imposition of the 20-cent tax will force the processor to buy only through the Corporation?

Mr. LEE. With respect to what he buys for domestic use, yes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. If I understand the point which the Senator from Oklahoma has just been discussing with the Senator from Louisiana, the manufacturer will pay a tax on every bale of cotton he buys, from whatever source. Is that correct?

Mr. LEE. That is on every bale that he processes, yes.

Mr. HATCH. On every bale that he processes.

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. And if he wants to take advantage of his purchases from the Commodity Credit Corporation, all he has to do is to show that he purchased so many bales from the Commodity Credit Corporation, and, as to that cotton, he receives a rebate approximately equal to the tax.

Mr. LEE. He receives a credit, which is a little more advantageous than a rebate, because the money does not have to change hands.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wanted to know whether or not I understood the point.

Mr. LEE. The manufacturers and processors of wheat and cotton are protected by provisions in the bill for compensating taxes and adjustments in tariffs to offset the disadvantages in competition caused by the difference between the domestic and world price of these commodities. There is also a provision which allows the manufacturers to buy at the world price for their export trade, or to receive rebates on exported commodities for which they had previously paid the domestic price.

I now wish to make a comparison of this bill with the cost-of-production bill introduced at this session of Congress. In the first place, the cost-of-production bill has one desirable feature. It contemplates two markets, a world market and a domestic market, which, in my opinion, is necessary for the proper and logical approach to the farm problem as respects export farm commodities such as wheat and cotton. However, it has five disadvantages. I may say that it is somewhat like, if not identical with, the bill which was called the McAdoo-Eicher bill last year, which I supported, and which I would support again, as between the present law and that bill, because it does contemplate the two markets and makes a distinction between them. However, it has five major objections which, in my opinion, make it far from a perfect bill.

First, it covers all crops amounting to $10,000,000 or more. That provision is too arbitrary. I recognize that that is not beyond remedy, but it is too arbitrary, because one year a crop might be under the law and the next year it might be out from under the law, because it would not be a $10,000,000 crop. But, of course, that could be amended. Furthermore, it includes many crops which have no export trade and have never had any export trade, and with respect to which an export business is not contemplated. Furthermore, it includes many crops of a very perishable nature, and therefore it would be very difficult of administration. The crops it covers are too arbitrary and not based upon a logical reason, such as we find in the case of the two heavy export crops of wheat and cotton.

Second, there is a difficulty in determining what is the cost of production. There again I think that difficulty could be surmounted. If a thousand men figured the cost of production, there would probably be a thousand different answers; and I would probably be willing to take any one of them, as the farmer would today, since such answer would likely be in excess of the present world market price. Therefore, that is not an insurmountable objection to it, but it is a difficulty.

The bill which I have just offered fixes a definite bottom of 20 cents a pound for cotton. That is not an arbitrary price. As a matter of fact, if we fixed it in relation to the spirit and the letter of the wage and hour law we would make the price for cotton 25 cents a pound. Why? Because it takes a man-hour of labor to produce 1 pound of lint cotton. Therefore, if we should carry out the spirit and letter of the wage-hour law we would fix the price of cotton at 25 instead of 20 cents a pound. However, 20 cents a pound seems to be reasonable. Some think it is high, but when it is considered that it would be for only the amount used domestically, then the necessity may be seen for allowing a fair and reasonable price, or else we would not be any better off than we would be if we should take the world market price. The same argument relates to the dollar-and-a-quarter price for a bushel of wheat. Those prices are based upon the figures and the history during time when the farmer was on a parity basis, whereas the cost of production would be more difficult to determine.

Thirdly, the cost-of-production bill which has been introduced by Senator FRAZIER and others would increase production tremendously; in fact, it would offer an invitation to every farmer to increase his production. This is how that would work: If I have a thousand bushels of wheat and I get the cost-of-production price for 800 bushels, or 80 percent of the quantity, the next year I would raise all I could raise, because it would be profitable for me to do so even if I had to throw away 20 percent of the production.

Let us see how this cost-of-production bill would work. It provides that the Secretary shall determine at a certain time how much wheat will be needed domestically. If that need appears to be 80 percent of the then growing crop, or the crop that is coming up, then the Secretary will so announce and every farmer will sell 80 percent of his crop at the cost-of-production price, turn the other 20 percent in to the Government, and receive a receipt for it. Then the Government will sell it when it can and return the money to the farmer.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President—

Mr. LEE. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does not the Senator's bill contain the same provision as that in the pending farm bill which was introduced by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]? The Secretary would estimate in advance of production the amount of wheat that could be planted and upon which cost of production would be paid, and the rest of it would be sold on the world market. How does that differ from the proposal of the Senator insofar as wheat is concerned?

Mr. LEE. At first observation there appears to be a similarity, but, in reality, there is a vast difference because of the production base which I have described. The farmer's allotment is a definite fixed number of bushels of wheat, which is a percentage of his production base, which itself is a fixed figure, whereas the cost-of-production bill offered by the Senator from North Dakota would apply to 80 percent of all the wheat produced. The bill which I have introduced this morning would apply to 80 percent of the farmer's production base for wheat, which is vastly different and works differently. There would be no incentive for the farmer under the domestic-allotment bill which I have introduced to increase his production, for he would not get any more of the domestic market by doing so, while under the so-called Frazier bill by increasing his production he would get in the same ratio that much more of the domestic market.

Mr. ELLENDER. But still, under the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma, as well as under the so-called Frazier bill, the farmer would get the cost of production—under the so-called Frazier bill and under the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma $1.25—for what is consumed domestically.

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Then what difference is there?

Mr. LEE. The point I was making—and the Senator does not want to misunderstand me as saying that I feel the so-called Frazier bill is not an improvement over the present law—was that under the so-called Frazier bill there is a definite incentive for the farmer to increase his production, because if he gets $1.25 a bushel for 80 percent of his wheat, no matter whether it is a thousand bushels or 5,000 bushels, he is going to produce 5,000 bushels. So there is an invitation to increase production. The farmers would plow up the face of the earth, because, if for 50 percent of all the cotton they produced they could get the cost of production, of course, they would keep on increasing production. In the long run, the manner in which the so-called Frazier bill would operate would be that each year the Secretary would have to announce a percentage which would be lower and lower and lower. That would be too far off to provide a smooth working plan, and, sooner or later, it would run amuck just like the present one. Why? Because of the incentive to increase production in an unreasonable manner.

Fourthly, the so-called cost-of-production bill, introduced by the Senator from North Dakota, does not take care of the little farmer or one who operates a family-size farm. It makes his economic position relatively worse as compared with that of the big farmer. For instance, the cost per bushel for producing a bushel of wheat on a small family-size farm is greater than the cost per bushel of producing a bushel of wheat on a big power farm. Therefore, when you help the little fellow a little you help the big fellow more, and you have widened the difference between the big fellow and the little fellow. The result would soon be that all the little farms would be for sale and would be purchased by big corporate, syndicated farms and put on that basis because their cost per unit is lower and therefore their net profit under that bill would be greater.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield further to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. The price the Senator has fixed of $1.25 will apply to the big farmer as well as the little farmer?

Mr. LEE. Up to $1,500. Then there are graduated reductions. It gives much more of the domestic market to the farmer operating a family-size farm and correspondingly less to the big syndicated farmers. That is an advantage over the Frazier cost-of-production bill. I will say to the Senator that I have tried, with all the energy I could command, to work out a similar provision for the cost-of-production bill, but I could not work out an amendment that could be applied to it because of the requirement in the bill that a man must sell all his commodities in order to sell all of his domestic allotment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the limit of $1,500 apply to the cotton farmer as well as to the wheat farmer?

Mr. LEE. It applies to both of them.

Mr. ELLENDER. Is the Senator going to discuss the cotton feature?

Mr. LEE. I should prefer, first, to get through with the matter I am now discussing.

Mr. ELLENDER. Very well; I will ask the Senator some questions later.

Mr. LEE. Fifthly, perhaps the main objection to the Frazier-Lemke cost-of-production bill is that it forces the total crop upon the market. Why? Because a farmer cannot be paid for the domestic part of his crop without selling the export part also, for under the device for figuring it, when a farmer takes a load of wheat to town it is not earmarked domestic wheat or export wheat; it is 80 percent domestic and 20 percent export. So when he sells the wheat the man who makes the calculation at the elevator figures 80 percent of the wheat at the cost-of-production price and gives the farmer a receipt for the other 20 percent, which is turned over to a Government corporation, and the farmer will hope some day to get something back out of that. Therefore, before he can enjoy his domestic price, he must sell his export portion also. I submit that is a bad thing, because we ought to have the surplus stored on the farm. If we have the surplus accumulated in the warehouses and earmarked and identified and cataloged and file cased we give all the information necessary to the speculator so that he can gamble on these two commodities and run the price up and down to the confusion of business and to the farmers' loss. Furthermore, a visible supply is much more depressing to the market; therefore, if we can have a device that will keep the surplus on the farm, the cotton bales hidden away in the chicken sheds, and the wheat stored in granaries and bins on the farms, then we have the commodities away from view so that the speculator does not know exactly how much there is; and, consequently, when the price goes up, this hidden surplus comes to light and is fed into the market as the world price becomes attractive. In addition to that we have then security on the farm, and that means national security.

For these five reasons I feel that the so-called cost-of-production bill does not meet the need for a farm bill.

I desire to point out what I think is the fundamental difference between the present law and both of these other proposals.

Both of these proposals contemplate two markets. The present law does not, and I think that is its fundamental weakness. The present farm program has many splendid features, but it also has some undesirable features, and therefore should be amended, first, by substituting the domestic-allotment plan for all crop-control provisions except those connected with soil conservation.

The fallacy of the present crop-reduction program is that we are trying to reduce American production and not to raise the whole world-price level. If production in all the countries were reduced proportionately, there would be some justice in such a policy; but we reduce, and the others increase. We retreat, and they advance. Thus we gradually surrender our foreign trade.

America produces a fractional part of the world consumption. Therefore, just to reduce that fractional part enough to raise the entire world-price level is like trying to raise the water in a lock without separating it entirely from the larger body of water. The loans on cotton today are just high enough to permit our competitors to undersell us, and not high enough to benefit the farmers.

Trying to solve the farm problem without separating the home market from the foreign market is like trying to treat a man who is suffering with two opposite ailments such as low blood pressure and nervousness. If the doctor gives him something to quiet his nerves, it depresses his blood pressure still further. If the doctor gives him something to stimulate his blood pressure, it aggravates his nervousness. If we raise the price of cotton in order to help the American farmer, we lose our foreign trade. If we lower the price of cotton in order to hold our foreign trade, we ruin the American farmer. Therefore, it is necessary to separate the home market from the foreign market, and this is exactly what is proposed under the domestic-allotment bill.

Now, I come to the point the Senator from Louisiana had in mind. I make the point that the domestic-allotment plan would give the farmer more income than the present law.

I have seen some arguments intended to answer that claim; and in each one of those arguments there was not added to the farmer's income under the domestic-allotment plan the soil-conservation payments. But since this plan does not change the soil-conservation payments, allowance must be made for the soil-conservation payments, and they must be added to the farmer's income.

In the last argument that I saw that was made against the domestic-allotment plan—it was argued the income of the farmer would be lower under it than under the present plan—those making that argument figured only on the domestic-allotment amount, and did not figure on any surplus that the farmer would produce and sell at the world market price. Therefore that surplus must be added and then we get the aggregate.

I yield to the Senator from Louisiana on that point, as I understood that was the point he had in mind.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the question I asked a while ago was this: How much will the average small cotton farmer of the South receive under the Senator's plan? I assume he has the figures on that point.

Mr. LEE. I have not figured the amount. It would be an estimate; but I knew that the farmer would be so much better off at 20 cents a pound for the portion of his cotton that we use in this country that I did not think it necessary to figure what the total amount would be. It would be an estimate, anyway, and the Senator's guess would be as good as mine or that of anybody else.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator know how much cotton we consume domestically in this country?

Mr. LEE. The domestic consumption varies a little every year. I know the total figures are given from time to time, as the Senator does. In round numbers, the domestic consumption ranges from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 bales.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let us assume that the domestic consumption is 6,000,000 bales. How much of that would the average small farmer of the South be allotted as his pro rata share of domestic consumption?

Mr. LEE. That would vary.

Mr. ELLENDER. I say, how much would each be allotted?

Mr. LEE. I have not made any calculations along that line, but each one would receive more for his product than he does at present. If the 6,000,000 bales were figured at 20 cents a pound, the farmer would get more than twice as much as he does when it is figured at 8 cents a pound. I can see that without making any calculation of the total.

Mr. ELLENDER. It is my understanding that there are in the South 2,300,000 cotton farmers, including large and small farmers. The Senator's plan would give to the large farmer his proportionate share of the domestic consumption; would it not?

Mr. LEE. That, again, is where the Senator is incorrect. There is a graduated reduction provision which provides that the big-scale farmer would not be allotted as much and the little farmer would be allotted more.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand; but he would be allotted quite a good deal more than would the small farmer, depending on the size of his farm; would he not?

Mr. LEE. Not a good deal more. He would be allotted some more.

Mr. ELLENDER. Has the Senator any idea how many bales of cotton the average small farmer would be allotted for domestic consumption under the Senator's plan? Would it be in excess of one bale?

Mr. LEE. I have not figured that, because that is a matter which would be determined entirely by the production base of the farm.

Mr. ELLENDER. Has the Senator any idea how many bales are allotted under the present measure to each farmer when the farmers are permitted to produce in the aggregate as many as 12,000,000 bales?

Mr. LEE. The Senator knows that that amount ranges from small to great.

Mr. ELLENDER. It would range from about a bale to about three bales. So if the Senator's plan should go through, the average southern farmer would be allotted about a bale to a bale and a half at 20 cents per pound, and he would have to sell the balance at whatever he could get for it. I feel confident that his returns would not be as much as he is getting under the present law.

Mr. LEE. I do not know what mathematical basis the Senator has in mind when he figures that the farmer would get less at 20 cents a pound than he would at 8 cents a pound.

I hope now the Senator will allow me to proceed. I desire not to yield further at this time. With the Senator's kind permission we will continue the debate on this point at another time.

Furthermore, we are at the end of our rope under the present plan. The present plan is like a toboggan ride! It is nice when you are starting down, but, oh, boy, when you have to walk back up the hill. We have been on a joy ride, and this joy ride has resulted in a top-heavy surplus of 11,000,000 bales of cotton that the Government has tied up. We did not learn anything from the old farm board. We did not learn that when we lend on cotton, we stop it from flowing in the channels of trade.

The Senator from Louisiana proposes to show that under his figures the farmer is doing better this year; but what about next year, with 11,000,000 bales hanging over the market? What are we going to do with that carry-over? Something must be done with it. If we sell it, the world market price will go on a toboggan. If we continue to hold it, it will bankrupt the Government. So the Senator sees we are now at the end of our toboggan ride, and we shall have to get out and walk back up the hill under the present program, no matter what are the figures of last year; and even with last year's figures, compared to the plan of 20 cents a pound for what we consume this year, they are not reasonable.

I am reminded of the fellow who furnished a whole room in his house with soap wrappers. You may be collectors of coupons or soap wrappers or green stamps. This fellow saved so many soap wrappers that he furnished a whole room in his new seven-room house. Another man came to see him, and the owner showed the room to him, he was so proud of it. The friend said, "Well, what about the other rooms?" The owner of the house said, "Oh, they are all full of soap." [Laughter.] That is the situation we are in with the accumulation of cotton piled on cotton, and a surplus piled on surplus in wheat.

Third, this plan would restore the farmer's independence by establishing a permanent method of determining a farmer's allotment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I do not want to interrupt the Senator. I am sorry we cannot complete our routine morning business. I believe the Senator asked unanimous consent to address the Senate for 40 minutes. That was just an hour ago.

Mr. LEE. I did not know that I put a time limit on myself in the unanimous-consent request. I made an estimate of the time I would require, and I have yielded. I will say to the Senator that I believe I can finish in a very few minutes.

Mr. McNARY. I am tremendously interested in the discussion of the Senator. It is proceeding by unanimous consent, however, and I should like to conclude the routine morning business if the Senator is going to speak at length.

Mr. LEE. I will say to the Senator that I shall finish in a very few minutes.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. LEE. Under the domestic-allotment plan we would reestablish the independence of the farmer.

Do you know why the farmer is out there on the farm, trying to scratch a living out of the ground? It is because he wants to be independent. He wants to be his own boss. If he did not, he would quit there, and go to town somewhere, and get a job where somebody else would boss him. The farmer is the last individualist left; and I think that is an individualism worth preserving. Under this bill the farmer may raise what he wants to raise, as much as he wants to raise, and wherever he wants to raise it. Under this bill the machinery for making allotments is worked out on a scientific basis that has a systematic approach, that gets away from a horde of fellows coming around a farmer's farm and measuring his land and quarreling with him about how much he may grow, and where he may grow it. This bill removes all of that, and restores to him a feeling of independence.

Again, under this plan we would have an opportunity to regain our foreign trade, which we have lost during the past few years. I shall not discuss that question at length at this time, but shall do so on another occasion.

Again, the domestic-allotment plan would increase employment in the United States, because the production of enough wheat and cotton for the export trade would mean employment for those who produce it; but with our present plan of cutting down and fast approaching the point where we are producing farm commodities only for use in the United States—and that is the point we shall reach some day if we do not change the policy—we are putting men out of employment by the million.

Under the proposal introduced today, we would not abandon or repeal the good provisions of the present law. We would retain, first, the freight-rate adjustment provision in the law, because it is good.

Second, we would retain the provision for finding new markets and new uses for farm commodities, because it is good.

Finally, we would vitalize the soil-conservation program by basing the law upon a scientific determination of what constitutes a production base for these different commodities.

I shall now answer briefly some of the arguments which have been advanced against the domestic-allotment plan. One argument is that under the domestic-allotment plan we would ship our fertility abroad. Our fertility has not been shipped away; it has been washed away because of poor farm management. With the application of proper soil treatment and proper farming methods we can retain the fertility of the soil and produce all we wish to produce. In the Old World some of the richest lands in cultivation have been in cultivation for thousands of years and they are more fertile today than when they were first plowed up, which entirely explodes the argument that we would be shipping our fertility abroad.

Under the proposed program, by establishing a production base bottomed upon sound farming principles, we would be moving toward a perfect ideal of producing on a farm only what the farm ought to produce in keeping with good farming practices, and therefore not depleting our soil fertility.

Another argument advanced against the so-called two-price system—that is, of having one price for America and another price abroad—is that by such a program we would be subsidizing the foreign consumer and making the American consumer pay for it. In other words the argument has been advanced, that we would be taxing the American consumer to subsidize the consumer abroad, and in my opinion that is not a very substantial argument at this late date.

Had it been thought of when protective tariffs first made it possible for the manufacturer to sell his commodities abroad more cheaply than he sells them at home, it would have been more appropriate to suggest it then than to bring it up now, after 150 years' operation of a two-price system enjoyed by the manufacturer and paid for by the American consumer. But now that we want to apply the same system to agriculture, and let the farmer enjoy a higher price for domestically consumed goods, the argument seems to be late in arriving, and fails to be very impressive.

The price of manufactured articles which every farmer must buy is artificially boosted because of the protective tariff. Therefore, it is only fair that the Government artificially raise the price of that portion of farm commodities which we use in this country. Manufacturers of farm implements in America charge the American farmer more for farm implements than they charge the farmers of other countries, for the very same implements. Therefore it is only fair that the farmer should enjoy an American price for that portion of his crop consumed in America, just as the manufacturer enjoys an artificially higher price by virtue of the tariff. Just as we have given the manufacturer a tariff for 150 years I propose that we now give the farmer a tariff.

The foreigner is on a lower standard of living than is the American. The foreigner has only so much with which to buy bread, for instance, and if he cannot get bread at that price, then he cannot get bread. Therefore we are confronted with this dilemma: We must either sell to the foreigner at a price which he can pay, or we must stack commodities up in this country, and not only starve the foreigners to death because of a shortage of the commodity but starve the Americans to death because of a surplus of the commodity. To me that seems a short-sighted and very selfish policy.

Let me refer to another important point in that regard: One of the reasons why the world is today on fire with threats of war is found in the economic conditions of the people abroad. Some people simply refuse to take starvation sitting down. The fact that people cannot get food at prices they can pay is one of the causes of restlessness over the world today. If we would sell to them at prices they could pay, we would increase our gross national income and they would be able to buy food and clothes for their own needs. This would relieve much of the internal pressure in foreign countries. If we feed them, we might not have to fight them. It might be easier to feed them at prices they are able to pay than to fight them, particularly when it would increase our national income as well as help solve one of our most difficult problems.

Another objection which is raised to this plan is that it would result in overproduction. In my opinion, there is as yet no such thing as overproduction. I do not say that we could not reach the point of overproduction. But so far I do not believe that we have reached that point. Dr. Sibling, of the Department of Agriculture, in 1935 made a survey of the United States and reported that if all families of the United States had a balanced menu today—that is, enough to eat—it would take 43,000,000 acres more in cultivation in the United States to produce the necessary amount of food. In the light of that it seems to me it is almost immoral to deliberately reduce the food supply when people in our country are hungry merely because they do not have the buying power with which to purchase what we produce. I do not see any such thing as overproduction. Under the plan proposed there would be a voluntary regulation of production. The farmer would have enough to live on from his domestic allotment and therefore he would be in a position where he could regulate his production above that. He has never before had a chance to choose between profitable production and unprofitable production. It has all been unprofitable; therefore he has been forced to increase production in order to meet certain fixed charges, such as interest payments, taxes, and so forth, rather than enjoy the opportunity of regulating production to meet demand.

ANTIDUMPING RETALIATION NOT LIKELY

There has been the argument that if we should adopt the domestic allotment plan it would result in antidumping retaliation on the part of other countries.

There are those who are agreeable to the domestic-allotment plan so far as concerns providing a fair price for that part of the farmer's crop that we use in this country, but who feel that unlimited production would result in a greater surplus, which would be considered dumping by other nations, and other nations would retaliate with antidumping laws.

I wish to answer this antidumping argument. First, the United States is the only nation on the face of the earth, I believe, which has a "dumping conscience." Other nations have never appeared to be conscience-stricken over dumping. They have sold where they could get buyers.

Second, how can it be considered dumping unless we subsidize the sale of the surplus? If we merely let the surplus seek its level in the world market and sell to those who are willing to buy, how could that be considered dumping? The surplus would be handled by speculators who would want to sell their cotton, but who would also want to get as much for it as possible. It is a certainty that the concerns which would handle American cotton are not going to cut down the price of cotton a fraction of a cent more than is necessary in order to turn the deal. Therefore I cannot interpret the natural flow of cotton into the channels of trade in that manner as dumping.

Third, commerce is cold-blooded arithmetic. It is seldom based on sentiment. Buyers buy where they can buy the cheapest and sell where they can get the most. Therefore it is not likely that the nations which buy our cotton would advocate antidumping laws against the United States just because they are able to buy cotton a fraction cheaper in the United States than elsewhere.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether he is on the last page of his manuscript?

Mr. LEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Is the Senator about ready to conclude? Otherwise, I must invoke the rule.

Mr. LEE. I am about to conclude, if the Senator will allow me to finish this last page.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator is on the last page, I shall not invoke the rule, but I wish to say that in the future there will be no unanimous-consent agreements for speeches during the morning hour until the routine business has been concluded. It is only by consent of the Senate that the able Senator is proceeding.

Mr. LEE. I realize that.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. The Senator may proceed to finish his last page.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, the fourth point is that we cannot sell our products to those nations that have surpluses in those products. Only those nations which have surpluses of their own to sell would object to our selling our commodities in their markets. The only nations which would be likely to retaliate with antidumping laws would be those nations which have surpluses of their own, and since we are unable to sell to them because they already have enough there seems to be little cause to fear retaliation on the part of other nations.

Fifth, how can it be considered dumping for us to try to hold our own in the world market? No one could justly accuse us of dumping when we are merely holding our share of the world trade. In fact, we have not held our share of the world trade. We have lost heavily in the exportation of cotton. To be specific, the high point of our exports in cotton was in 1926. That year we exported 10,927,000 bales; last year we exported 5,771,000 bales. In other words, there has been a loss of trade to the extent of over 5,000,000 bales from the peak in 1926, and that is true at a time when the world consumption has increased 5,000,000 bales. Therefore, if we were now exporting as much cotton as we exported in 1926, and if we enjoyed our share of the increase of world consumption, we would today be exporting six and one-half million bales more than at present. It merely means keeping our share of the market; and again I reiterate, "How could that be considered dumping?"

Mr. President, I thank the Senate for its kind indulgence. At another time I wish to discuss the general arguments in favor of farm relief and farm legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD following my remarks the bill which I have just discussed.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, for the purpose of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in wheat and cotton, and providing for the orderly marketing of such commodities at fair prices in interstate and foreign commerce

Be it enacted, etc., That section 301 (b) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by—

(1) Inserting after subdivision (4) the following new subdivisions:

"(4b) 'Domestic marketing percentage' in the case of wheat and cotton means that percentage of the production bases for such commodity established under section 357 which the Secretary, taking into consideration the adjustments in domestic allotments required under section 358 (d), determines will provide domestic allotments for farmers for any marketing year equal to the national domestic allotment.

"(4c) 'Domestic price' means $1.25 a bushel in the case of wheat of standard grade and 20 cents a pound in the case of cotton of standard grade, or the parity price of the commodity as of the end of the preceding marketing year, whichever is higher."

(2) Inserting after subdivision (8) the following new subdivision:

"(8a) 'National domestic allotment,' in the case of wheat and cotton, means the quantity of the commodity which the Secretary estimates will be disposed of by the Commodity Credit Corporation during any marketing year for consumption in the United States."

(3) Inserting at the end thereof the following new subdivision:

"(17) 'World market price,' in the case of wheat and cotton, means that price which the Commodity Credit Corporation estimates it can obtain for such wheat or cotton upon disposing of it for purposes other than consumption in the United States, less a reasonable charge, to be fixed by the Corporation, to cover the estimated expense which will be incurred by the Corporation in disposing of such commodity for such purposes."

Sec. 2. (a) Section 302 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) No new loans on wheat or cotton shall be made available under this section after the end of the marketing year beginning in 1939."

(b) Part III of subtitle B of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"Sec. 340. The provisions of this part shall cease to be effective on June 30, 1940."

(c) Part IV of such subtitle B is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"Sec. 350A. The provisions of this part shall cease to be effective on July 31, 1940."

Sec. 3. Title III of such act, as amended, is further amended by adding, after subtitle B, the following new subtitle:

"SUBTITLE B1—MARKETING OF WHEAT AND COTTON

PRODUCTION BASES

"Sec. 357. The Secretary, through the local committees, shall establish as soon as practicable in 1939 a production base for wheat for each farm on which wheat has been produced in 1937, 1938, or 1939, and a production base for cotton for each farm on which cotton has been produced in 1937, 1938, or 1939, and shall, upon application, establish such bases for any other farm. The production base for each such commodity for any farm shall be a quantity of such commodity determined on the basis of past production, tillable acreage, productivity of the soil, crop rotation practices, availability of labor and equipment, and sound principles of farm management, with adjustments for abnormal weather conditions, trends in production, and the diversion of acreage under previous agricultural adjustment and conservation programs. Any such production base may be increased upon application, or may be decreased after giving the farmer notice and an opportunity to be heard, when such increase or decrease is warranted by the factors on the basis of which such production base is determined.

"DOMESTIC ALLOTMENTS

"Sec. 358. (a) Beginning with the year 1939, the Secretary shall proclaim in each year, not later than July 15 in the case of wheat, and not later than November 15 in the case of cotton, the probable national domestic allotment and the probable domestic market percentage for wheat and cotton for the next succeeding marketing year.

"(b) Beginning with the year 1940 the Secretary shall determine and proclaim in each year, not later than May 15 in the case of wheat and not later than June 15 in the case of cotton, the national domestic allotment and the domestic marketing percentage for wheat and cotton for the next succeeding marketing year.

"(c) The domestic allotment for wheat or cotton for any farm for any marketing year shall be equal to the production base for such commodity for the farm, determined as of the date of the proclamations issued under subsection (b), multiplied by the domestic marketing percentage for such commodity for such marketing year: Provided, That such allotment shall not exceed the actual or normal production, whichever is greater, of the acreage on the farm devoted to the production of the commodity.

"(d) Any domestic allotment for wheat or cotton for any farm shall be divided among the landowners, tenants, and sharecroppers of such farm, in the same proportion that such landowners, tenants, and sharecroppers are entitled to share in the proceeds of the commodity for which the allotment is made: Provided, That if the total allotments for both commodities allotted to any person for any year would be a quantity having a combined value in excess of $1,500, computed at domestic prices, the allotments to such person shall be reduced so that such combined value will be reduced by 20 percent of that part of such combined value in excess of $1,500 but not in excess of $2,000; by 40 percent of that part of such combined value in excess of $2,000 but not in excess of $2,500; and by 60 percent of that part of such combined value in excess of $2,500 but not in excess of $3,000; and by 80 percent of that part of such combined value in excess of $3,000.

"(e) The quantity of a commodity allotted to a farmer under subsection (d) for any marketing year shall be his domestic allotment with respect to such commodity for such marketing year.

"(f) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary and to the extent that the Secretary determines to be practicable and not in conflict with the purposes of this title, any farmer may receive in lieu of any part of his domestic allotment for wheat or cotton, a domestic allotment for a quantity of the other of such commodities having an equal value.

"MARKETING OF WHEAT AND COTTON

"Sec. 359. (a) The Commodity Credit Corporation (in this title referred to as the 'Corporation') shall purchase all domestically produced wheat and cotton offered for sale to it by the producer thereof after the beginning of the marketing year beginning in 1940.

"(b) If the commodity is offered for sale to the Corporation by a farmer and is a part or all of his domestic allotment for the current marketing year, the price paid by the Corporation to the farmer for the commodity delivered at local markets shall be the domestic price or the world market price, whichever is higher, for such commodity.

"(c) In the case of any other purchases of any such commodity by the Corporation, the price paid by the Corporation shall be equal to the world market price of such commodity.

"(d) If by reason of loss in yields due to unavoidable causes, including adverse weather conditions, insect pests, plant diseases, and such other unavoidable causes as may be determined by the Secretary, any farmer fails to produce a quantity of wheat or cotton equal to his domestic allotment, the Secretary shall determine the amount by which the wheat or cotton produced by such farmer is below his domestic allotment by reason of such unavoidable causes, and shall issue evidence to such farmer and to the Corporation of the quantity of the commodity so determined. Upon presentation to the Corporation by the farmer of the evidence so issued to him, the Corporation shall pay to the farmer the amount by which the domestic price of an equal quantity of the commodity exceeds the world price thereof; and the Corporation shall reimburse its funds by disposing of, for domestic consumption, an equal quantity of the commodity from the stocks held by it.

"(e) After the beginning of the marketing year beginning in 1940 all wheat and cotton acquired by the Corporation, including wheat and cotton held by it on such date or acquired on account of loans made or arranged for by it prior to such date, shall be disposed of by it at such times and places and in such manner as it deems most advantageous, subject to the following limitations:

"(1) Any quantity of each such commodity disposed of by the Corporation for consumption within the United States shall be disposed of at a price not less than the domestic price for such commodity, plus a reasonable charge for the handling and marketing of such commodity.

"(2) The Corporation shall dispose of wheat and cotton acquired by it under subsection (a) as rapidly as orderly marketing and the policies of this act will permit and shall not retain any quantity of wheat or cotton, acquired by it under subsection (a), at the end of any marketing year which is in excess of 10 percent in the case of wheat, or 20 percent in the case of cotton, of a normal year's domestic consumption and exports.

"(f) The Corporation shall make such regulations and require such bonds, containing such conditions, as it deems necessary with respect to commodities disposed of by it for purposes other than consumption within the United States, to assure that such commodities will not be consumed within the United States, or that if such commodities are consumed within the United States, the Corporation will be paid the price required by subsection (e) (1).

"(g) In fixing prices for the purchase and disposal of wheat and cotton by the Corporation, No. 2 Hard Winter wheat shall be deemed wheat of standard grade, and seven-eighths Middling cotton shall be deemed cotton of standard grade; and the prices fixed by the Corporation for the purchase and disposal of wheat and cotton not of standard grade, type, staple, or quality shall be increased or decreased, in relation to the prices fixed for wheat and cotton of standard grade, type, staple, and quality, by such amounts as properly reflect differences from standard in grade, type, staple, or quality."

Sec. 4. Part I of subtitle C of such title III is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"APPLICATION TO PRODUCTION BASES

"Sec. 369. The foregoing provisions of this part shall be applicable with respect to production bases established for farms under subtitle B-1 in the same manner that such provisions are applicable with respect to acreage allotments and farm-marketing quotas.

"REGULATIONS FOR WHEAT AND COTTON

"Sec. 370. Under such regulations as may be agreed upon by the Secretary and the Commodity Credit Corporation—

"(1) The Secretary shall transmit to the Corporation from time to time such information with respect to the domestic allotment of any farmer under subtitle B-1 as may be necessary for the proper performance of the powers and duties of the Corporation under this title.

"(2) The Corporation shall transmit to the Secretary from time to time such information as to its purchases, sales, and other operations under subtitle B-1 as may be necessary for the proper performance of the powers and duties of the Secretary under this title.

"(3) Such certificates and tags shall be issued to farmers, and such other records shall be made and kept as may be necessary, for determining when wheat or cotton purchased by the Corporation under subtitle B1 is purchased from a farmer and is a part of such farmer's domestic allotment."

Sec. 5. Part I of subtitle D of title III of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"ADDITIONAL POWERS OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

"Sec. 390A. In addition to the powers which it possesses under other provisions of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall have such powers as may be necessary or appropriate for carrying out its functions under this title.

"TAXES ON IMPORTS

"Sec. 390B. (a) In addition to any other tax or duty imposed by law, there shall be imposed on articles imported into the United States a tax as provided in subsection (c).

"(b) The tax imposed under this section shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as a duty imposed by the Tariff Act of 1930, and shall be treated for the purposes of all provisions of law relating to the customs revenue as a duty imposed by such act, except that for the purposes of sections 336 and 350 of such act (relating to flexible tariff and trade agreements) such tax shall not be considered a duty or import restriction, and except that no preference with respect to such tax shall be accorded any articles imported or brought into the United States.

"(c) There is hereby imposed upon the following articles imported into the United States, a tax at the rates hereinafter set forth, to be paid by the importer:

"(1) Wheat, at a rate equal to the amount by which the domestic price exceeds the world market price.

"(2) All articles containing wheat in any form, at a rate equal to the amount by which the domestic price exceeds the world market price of the quantity of wheat contained in such articles. The tax on articles described in this paragraph and paragraph (1) shall apply only with respect to importations after June 30, 1940.

"(3) Cotton, at a rate equal to the amount by which the domestic price exceeds the world market price.

"(4) All articles containing cotton in any form, at a rate equal to the amount by which the domestic price exceeds the world market price of the quantity of cotton contained in such articles. The tax on articles described in this paragraph and paragraph (3) shall apply only with respect to importations after July 31, 1940.

"(5) On all articles competing with wheat or cotton at the rate proclaimed by the Secretary under this paragraph. The Secretary shall ascertain from time to time whether the operation of this title is causing or will cause to the processors or producers of wheat or cotton in the United States any competitive disadvantage from competing commodities imported into the United States. If the Secretary finds that such disadvantages in competition exist, or will exist, he shall proclaim such finding and shall specify in his proclamation the competing commodity and the rate of tax on the importation thereof necessary to prevent such disadvantages in competition.

"(d) Prior to the 10th day of each month, beginning with the month of July 1940 in the case of wheat and the month of August 1940 in the case of cotton, the Secretary shall determine and proclaim the amounts by which the domestic prices of wheat and cotton exceeded the world market prices of wheat and cotton at the beginning of such month. During the next succeeding month, the amounts so proclaimed shall be deemed, for the purposes of this section, to be the amounts by which the domestic prices exceed the world market prices: Provided, That for the month of July 1940, in the case of wheat, and the month of August 1940, in the case of cotton, the amounts proclaimed during such months shall be deemed to be the amounts by which the domestic prices exceed the world market prices.

"COMPENSATING TAXES"

"Sec. 390C. (a) The Secretary shall ascertain from time to time whether the operation of this title is causing or will cause to the processors of wheat or cotton in the United States disadvantages in competition from competing commodities by reason of excessive shifts in consumption between such commodities or products thereof. If the Secretary finds, after investigation and due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, that such disadvantages in competition exist, or will exist, he shall proclaim such finding. The Secretary shall specify in his proclamation the competing commodity and the compensating rate of tax on the processing thereof necessary to prevent such disadvantages in competition. Thereafter there shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon the first processing in the United States of the competing commodity a tax, to be paid by the processor, at the rate specified, until such rate is altered pursuant to a further finding under this section.

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'processing,' in the case of any commodity, means any manufacturing or other processing involving a change in the form of the commodity or its preparation for market, as defined by regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture; and in prescribing such regulations the Secretary shall give due weight to the customs of the industry.

"PROCESSING TAXES"

"Sec. 390D. (a) On and after July 1, 1940, in the case of wheat, and on and after August 1, 1940, in the case of cotton, there shall be imposed upon the first processing in the United States of wheat or cotton produced in the United States a tax, to be paid by the processor, at the rates prescribed under subsection (b).

"(b) Prior to the 10th day of each month, beginning with the month of June 1940 in the case of wheat and the month of July 1940 in the case of cotton, the Secretary shall determine and proclaim the domestic prices of wheat and cotton as of the beginning of such month. During the next succeeding month the rates of the tax imposed by this section on the processing of wheat and cotton shall be equal to the prices so proclaimed.

"(c) There shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this section, 99 percent of the tax so imposed with respect to the processing by the taxpayer of any wheat or cotton not in excess of a quantity equal to (1) the quantity of the commodity which has been acquired by the taxpayer from the Commodity Credit Corporation after the beginning of the marketing year which begins in 1940, less (2) the quantity of the commodity for which a credit has previously been allowed to the taxpayer under this subsection.

"(d) There shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this section with respect to the processing of any wheat or cotton acquired by the taxpayer prior to the beginning of the marketing year which begins in 1940, an amount equal to the amount paid by the taxpayer for such commodity.

"(e) As used in this section—

"(1) The term 'processing,' in the case of wheat, means the milling or other processing (except cleaning and drying) of wheat for market, but does not include the processing of wheat for consumption by the producer thereof or for consumption on his farm.

"(2) The term 'processing,' in the case of cotton, means the spinning, manufacturing, or other processing (except ginning) of cotton.

"Sec. 390E. (a) The taxes imposed by sections 390C and 390D shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be treated for all provisions of law relating to internal revenue as internal revenue excise taxes, and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. All provisions of law, including penalties applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1926, and the provisions of section 626 of the Revenue Act of 1932, shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, be applicable in respect of taxes imposed by such sections 390C and 390D.

"(b) Upon the exportation from the United States of any product processed wholly or partly from a commodity with respect to which product or commodity a tax has been paid or is payable under section 390C or 390D, the tax due and payable or due and paid shall be credited or refunded. Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the credit or refund shall be allowed to the consignor named in the bill of lading under which the product is exported, or to the shipper or to the person liable for the tax, provided the consignor waives any claim thereto in favor of such shipper or person liable for the tax. As used in this subsection, the term 'product' includes any product exported as merchandise, or as a container for merchandise, or otherwise."

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to ask to be recognized as soon as the morning hour is over.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield to me for that purpose, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Andrews	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Austin	George	Logan	Shipstead
Bailey	Gerry	Lucas	Smathers
Bankhead	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Barbour	Gillette	McKellar	Stewart
Barkley	Glass	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bilbo	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Guffey	Mead	Tobey
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Townsend
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Truman
Burke	Harrison	Murray	Tydings
Byrd	Hatch	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Herring	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hill	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Holman	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Pittman	White
Connally	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wiley
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reed
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Donahay	King	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE GEORGE R. HOLMES

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, second only to the warmth of feeling which naturally grows among the Members of the Senate are the feelings and friendships that spring and grow between men in public life and members of the press. Within the last few days there has passed from the field of active journalism one of the most beloved and ablest members of the newspaper fraternity. He was a young man, and it seems cruel that fate should strike him down at the age of 43. Within that brief span of life he had accomplished great things. He had made a name for himself in the newspaper world.

We all admire success, in whatever walk of life it may be. It is a rare accomplishment for one so early in life to reach the heights and become head of the Washington Bureau of the International News-Service, one of the great news agencies of the country; and to have become the president of the Grid-iron Club, an organization the membership of which comprises the select among newspapermen of the country, is the highest evidence of prominence and popularity among his newspaper brothers. I am sure that all who knew George felt the pangs of deep sorrow and loss at his death. I attended his funeral. I heard the beautiful tributes paid him. My heart was deeply and sincerely touched, and I am sure all those who attended and heard the services felt the same way. He was truly a splendid fellow. His writings were full of candor, frankness, and courage. He despised sham, pretense, and hypocrisy. He impressed the country by his daily writings. His career carried him not only throughout this country but to the capitals of the world. His name will live in the annals of journalism, and his fine work should be an inspiration to the youth of the land.

I pay this tribute to my friend and a man who, in my opinion, was able, sincere, and fine, and who possessed the true qualities of real manhood.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to add just a brief word to what my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has said about George Holmes.

From the creation of man until this hour men have been born, have lived, and have died; and yet life, birth, and death are just as much of a mystery today as they were in the beginning. I have heard it said that as men grow older they reconcile themselves to the inevitable fate of all mankind—ultimate death. I do not know whether or not that statement is true. Although we always know that that is to be our fate and the fate of our friends, I doubt if we are ever really prepared for or reconciled to the inevitable end, even in age. This is peculiarly true when, in the inscrutable ways of Providence, a man is stricken down in the prime of his life. There is no way by which we can fathom these inscrutable mysteries. We regret them. We pay honor and respect to those who, in a short space of time, or in a long life, have made some contribution to the elevation of the standards of their own lives and those of their comrades, and of the country at large.

After all, as the poet says, life is not measured in years. It is not measured on the dial, but it is measured by what service may be crowded within a given space of time. If that is to be the standard, in my judgment George Holmes fully measured up to the requirements. In every sense of the word he was a gentleman. I believe he elevated the standards of journalism by his courage, by his frankness, by his ability, by his level-headedness, and by his fairness. Not only was he an outstanding journalist, studying, as all journalists who write for newspapers and who to a certain extent create public opinion, must do, but above his professional integrity and his professional ability, he was a charming associate, a man of sincerity, a man of honor, a man of learning. In his public relations and in his private life, and especially in his family circle, no man has come within my acquaintance in a quarter of a century who was more sincerely beloved, who was more genuinely respected, and whose untimely end caused greater grief, not only in his profession, but among all who knew him.

I am glad at this time to add my feeble word to what has been so beautifully said by the Senator from Mississippi in honor of one whose mature life had been largely spent in the atmosphere of Congress, of legislation, and of executive policies which have been promulgated by the different branches of the Government of the United States during his tenure in Washington. My sympathy goes out to his comrades in the profession, to his family, and to all his friends. I believe that there are many things in his life by which we may profit.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief observation. I knew George Holmes for many years. I greatly admired him and entertained for him a deep affection. I knew him on the golf course, and I knew him in his professional activities. I knew him about the Senate Chamber. I can say that at no time did he ever betray a single confidence. He lived up to the ethics of his profession. I add my tribute, and join my friends the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the Majority Leader [Mr. BARKLEY] in mourning his loss.

LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY ADDRESS BY SENATOR CAPPER

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President—

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just a moment?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. May I inquire if the Senator intends to address the Senate at length?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall consume only a few minutes.

Last Saturday evening over the Nation-wide network of the Mutual Broadcasting System I had the pleasure of listening to one of the finest and most patriotically inspiring broadcasts I have ever heard. It was the Lincoln's Birthday eve radio program of the United States Flag Association, an organization which, by spreading among the American people a better understanding and deeper appreciation of our country's ideals and institutions, is doing most effective work in combatting the un-American forces and influences which, well organized and no doubt amply financed, are leaving no stone unturned to discredit and to destroy those ideals and institutions.

I may add, Mr. President, that our colleague the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] was the guest speaker of the broadcast, the outstanding feature of which was a most effective and appropriate paraphrase of Lincoln's historic Gettysburg Address under the title of "The Spirit of Lincoln Speaks Today." I ask that I may be permitted this opportunity to read to the Senate what the senior Senator from Kansas said:

Eight score and three years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal and that the people shall rule.

Now you of today are engaged in a war with anti-American forces and influences, testing whether that Nation, or any nation, so conceived and dedicated, can endure. Though these forces and influences be moral, they are as dangerous and as deadly as any physical ones that have ever threatened the life of the Nation.

Your fathers who, through their trials and tribulations, their sufferings and sacrifices, created this Nation, in passing to the Great Beyond, threw the torch from falling hands to future generations, of which you of today are one. Be yours to hold it high; otherwise ye shall break faith with your fathers.

Let you who are now living dedicate yourselves to the task of preserving the great heritage left you by those of us who have gone before; let you renew your allegiance to the ideals symbolized by the flag we gave you, among them being national unity, patriotic cooperation, and racial and religious tolerance. Let you reaffirm your faith in the institutions of democracy embodied in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States we bequeathed you, among them being freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion, freedom of assembly, and personal liberty. Let you highly resolve that we, your fathers, shall not have suffered and struggled, sacrificed, and died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—freedom from class hatred; freedom from materialistic greed; freedom from contention between capital, labor, and government; freedom from racial and religious intolerance; and that, with malice toward none, with charity for all, a government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

Oh, you Americans of today, who, without having undergone sacrifices and privations in creating or saving the great Republic under whose flag you are enjoying such blessings of life, we, your fathers now in the realm of the Great Beyond, beseech you to awake to the dangers which are menacing you, your homes, your children. Awake and unite, cooperate and tolerate before it is too late.

Mr. President, this splendid and timely paraphrase of Lincoln's famous Gettysburg Address should, in my judgment, be read by every man, woman, and child in the United States. It would stimulate their patriotism and make them better Americans.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED-TO BILLS ON THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the morning business has been concluded.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the morning hour having expired, and the time for taking up the calendar having also expired, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will proceed to call the bills on the calendar.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States in claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, was announced as first in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the last time the calendar was called the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] objected to this bill. In his absence, I suggest that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1093) for the relief of Mike Chetkovich was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 58) providing that a calendar day's notice shall suffice in connection with suspension of a rule was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

CUBAN DECORATION FOR MAJ. ANDREW S. ROWAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 746) to authorize Maj. Andrew S. Rowan, United States Army, retired, to accept the Order Carlos Manuel de Céspedes tendered him by the Government of Cuba in appreciation of services rendered.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] a question or two with reference to the pending bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will be glad to answer any questions the Senator may ask.

Mr. GILLETTE. In 1934, in order to correct the difficulties and uncertainties in connection with decorations which were proffered by foreign nations to American citizens, Congress enacted a provision that required the Secretary of State to send to the Seventy-fifth Congress and every alternate Congress thereafter a list of names of retired officers who were entitled to receive such decorations. I note from the report that Major Rowan's name has not been listed, and I am wondering if the Senator can give the Senate any information as to why the provision of the law was not complied with by the Department of State?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I will be glad to have the bill go over until I can contact the State Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, Major Rowan has been famous in literature and history for many years as being the one who carried the message to Garcia. There is no question on earth as to the merit and the gallantry of his service. It is perfectly true that at the time he carried the message to Garcia the Cuban Republic was not an established government recognized by the United States. Nevertheless, Major Rowan was given an order by his lawful superiors, and he carried out that order in a way which reflected great glory upon himself and upon the entire United States Army and the American people. My understanding is that Major Rowan is at the present time in a hospital in California. This is a decoration to which he has long been entitled, and I certainly desire to urge upon the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from Texas, and the Senate not to delay on technical grounds a measure of this kind which has to do with a case that is of outstanding merit and outstanding notoriety, for Major Rowan might be taken from us before the complicated technicalities could be complied with.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I desire to thank the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] for what he has said, which is entirely accurate. Major Rowan is a neighbor of mine and is, I think, 82 years old, or thereabouts.

The story of the Message to Garcia, which has been referred to, was preserved by Elbert Hubbard, a distinguished author of Aurora, N. Y., in a literary work that lasts until today. The message was taken through a very perilous country in pursuance of an order issued to Major Rowan. Nobody knew whether or not he would ever return. His days being so few on earth, I trust that he may be gratified in his old age by being permitted to receive this recognition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield further to me?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In addition to what the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has said about the feat performed by Major Rowan, I think it should be remembered also that when he was given the order by his superior officer, it was not known where Garcia was or whether Garcia was still in existence or how great a task would be involved in the delivery of the message, and neither did Major Rowan. However, the major went forth and with great perseverance and bravery, which will always reflect glory on the American Army, he delivered the message.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HILL. It was a wonderful feat performed by Major Rowan, as the Senator from Missouri has said, one that meant much to the liberation and freedom of the people of Cuba. It was one of the great feats of history, the kind of a feat that unborn children will read of as an example of courage, loyalty, and devotion to duty. It is very natural that the Cuban people, through their Government, should see fit to confer this honor on Major Rowan in recognition of his service. I hope the Senator from Iowa is not going to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, my colleagues wholly mistake my purpose. If there is anyone in the United States who is entitled to such recognition it is Major Rowan, in whose behalf this bill has been introduced. There is no question whatever as to that. I merely inquired why the Department of State had not complied with the direct provisions of the law which was passed by Congress calling upon the Department to report to the Seventy-fifth Congress the list of names. The Department has not done that, and Major Rowan's name is not here.

It was to direct attention to the laches and negligence of the Department of State in not complying with the order of Congress and with no disposition whatever to delay action in this case that I rose in the first place.

Because of the fact, as it has been called to our attention, that Major Rowan has reached an advanced age, that his time on earth in all probability will be short, I do not wish to object to the present consideration of the measure, but I do desire to register my disapproval of the failure of a department of this Government to comply with the order of a legislative enactment of the Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). If there be no objection, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-named retired officer of the United States Army is hereby authorized to accept the Order Carlos Manuel de Céspedes tendered him by the Government of Cuba in appreciation of services rendered: Maj. Andrew S. Rowan.

CONFISCATION OF FIREARMS IN CERTAIN CASES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 189) to provide for the confiscation of firearms in possession of persons convicted of felony and disposition thereof, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 1, line 3, after the word "That", to strike out "whenever" and insert "at this time", and on line 6, after the word "arrest", to strike out "shall" and insert "may", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That at the time any person is convicted of a felony in any court of the United States, firearms and ammunition found in his possession or under his control at the time of his arrest may be confiscated and disposed of in accordance with the order of the court before which such person was tried. The court may direct the delivery of such firearms or ammunition to the law-enforcement agency which apprehended such person, for its use or for any other disposition in its discretion.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 197) to amend the Judicial Code in respect to claims against the United States for just compensation was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of this bill.

Mr. GURNEY. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 74) providing for a committee on civil aviation was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this morning I submitted minority views on the resolution, and until those views are printed I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

NEW AND ENLARGED NATIONAL FORESTS IN MONTANA

The bill (S. 26) to empower the President of the United States to create new national-forest units and make additions to existing national forests in the State of Montana was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized, in his discretion, to add to existing national forests, or to include within new national forests, by proclamation or Executive order, any unappropriated public lands of the United States situated in the State of Montana which, in his opinion, are chiefly valuable for the production of timber or the protection of watersheds: Provided, That the inclusion of such lands within a national forest shall be subject to any claim, entry, or appropriation under the public land laws then valid and subsisting and thereafter legally maintained.

Sec. 2. All previous acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed insofar as they apply to the State of Montana.

JOY MONTGOMERY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1012) for the relief of Joy Montgomery, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "to", to strike out "Joy Montgomery" and insert "the legal guardian of Joy Montgomery, a minor"; in line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$500"; and in line 11, after the word "Provided", to insert "That before any payment is made under this act the parents of Joy Montgomery shall first release Hugh G. Pierce, the driver of the Government truck, from payment of the judgment rendered against him in the Circuit Court of Carter County, Tenn., on June 18, 1936: Provided further", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of Joy Montgomery, a minor, of Hampton, Tenn., the sum of $500 in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for injuries sustained by her as a result of being struck by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck near Hampton, Tenn., on January 21, 1935: Provided, That before any payment is made under this act the parents of Joy Montgomery shall first release Hugh G. Pierce, the driver of the Government truck, from payment of the judgment rendered against him in the Circuit Court of Carter County, Tenn., on June 18, 1936: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with such claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with such claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal guardian of Joy Montgomery, a minor."

HOWARD ARTHUR BESWICK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 129) for the relief of Howard Arthur Beswick, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of sections 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and the same is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and consider, when filed, the claim of Howard Arthur Beswick, of Ludlow, Vt., for disability alleged to have been incurred by him October 21, 1928, when a plane piloted by him while a Naval Reserve officer on active duty crashed near Des Moines, Iowa: Provided, That claim hereunder shall be filed within 6 months after the approval of this act: Provided further, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire as to the liability of the Government in the instance referred to in the bill. I am not familiar with the bill, and I merely desire an explanation of it.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the bill merely waives the statute of limitations with respect to the act for the compensation of United States employees. The man was an aviator in the Navy Department, and he fell somewhere in Iowa in 1928. It was not until 1932 that the fact developed that he had suffered two bone fractures. X-rays showed that the fractures actually took place; and, according to medical testimony, there is no question that they were due to the accident in 1928. With the approval of the Navy Department and of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, which interposed no objection, the bill merely waives the statute of limitations so that the beneficiary of the bill may go before the Commission.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED H. BEAUREGARD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 128) for the relief of Fred H. Beauregard, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Fred H. Beauregard, of St. Albans, Vt., the sum of $1,000, in full settlement of his claim against the United States on account of the death of his minor son, Robert Bernard Beauregard, who died as a result of injuries received as a result of an accident involving a Government truck operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps in St. Albans, Vt., on August 20, 1937: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROY D. COOK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1157) for the relief of the legal guardian of Roy D. Cook, a minor, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of Roy D. Cook, a minor, the sum of $2,500, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for injuries suffered in an accident caused by the falling of a large United States mail box at Thirty-ninth and Hazelfern Place, in Portland, Oreg., on or about January 12, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE H. PIERCE AND EVELYN PIERCE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 545) for the relief of George H. Pierce and Evelyn Pierce, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,793.88", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George H. Pierce and his wife, Evelyn Pierce, of Harwichport, Mass., the sum of $7,793.88, in full satisfaction of their claim for damages against the Government of the United States on account of personal injuries of a permanent nature suffered by them on December 6, 1937, when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by an automobile belonging to the War Department and operated by an officer of said Department on route No. 3 in the town of Kingston, Mass.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered or expenses incurred in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered or expenses incurred in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, George H. Pierce and Evelyn Pierce were the victims of a collision in which their car was struck by a vehicle operated by the United States Army Engineers. They suffered very severe physical injuries. The War Department has admitted that the accident was due at least in part to the defective condition of the Government vehicle, and interposes no objection to the payment of a proper sum.

I think anyone who reads the medical evidence will agree with me that these persons have had a perfectly terrific experience, and that, with the approval of the War Department, they are entitled to compensation.

I hope the bill may be passed.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 884) for the relief of disbursing officers and other officers and employees of the United States for disallowance and charges on account of airplane travel was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I have an explanation of that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who is not present.

Mr. KING. Then let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RAY WIMMER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 633) for the relief of Ray Wimmer, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ray Wimmer, the sum of $121.20, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for the use of his personally owned automobile from December 5, 1934, to February 15, 1935, while employed as cruiser-appraiser, Indian Service, in cruising and appraising of timber on the Colville Indian Reservation, Wash.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding.

Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DICA PERKINS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 12) for the relief of Dica Perkins, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$500" and insert "$100", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Dica Perkins, the sum of $100, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States arising out of the removal from her property near Cane Beds, Ariz., of certain pieces of petrified wood by enrollee members of the Civilian Conservation Corps: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EAST COAST SHIP & YACHT CORPORATION, OF NOANK, CONN.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1106) for the relief of the East Coast Ship & Yacht Corporation, of Noank, Conn., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after "(1)", to strike out "$4,200" and insert "$2,100"; in line 11, after "(2)", to strike out "$7,200.34" and insert "$4,518.74"; on page 2, line 3, after the word "contract", to strike out "and (3) $1,950, representing liquidated damages withheld by the Government under a contract No. W-52, qm-416, entered into by said corporation with the War Department for repairs to the United States distribution box boat L-40"; and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the East Coast Ship & Yacht Corporation, of Noank, Conn., the following sums: (1) $2,100, representing liquidated damages withheld by the Government under a contract No. W-51, qm-412, entered into by said corporation with the War Department for repairs to the United States steamer Colonel Barnett; (2) $4,518.74, representing payment for additional repairs which said corporation was required to make upon said steamer and which were not specified by said contract. The payment of such sums shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of said corporation against the United States arising out of said contracts or in connection with the repairs made on either of said vessels: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] to explain the bill, if he is familiar with the circumstances?

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I am familiar with them, but I cannot add much to the report of the committee. A similar bill passed the Senate, as I recall, a year ago, having been introduced by my former colleague, Mr. Lonergan. The bill is to provide money which was paid by a New York insurance company at a time when the Federal Government claimed that the principal was responsible for damage to a vessel being repaired. A further investigation, which appears to be substantiated by the governmental authorities, disclosed the fact that the contractor was not responsible. The insurance company is asking from the contractor the return of its funds; and the investigations of the Government, the insurance company, and the contractor seem to agree that there really was no liability. The committee has reduced the amount which was originally requested.

Mr. KING. There is no objection by the Government or its agencies to the payment?

Mr. MALONEY. It seems to me that the governmental agencies agree.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD S. REED

The bill (S. 1119) to provide an additional sum for the payment of a claim under the act entitled "An act to provide for the reimbursement of certain officers and enlisted men or former officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps for personal property lost, damaged, or destroyed as a result of the earthquake which occurred at Managua, Nicaragua, on March 31, 1931," approved January 21, 1936 (49 Stat. 2212), was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum not to exceed $605.50, as may be required by the Secretary of the Navy to reimburse Technical Sgt. Richard S. Reed, United States Marine Corps Reserve, after claimant shall have filed itemized statements showing actual damages sustained by proper appraisal, and under such regulations as he may prescribe pursuant to the provisions of the act approved January 21, 1936 (49 Stat. 2212), Private Law No. 373, Seventy-fourth Congress, for losses of and damages to reasonable and necessary personal property resulting from the earthquake which occurred at Managua, Nicaragua, on March 31, 1931: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN NAVAL PERSONNEL

The bill (S. 1117) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men or former enlisted men of the United States Navy for the value of personal effects lost in the hurricane at the submarine base, New London, Conn., on September 21, 1938, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum or sums, amounting in the aggregate not to exceed $267.55 as may be required by the Secretary of the Navy to reimburse, under such regulations as he may prescribe, certain enlisted men or former enlisted men of the United States Navy for the value of personal effects lost in the hurricane at the submarine base, New London, Conn., on September 21, 1938: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claims, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

ADDITIONAL MIDSHIPMAN AT UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 588) to provide for an additional midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be at the United States Naval Academy one midshipman to be selected from among the sons of civilians residing in the Canal Zone and the sons of civilian employees of the United States Government and the Panama Railroad Co. residing in the Republic of Panama, whose appointment shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy on the recommendation of the Governor of the Panama Canal.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this bill provides for only one appointment, to be made on the recommendation of the Governor of the Panama Canal. An appointment to the Military Academy from the Canal Zone is now permitted by law, but not to the Naval Academy. This bill provides for such an appointment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED G. LEITH

The bill (S. 513) to provide for the promotion on the retired list of the Navy of Fred G. Leith was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Fred G. Leith (chief pharmacist's mate, United States Navy, retired) as a lieutenant, junior grade, United States Navy. The President is authorized, immediately upon such appointment, to place the said Fred G. Leith on the retired list with the rank of a lieutenant, junior grade, United States Navy: Provided, That he shall not receive any increase in retired pay, allowances, or other benefits as the result of the passage of this act.

JACK LECHEL HAAS

The bill (S. 142) for the relief of Jack Lecel Haas was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy, their widows, children, and dependent relatives, Jack Lecel Haas shall be held and considered to have been discharged with a good discharge under honorable conditions on April 27, 1928: Provided, That no pension, pay, bounty, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the enactment of this act by reason of its enactment.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1102) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That (a) section 1 of the act approved January 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 5), is hereby amended by striking therefrom "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1941"; (b) section 1 of the act approved March 31, 1936 (49 Stat. 1186), as amended, is hereby further amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1941"; (c) section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (47 Stat. 9), as amended, is hereby further amended by inserting after the second sentence thereof the following sentence: "Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the Corporation as provided by section 4 hereof."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] whether this bill is confined exclusively to extending the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or whether it also includes any reference to the Export-Import Bank?

Mr. WAGNER. It does not include any such reference, Mr. President.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there another measure on the subject?

Mr. WAGNER. There is another bill which was originally introduced by me and is still before the committee for consideration. This bill deals only with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and extends the powers which it now has, until June 30, 1941. There is no change in its authority.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like a further explanation. Are we now to proceed upon the assumption that these organizations which were created because of the depression shall have their lives extended for an indefinite period of time? It seems to me we ought to be interested in terminating at the earliest possible moment some of these organizations that were created for a special purpose.

Mr. WAGNER. I agree with the Senator that they ought to be terminated just as soon as the necessity for their existence has expired. As a matter of fact, under the present law, the President may terminate the existence of this organization before 1941 if he decides that the emergency no longer exists.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been an unusually successful corporation and that it has not cost the Government any money?

Mr. WAGNER. That is absolutely right.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have so understood.

Mr. WAGNER. And undoubtedly its operations will not cost the Government a cent.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether, if this bill is passed, the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are to be enlarged?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; the bill does not change one bit the lending authority that Congress has heretofore conferred upon it.

Mr. KING. May the Reconstruction Finance Corporation make loans to the same organizations and industries and individuals as at present?

Mr. WAGNER. The power and authority given to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by the act of last year, when we extended its life, have not been changed.

Mr. KING. What fund has been provided for meeting the loans which the Corporation may make?

Mr. WAGNER. That, of course, is under its original authorization. We gave it authority to loan up to $2,000,000,000; and loans have been made to the extent of one billion and several hundred million dollars.

I may say to the Senator that, for instance, in one field alone—loans for self-liquidating projects to public bodies and other bodies which could qualify under the law—thus far there have been practically no defaults, and some of the bonds which the Corporation purchased have been sold to the public at a profit of some $21,000,000 to the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the integrity and great ability of Jesse Jones probably will cause us not to object to the passage of this bill, because under his wise management success has attended the operations of this Corporation.

Mr. WAGNER. There is no doubt that he has made a great success of its administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEFINITION OF MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE

The bill (S. 186) to amend section 798 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to murder in the first degree, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 798 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1189), be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 798. Murder in the first degree: Whoever, being of sound memory and discretion, kills another purposely and either of deliberate and premeditated malice or by means of poison, or kills another in perpetrating or in attempting to perpetrate any offense punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, is guilty of murder in the first degree."

RESEARCH ASSISTANTS IN DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The bill (S. 1125) to provide for the appointment of research assistants in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Board of Education is hereby authorized to appoint research assistants who shall qualify for said positions by meeting such eligibility requirements as the said Board may prescribe and who shall on appointment be assigned to salary class 2 of article I of the Teachers' Salary Act, approved June 4, 1924, in accordance with the professional qualifications which they possess at the time of appointment.

Sec. 2. Research assistants shall be appointed to either group A or group C of said salary class 2 in accordance with the eligibility qualifications possessed and the character of duties to be performed by such research assistants.

Sec. 3. Research assistants shall be promoted to group B or group D of said salary class 2 on the basis of such evidence of superior work and increased professional attainments as the Board of Education may prescribe.

Sec. 4. That research assistants shall be classified as teachers for pay-roll purposes and for retirement purposes.

SEC. 5. Appointments, assignments, and transfers authorized in this act shall be made in accordance with the act approved June 20, 1906, as amended (Public, No. 254).

SEC. 6. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1939.

GAS AND ELECTRIC METERS

The bill (S. 1123) to amend paragraph 57 of section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subparagraph fifth, paragraph 57, of section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 974), be amended by deleting the words "4 percent, if an electric meter, or more than" and deleting "if a gas meter," so that the said subparagraph when so amended shall read as follows:

"If any consumer to whom a meter has been furnished shall request the Commission in writing to inspect such meter, the Commission shall have the same inspected and tested; if the same, on being so tested, shall be found to be more than 2 percent defective or incorrect to the prejudice of the consumer, the inspector shall order the gas or electrical corporation forthwith to remove the same and to place instead a correct meter, and the expense of such inspection and test shall be borne by the corporation; if the same, on being so tested, shall be found to be correct, the expense of such inspection and test shall be borne by the consumer."

LICENSE FEES FOR PUBLIC VEHICLES IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 1129) to amend paragraphs 31 and 33 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 7 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes,' approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1932, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subparagraphs (c) and (d) of paragraph 31 and paragraph 33 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 7 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes,' approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1932, are amended to read as follows:

"(c) Owners of passenger vehicles for hire having a seating capacity of eight passengers or more, in addition to the driver or operator, other than those licensed in the preceding subparagraph, shall pay a license tax of $100 per annum for each vehicle used. No such vehicle shall be operated unless there shall be conspicuously displayed therein a license issued under the terms of this subparagraph. Licenses issued under this subparagraph shall date from March 1 of each year, but may be issued on or after February 15 of such year: Provided, however, That all licenses issued for a period prior to March 1, 1940, shall expire on February 29, 1940, and the license fee therefor shall be prorated accordingly.

"(d) Owners of passenger vehicles for hire, whether operated from a private establishment or from public space, other than those licensed in the two preceding subparagraphs, shall pay a license tax of $25 per annum for each such vehicle used in the conduct of their business. Stands for such vehicles upon public space, adjacent to hotels or otherwise, may be established in the manner provided in section 6 (e) of the act entitled 'An act to amend the acts approved March 3, 1925, and July 3, 1926, known as the District of Columbia Traffic Acts, and so forth.' The Public Utilities Commission is hereby authorized to make and enforce all such reasonable and usual police regulations as it may deem necessary for the proper conduct, control, and regulation of all vehicles described in this and the preceding subparagraphs and paragraph 33 hereof. Licenses issued under this subparagraph shall date from March 1 of each year, but may be issued on or after February 15 of such year: Provided, however, That all licenses issued for a period prior to March 1, 1940, shall expire on February 29, 1940, and the license fee therefor shall be prorated accordingly.

"PAR. 33. Owners of vehicles for hire, used in hauling goods, wares, or merchandise, and operating from public space, shall pay a license tax of $25 per annum for each vehicle. Stands for such vehicles upon public space may be established in the manner provided in section 6 (e) of the act entitled 'An act to amend the acts approved March 3, 1925, and July 3, 1926, known as the District of Columbia Traffic Acts, and so forth.' Licenses issued under this subparagraph shall date from March 1 of each year, but may be issued on or after February 15 of such year: Provided, however, That all licenses issued for a period prior to March 1, 1940, shall expire on February 29, 1940, and the license fee therefor shall be prorated accordingly."

RETIREMENT OF PUBLIC-SCHOOL TEACHERS

The bill (S. 1130) to amend Public Law No. 111, Sixty-sixth Congress, entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"That every teacher from whose salary retirement deductions are made in accordance with this act shall be required to designate in writing a beneficiary or beneficiaries to whom the amount of his deductions, together with interest then credited thereon, shall be payable in the event of the death of such teacher.

"Sec. 2. In the event of death of any such teacher the order of precedence of payments shall be as follows: First, to the beneficiary, or beneficiaries, designated in writing by the teacher and recorded on his or her individual account; second, if there be no such beneficiary or beneficiaries designated, then to the duly appointed executor, or administrator, of the estate; third, if there be no such beneficiary, or if an executor or administrator be not appointed within 6 months after the death of such teacher, payment shall be made into the registry of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia."

STREET LIGHTING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 1294) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to regulate the hours during which streets, alleys, etc., shall be lighted, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, subject to appropriations therefor, are hereby authorized and empowered to require that all public and other lamps under their control be lighted during such hours as in their judgment will most effectively promote the safety and convenience of the public.

JOHN PHILIP SOUSA BRIDGE

The bill (S. 494) to name the bridge to be erected over the Anacostia River in the District of Columbia after the late "March King" John Philip Sousa, composer of The Stars and Stripes Forever, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the bridge authorized to be erected over the Anacostia River, in the District of Columbia, in the line of Pennsylvania Avenue, be hereafter known as the John Philip Sousa Bridge.

ENFORCEMENT OF ORDERS, RULES, AND REGULATIONS IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 1126) to provide alternative methods of enforcement of orders, rules, and regulations of the Joint Board and of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That prosecution for violation of any rule, order, or regulation made, adopted, or approved by the Public Utilities Commission under authority of section 8 of the act approved March 4, 1913 (37 U. S. Stat. L. 974), or amendments thereto, or section 6 (e) of the traffic acts, as amended February 27, 1931 (46 U. S. Stat. L. 1424), or section 7 of the act approved July 1, 1902 (32 U. S. Stat. L. 590), as amended by the act approved July 1, 1932 (47 U. S. Stat. L. 550), or by the joint board under authority of section 6 (e) of the said traffic acts, as amended February 27, 1931, or section 7 of said act approved July 1, 1902, as amended by said act approved July 1, 1932, shall be on information in the police court of the District of Columbia, in the name of the District of Columbia, by the corporation counsel or any of his assistants. Any person, corporation, or public utility violating any such rule, order, or regulation shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $200: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not be construed to apply to rules, orders, or regulations adopted or promulgated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia which are not specifically required to be referred to the joint board or subject to the approval of such board: Provided further, That with respect to orders, rules, or regulations made or adopted by the Public Utilities Commission under authority of section 8 of the said act approved March 4, 1913, this section shall be construed to apply only to such orders, rules, or regulations as are subject to the penalties specifically provided in paragraph 85 of that act.

Sec. 2. The provisions of section 1 of this act and of paragraph 85 of section 8 of the said act approved March 4, 1913, so far as they relate to the orders, rules, and regulations of the Public Utilities Commission, shall be construed as prescribing alternative methods of enforcement of the orders, rules, or regulations of the Commission, and any order, rule, or regulation adopted by the Public Utilities Commission which is required to be referred to or is subject to the approval of the joint board may be enforced either as provided by paragraph 85 of section 8 of the act approved March 4, 1913, or as provided in section 1 of this act.

SALARIES OF TEACHERS AND OTHERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 1295) to amend section 9, article V, of an act known as "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia,' approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9, article V, of an act known as "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia,' approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1924, be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 9. That every teacher in the service on July 1, 1924, except as herein otherwise provided, and every teacher thereafter appointed, shall be assigned to group A of the class to which eligible or to group C of class 2 and shall be promoted to group D of class 2 or group B of any class on the basis of such evidence of superior teaching and of increased professional attainments as the Board of Education may prescribe: Provided, That teachers receiving salaries in group B of class 6 on June 30, 1924, and teachers receiving salaries in group A of class 6 who on June 30, 1924, are on the eligible list for promotion to group B of class 6, shall be assigned to group B of class 3 on July 1, 1924, without further examination or additional qualifications: Provided further, That no person who has not received for at least 1 year the maximum salary of group A in any class or group C of class 2 shall be eligible for promotion to group B of any class or group D of class 2: And provided further, That the number of group B and group D salaries shall be divided proportionately between the teachers in the white schools and the teachers in the colored schools on the basis of the enrollment of pupils in the respective white and colored schools."

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST CONGRESS—JOINT SESSION OF THE CONGRESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair) laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 8, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the first paragraph of House Concurrent Resolution 4 of the Seventy-sixth Congress is hereby amended to read as follows: "That in commemoration of the one hundred fiftieth anniversary of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution, begun and held at the city of New York on Wednesday, the 4th of March 1789, the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12 o'clock m., on Saturday, March 4, 1939."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution. The concurrent resolution simply changes from 11 to 12 o'clock the hour of meeting in joint session by the two Houses on the 4th day of March, to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

WATER POLLUTION CONTROL

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

The last Congress recognized the national importance of pollution abatement in our streams and lakes by passing, during its closing days, an act providing for the creation of a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service and for the establishment of a permanent system of Federal grants-in-aid and loans to assist in constructing pollution-abatement projects. Although fully subscribing to the general purposes of that act, I felt compelled to withhold my approval of it because of the method which it provided for the authorization of loans and grants-in-aid. It would have prevented the consideration of such appropriations as a part of the annual Budget for all purposes. My reasons are set forth in detail in my memorandum of June 25, 1938. I hope that at this session the whole problem of water pollution may again receive your attention.

To facilitate study of the problem by the Congress, I am transmitting a report on Water Pollution in the United States, which outlines the status of pollution, the cost of bringing about a reasonable degree of abatement, and the financial, technical, and administrative aspects of such a program. The document was prepared at my request by a special advisory committee of the National Resources Committee composed of representative experts from the Departments of War, Treasury, the Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce and from private and State agencies.

No quick and easy solution of these problems is in sight. The committee estimates that an expenditure by public and private agencies of approximately $2,000,000,000 over a period of 10 to 20 years may be required to construct works necessary to abate the more objectional pollution. Inasmuch as the needed works are chiefly treatment plants for municipal sewage and industrial waste, the responsibility for them rests primarily with municipal government and private industry. Much construction work is in progress. Many State agencies have forced remedial action where basic studies have shown it to be practicable.

Unprecedented advances in cleaning up our streams have been made possible by the public works and work relief programs during the past 6 years. The report states that more progress has been made in abatement of municipal waste during that period than during the entire 25 years preceding, chiefly as a result of Federal financial stimulation. As in many other fields of conservation, great improvement in the Nation's basic assets of water has been incident to the fight against unemployment. If this construction work is to continue at a substantial rate, and if the necessary research, education, and enforcement activities are to be carried out most effectively, the Federal Government must lend financial support and technical stimulation.

It is my opinion that, pending further experimentation with interstate and State enforcement activities, Federal participation in pollution abatement should take the general form of establishing a central technical agency to promote and coordinate education, research, and enforcement. On the basis of recent experience, it should be supplemented by a system of Federal grants-in-aid and loans organized with due regard for the integrated use and control of water resources, and for a balanced Federal program for public works of all types. The time is overdue for the Federal Government to take vigorous leadership along these lines.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 15, 1939.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the bill referred to in the message of the President as having been vetoed by him was a bill of which I happened to have the honor to be the author. It has been for some time recognized that the Federal Government must to some extent lead the way in the purification of our streams, in order to conserve life and health. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives and the Commerce Committee of the Senate labored long and industriously in framing a bill covering this subject. The bill was finally passed almost unanimously by both Houses, and it was sent to the President in the closing days of the last session. The President vetoed it after the Congress had adjourned, on the ground that the provision for grants-in-aid and loans to municipalities and to industries to enable them to establish stream pollution devices did not require that such appropriations should go through the Budget. He vetoed the bill on that ground.

I have reintroduced the measure substantially as it was passed by both Houses last year, with the objectionable part eliminated, and the bill is now pending before the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, and a similar bill is pending in the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

I appreciate the objection which the President urged, and which induced him to veto the bill. Realizing the importance of the subject, I am glad he is bringing it again to our attention in a special message, and I hope that at a very early date the Committee on Commerce will report the proposed legislation and that the Congress will again enact it and send it to the President in a form which will not incur his disapproval.

THE NATION'S ENERGY RESOURCES

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with my request of March 15, 1938, the National Resources Committee, in consultation with the other Federal agencies concerned, has prepared a comprehensive study of our energy resources, which I present herewith for your consideration.

This report represents the joint effort of many specialists both within and outside the Federal Government. It suggests policies, investigations, and legislation necessary to carry forward a broad national program for the prudent utilization and conservation of the Nation's energy resources.

Our resources of coal, oil, gas, and water power provide the energy to turn the wheels of industry, to service our homes, and to aid in national defense. We now use more energy per capita than any other people, and our scientists tell us there will be a progressively increasing demand for energy for all purposes.

Our energy resources are not inexhaustible, yet we are permitting waste in their use and production. In some instances, to achieve apparent economies today future generations will be forced to carry the burden of unnecessarily high costs and to substitute inferior fuels for particular purposes. National policies concerning these vital resources must recognize the availability of all of them; the location of each with respect to its markets; the costs of transporting them; the technological developments which will increase the efficiency of their production and use; the use of the lower-grade coals; and the relationships between the increased use of energy and the general economic development of the country.

In the past the Federal Government and the States have undertaken various measures to conserve our heritage in these resources. In general, however, each of these efforts has been directed toward the problems in a single field: Toward the protection of the public interest in the power of flowing water in the Nation's rivers; toward the relief of economic and human distress in the mining of coal; or toward the correction of demoralizing and wasteful practices and conditions in the industries producing oil and natural gas. It is time now to take a larger view; to recognize—more fully than has been possible or perhaps needful in the past—that each of our great natural resources of energy affects the others.

It is difficult in the long run to envisage a national coal policy, or a national petroleum policy, or a national water-power policy without also in time a national policy directed toward all of these energy producers—that is, a national energy-resources policy. Such a broad and integrated policy toward the problems of coal, petroleum, natural gas, and water power cannot be evolved overnight.

The widening interest and responsibility on the part of the Federal Government for the conservation and wise use of the Nation's energy resources raise many perplexing questions of policy determination. Clearly, there must be adequate and continuing planning and provision for studies which will reflect the best technical experience available, as well as full consideration for both regional and group interests.

Some Federal legislation affecting the energy resources will expire at the end of this fiscal year; other legislation at the end of a few more years. This report sets forth a useful frame of reference for legislative programs affecting these resources and illustrates another approach to the systematic husbandry of our natural resources. Specific recommendations are advanced for solution of the most pressing problems.

In order to facilitate its use by the Congress, I recommend that this report be printed together with the supporting staff reports and illustrations, when these are available in final form, in conformity with similar reports prepared by the National Resources Committee.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 15, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to say that there seems to be some question as to which committee should receive this message from the President. If there be no objection, the Chair will refer the message, with the accompanying report, to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

BURIAL EXPENSES OF NATIVE FEDERAL EMPLOYEES ABROAD

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State and the accompanying draft of proposed legislation designed to authorize the payment of burial expenses and expenses in connection with last illness and death of native employees who die while serving in offices abroad of executive departments of the United States Government.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 15, 1939.

[Enclosures: 1. Report of the Secretary of State; 2. Draft of proposed bill.]

RETIREMENT OF MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the retirement of Mr. Justice Brandeis, and to make a very brief statement for the RECORD in connection with his retirement.

It was but a few years ago that I had occasion to rise in this Chamber to extol the character and the qualities of mind and spirit, and to refer to the contribution to the cause of justice and of jurisprudence of a citizen of my own State of Massachusetts, who had rendered throughout a long life notable public service, and whose name and career are permanently enshrined on the honor roll of the truly great figures of American history. I refer to the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, a Justice of the United States Supreme Court for a span of 30 years, and whose retirement in 1932 at the age of 91 is still fresh in memory.

I rise today to pay brief but sincere tribute to another citizen of Massachusetts, to a man whose name will be ever joined in history, as it was in life, with that of Holmes; to one who was his companion not only in the physical sense, as a colleague and confrere on the highest court of our land, but who also was his companion in a spiritual sense, as one who shared with Holmes, profound wisdom in the law, coupled with a deep and abiding sense of social justice. I refer to Louis D. Brandeis, who now, in his eighty-third year, relinquishes his place on the Supreme Court, and brings to a close 23 years of arduous, conscientious, and distinguished public service as a member of the Court.

Both Holmes and Brandeis, of such contrasting antecedents and early environment, were alike in their liberalism—a liberalism of a kind that was ever consonant with liberty and with the fundamental concepts of democracy. They were alike in their fidelity to their ideals, in their fidelity to the Constitution, in their moral courage, and in their consciousness of the responsibilities of the courts and the law as instruments of justice and social progress.

When Woodrow Wilson nominated Louis D. Brandeis to the Supreme Court in 1916 he said of him, "This friend of justice and of men will ornament the High Court of which we are all so justly proud." Seldom has a prediction been more wholly validated by subsequent events. It is, in fact, an understatement, for Justice Brandeis has been infinitely more than an ornament to the Court. He has proved a dynamic force in maintaining the Supreme Court as a living and vital and authoritative arm of government.

The present is clearly no time to attempt any full appraisal of the character and attainments and accomplishments of Justice Brandeis. This will be for future historians. I am undertaking no such appraisal in these brief remarks today. But it seemed fitting that the journal of the proceedings of the Senate this day should note the retirement of Justice Brandeis, which has just taken place, and should record the sentiments of his countrymen and of this body, their gratitude and appreciation, so universally shared, and the respect which they have for him as a man, as a jurist, and as an American.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to associate myself with the remarks which have just been made by my colleague, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], relative to Mr. Justice Brandeis. As we look at his career and at his record of accomplishment we may well envy all that he has done, and his life may well serve as an inspiration and as a challenge to all young Americans today. Even before his appointment to the Supreme Court he had a record of achievement which few men could equal. He had already made himself known as a vital, aggressive fighter for justice, and as a man who was willing to give the great output of his brain and his character for improving the lot of his fellow men. Since he has been on the Supreme Court he has shown a passion for justice, and those attributes of kindness and generosity which are the only qualities that will make possible the survival of democracy.

It is a wonderful thing to contemplate a man the force of whose emotions is equaled by the power of his intellect. I know that I express the sentiments of the citizens of the State which I have the honor in part to represent when I wish for Mr. Justice Brandeis many years of health and happiness and continued usefulness to his fellow men.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as a Kentuckian I wish merely to express a word of appreciation for what both Senators from Massachusetts have said with respect to Mr. Justice Brandeis. He pursued in early life a course the reverse of that ordinarily pursued by young men in the East and in the Middle West. Instead of going west he went east. He was born in Kentucky. He was partly educated there. Finally he became a citizen of Massachusetts.

My first official contact with Mr. Justice Brandeis was as the chairman of a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives in 1914. There was before that subcommittee legislation which had been pending in one form or another in Congress for more than a quarter of a century, and Mr. Justice Brandeis, then Mr. Brandeis, appeared before the subcommittee in advocacy of the legislation. I did not agree with him as to the wisdom of the legislation, but I soon discovered by his manner of presentation that he had as intellectual a mind and as logical an approach to a given subject as any public man it had ever been my privilege to observe.

I recall the long contest involved in the confirmation of his nomination in 1916 in this Chamber, probably one of the most memorable contests over the confirmation of the nomination of a high appointive officer in the history of the Nation; and that contest, it seems to me, may afford us a lesson, even in our time, that, however much we may attempt to suppress honest thought and honest expression, we may not only find ourselves unable to do so, but we may find it extremely unwise to make the attempt.

Mr. Justice Brandeis has had a wholesome and refreshing influence on the Supreme Court. During most of his adult life he has had a similar influence upon discussions of public questions throughout the Nation. He will take his place with Marshall, with Story, with Taney, and with Holmes as an outstanding member of the Supreme Court.

I regret that the encroachment of age and the infirmities consequent thereto made it necessary or advisable for him to retire. I wish for him and for his family even longer life and greater happiness. Since he has been on the bench it has frequently been my great privilege to share his hospitality in his home. I hope that for the years which remain to him he may continue, in whatever form or fashion he himself may decide, to exercise that great and leveling influence which he has exercised in private and in public life during most of his 82 years on earth.

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS TO REPORT DURING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the adjournment of the Senate, which will be until tomorrow, the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to report such measures as it may be ready to report. I have in mind particularly the independent offices appropriation bill, which I understand is to be reported today. I have no desire to hold the Senate in session for that purpose. I ask that the committee be authorized to submit its report so that the Senate may take up the bill tomorrow and consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CENTENARY OF BIRTH OF FRANCES E. WILLARD

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, tomorrow, February 17, will be the anniversary of the death of an outstanding figure in American history, Frances E. Willard. She was born on September 28, 1839, in the village of Churchville, N. Y. I take this occasion to pay a deserving tribute to the memory of this noble woman, who achieved true greatness by her pioneering efforts in behalf of education, woman suffrage, temperance, and social justice. She is the only woman honored by having her statue in Statuary Hall in the Capitol Building.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed as part of my remarks an article appearing in the Union Signal on January 7, 1939.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MANIFOLD FACETS OF FRANCES WILLARD'S MIND REVEALED IN GREETINGS FOR HER CENTENARY YEAR SENT BY LEADERS OF TODAY'S HUMAN WELFARE GROUPS

Advocates of social change are often superficially labeled by the multitude. So today, in this year of the celebration of her centenary, Frances Willard is still cataloged in a large part of the public mind only as a temperance reformer. She was more than a temperance advocate. Temperance was not an isolated problem in her day any more than it is in 1939. "When we began the delicate, difficult, and dangerous operation of dissecting out the alcohol nerve from the body politic," she once explained, "we did not realize the intricacy of the undertaking nor the distances that must be traversed by the scalpel of investigation and research."

When Frances Willard set about to traverse those distances by introducing her "Do everything policy" into the W. C. T. U. her critics accused her of a "scatteration policy." She had an answer for them, for she had mapped her paths carefully. "Everything is not in the temperance reform," she agreed, "but the temperance reform should be in everything. The 'do-everything policy' was not of our choosing, but is an evolution, as inevitable as any traced by the naturalist or described by the historian. A one-sided movement makes one-sided advocates. Virtues, like hounds, hunt in packs. An all-around movement can only be carried forward by all-around advocates; a scientific age requires the study of every subject in its correlations. Standing in the valley, we look up and think we see an isolated mountain; climbing to its top, we see that it is but one member of a range of mountains, many of them of well-nigh equal altitude. Every question of practical philanthropy or reform has its temperance aspect, and with that we are to deal."

Practical philanthropy or reform—that was the keynote of her choice of activities and the standard she set for her world-wide followers. All during her busy life she had not only joined societies and organizations; she had herself been in the vanguard, had founded and organized, sponsored, and abetted the beginnings of humanitarian movements of innumerable sorts. The imprint she made upon her generation did not die with Frances Willard. Today, four decades later, the organizations she helped found have not forgotten the signposts she erected. In 1939 organized groups which live and prosper and see results of their efforts remember the groundwork laid for them by Frances Willard and her enlightened contemporaries. Her versatility is evidenced by her memberships and interests.

One of Miss Willard's younger friends, now nationally revered as valiant in the suffrage movement, where these two dynamic feminists worked together, brings this appraisal:

"The United States has never produced a greater woman than Frances E. Willard. Others sought opportunities for education, better laws, and the vote for women. Miss Willard envisaged women already equipped with those facilities and pictured many aims to be attained by such advanced women. From her thousands of women learned what to pray for, organize and work for, talk, write, and publicly speak for. She inspired a world of women.

"CARRIE CHAPMAN CATT."

In 1888 Frances Willard and Susan B. Anthony and May Wright Sewall and other analytical women had seen the need for a clearing house of women's activities in the United States and the world. And so they brought 5,000 people together in Albaugh's Opera House in Washington, D. C., and organized the National Council of Women. Frances Willard was elected president. The national W. C. T. U. was to have the advantage of conference with other women's organizations; these other groups were to hear that the liquor question belonged to them, as mothers and wives, just as much as it belonged to a temperance organization. Today the president of the National Council of Women says of her famous predecessor:

"The National Council of Women of the United States, Inc., is justly proud to claim Frances E. Willard, the greatest woman philanthropist of the nineteenth century, as its first president and cofounder with Susan B. Anthony and May Wright Sewall. She stands as a shining light among other splendid women of her time who strangely enough had to fight to prove that both the responsibility for and the guidance of human affairs belong to women as well as to men.

"She has handed the women of America a challenge to use the ballot to good purpose and the women of the world a sacred trust to stand for tolerance, justice, and civil liberty for all men, women, and children alike.

"I feel sure that her life motive was 'I am my brother's keeper' and that in this centenary celebration of her devotion to mankind, she would bid us efface self in the service of the agonizing world of today.

"RUTH HALLER OTTAWAY,
"President, National Council of Women."

The recent Edinburgh convention of the International Council of Women paid tribute to the talent of the woman who helped draw up its founding constitution—Frances Willard.

In the same year that Frances Willard helped organize the National Council of Women, college girls who were just coming into the rich heritage for which she was partly responsible, elected her president of their national fraternity, Alpha Phi. Thirteen years previous a cultured, traveled woman had gone to Syracuse University to give an address before the Woman Congress then in session. From among the galaxy of speakers, including Julia Ward Howe, Mary Livermore, Susan B. Anthony, and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, the girls had chosen to ask the slender, auburn-haired little Frances Willard, in her brown tailored suit, to honor their sorority by her membership. After the meeting, the girls sat on the floor at her feet in their chapter house as she talked to them of ideals and of what they might do with their lives. Sixty-four years later 11,000 active and alumnae members of Alpha Phi international fraternity celebrate the centenary of their famous sister and reconsider in the light of today the problems she believed important. The international president writes from Canada:

"We of Alpha Phi international fraternity are proud and honored to claim Frances E. Willard, who was once our national president as an esteemed member.

"We felt extremely privileged to participate in the auspicious opening celebration of the centenary year of Frances Willard, last September 28, the day of dedication of Willard Hall, Northwestern University, a beautiful, new dormitory for freshmen women, which bears her name. It was a most inspiring afternoon, and even more inspiring when we realize that Miss Willard was the first dean of women at this university and remembered the important and significant part she played in promoting education for women. Our international organization (and hers) felt it a great honor to be allowed to present the university with an exquisite portrait of Frances Willard to hang in the entrance hall of the new building. This portrait was painted by Karl Buehr from a small daguerreotype taken when Miss Willard was a young woman of college age. It is our most sincere hope and prayer that the spirit expressed in this firm but young face, as she sits in a soft green frock, leaning slightly forward, eagerly and ardently looking out, ahead, will not fail to leave its impress on the girls so fortunate as to live in Willard Hall and under the aegis of this great woman.

"We have made many and varied plans to pay tribute to Miss Willard during the year. Our various chapters throughout the United States and Canada will celebrate at times most suitable to them and with ceremonies appropriate for the occasion. Last September 28 our chapter at Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, planted Frances Willard peonies with due ceremony. In October, at Rollins College, a most fitting service was held in connection with the Frances Willard stone in the Walk of Fame at that university. Early in this year our chapters at Goucher College and American University, in cooperation with the alumnae chapters of that district, plan to place a wreath at the foot of the statue of Frances Willard in the Capitol at Washington.

"I am sure it will mean a very great deal in the lives of our modern college girls to participate in these celebrations, and that in so doing it will help them to realize the significance of Miss Willard's achievements so amazingly accomplished when the emancipation of women was still in its beginnings—offering them a challenge to prepare for the tremendous opportunities—and equally tremendous obligations—for women in the world today.

"It is such a wonderful work that you are doing, and may this year be one of the most successful and encouraging that you have yet known.

"DOROTHY KERNOHAN,
"President, Alpha Phi International Fraternity."

Alpha Phi's of today are likewise honored in election to high office, as was their sister, Frances Willard, who wrote of her childhood: "Mother had talked to us so much about America that from earliest recollection we had spelled nation with a capital N. To us our native land was a cherishing mother, like our own in gentleness and strength, only having so many more children, grateful and glad, under her thoughtful care. We loved to give her praises, and half believed that sometime, when we grew big enough, and got out into the wide, wide world, we should find her and kneel to offer her our loving service and to ask her blessing." Thus in womanhood wrote this descendant of one of the founders of Concord, who became a charter member (No. 243) of the Daughters of the American Revolution and a cofounder of the Chicago D. A. R. Chapter. The W. C. T. U. has an evangelistic department; the D. A. R. elects a chaplain for each unit; the W. C. T. U. promotes child welfare; the D. A. R. sponsors schools and homes of inestimable character-building value. Their president general writes:

"Frances E. Willard was an early member of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, of which I now hold the office of president general. She received a degree from Syracuse University, from which I was graduated. She was a member of the Alpha Phi fraternity, to which I belong. Not alone for these reasons, but also for her nobility of character, her far-seeing vision, and her courage of conviction, I am happy to express appreciation of the life and service of Frances E. Willard upon the beginning of the year, which marks the one hundredth anniversary of her birth.

"SARAH CORBIN ROBERT,
"President General,
"Daughters of the American Revolution."

The college girl of the fifties, who became a school teacher because practically no other field was open to her professionally, saw, in 1879, the National Education Association, representing the teachers of the United States, take a favorable pioneer stand on the question of teaching to the children of the Nation the effects of alcohol upon the human system. In all the years which have followed, the N. E. A. has said, "Thus saith science." The editor of its journal writes, in 1939:

"Many of the benefits of civilized living which we today enjoy have come in consequence of the leadership of women who for insight, courage, and persistent application of their talents to a noble cause rank at the very top of the list of the Nation's heroic pioneers. Such a woman was Frances E. Willard. Too few women today appreciate the struggles of those early days or realize how recently women have come into the heritage they now enjoy or understand the struggles yet to be won before women can rise to their fullest usefulness and happiness.

"H. A. Overstreet in his admirable book, 'We Move in New Directions,' describes seven adventures in pioneering which are the history of the American people, the sixth of which he lists as the pioneering associated with Frances E. Willard and her contemporaries against sex tyranny and injustice.

"Overstreet then goes on to point out that each of these great enterprises in pioneering failed to carry itself to completion. To face that fact and to take up anew where the first pioneers left off is the task of the oncoming generation. They are fast coming to occupy positions of leadership. Will they really lead or merely occupy the positions? Upon the answer to that question hangs the future of American civilization. May the life and work of Frances E. Willard challenge and inspire a host of needed new pioneers.

"JOY ELMER MORGAN,
"Editor, Journal of the National Education Association."

From school teacher to college president progressed the amazing Frances Willard and when, in 1873, her college merged with Northwestern University she became its first dean of women. With the progress of the years she added, to the four degrees she held at that time, an LL. D. from Ohio Wesleyan. She served as a member of the board of trustees of Northwestern University and watched the idea of student self-government, which she had originated in the early seventies, spread and take root nationally. No tribute to Frances Willard would be complete until the university women of today speak. Were she living, they would welcome her mind and training and abilities to their ranks.

"The American Association of University Women is happy to send greetings to The Union Signal in recognition of the one hundredth anniversary year of the birth of Frances E. Willard, one of the great women educators of the past century. Frances Willard is remembered primarily in connection with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, but her services to the cause of the higher education of women were no less distinguished. As professor, dean, and college president she worked valiantly for the cause, and in her own great career she exemplified the highest ideals of the educated woman who gives her life in service to her generation.

"MARGARET S. MORRIS,
"President, American Association of University Women."

Active at the New Orleans exposition in 1885 was the opportunist, Frances Willard. Seven years before, she and her sister-in-law had taken over the editorship of her late brother's Chicago paper. At New Orleans were many newspaperwomen. She saw that if women were to advance in this particular field, they must band together, as had the presswomen in the W. C. T. U., and she became a founder of the Illinois Woman's Press Association, whose contemporary president writes:

"The Illinois Woman's Press Association (the world's oldest organization of professional women writers) is proud and happy to join in the observance of the centenary of Frances E. Willard, its most distinguished founder member. With inspired vision she foresaw that women would wield, through the press of the world, a power undreamed of in those early years; and she envisioned the character of that power when she wrote:

"The journalistic temperament is almost the finest in the world—keen, kind, progressive, and humanitarian."

"That high standard is a torch which, for more than half a century, has led the Illinois Woman's Press Association to a scope of activities which encompasses many of the ideals of Frances Willard. Thus we do her honor.

"HELEN MILLER MALLOCH,
"President, Illinois Woman's Press Association."

Had there been an organization known as the Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs in Frances Willard's day, she would indeed have had an active part therein. It is not surprising that the national group of this name is planning as part of its biennial convention program an observance of the centenary of this woman, who gave such momentum to women's progress in the last century. Aptly, and reverently, the international president of this organization pays tribute:

"A teacher with the world for a classroom was Frances E. Willard. A spiritual leader who touched human need at many points and blessed whatever cause her hand fell upon.

"We of the International Federation of Business and Professional Women must also claim her as incentive and guide. For she pioneered in the land which we were to possess. And much of that which she dreamed and did has come as rich heritage to our members everywhere.

"LENA MADESIN PHILLIPS,
"President, International Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs."

The power of banded church women was of vital importance to Frances Willard; she knew, truly, that organized Christian womanhood was but another name for the W. C. T. U., that the power of the W. C. T. U. lay in the strength of membership within the churches. Writing in the absence of the president of the National Council of Federated Church Women, the vice president says:

"The National Council of Church Women, on this centenary of the birth of Frances E. Willard, bring tribute to her as the exemplification of the finest type of church woman—one who in the Christian church found the inspiration for her noble work of reform.

"ANNA A. KNIPP,
"Vice President, National Council of Church Women."

It is not given to many leaders of national organizations today to have personal memories of possibly the most unusual and most talented organizer of women the United States has ever known. The president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the largest group of organized women of this country, has this pleasure. Graciously she speaks of her personal heritage. Expressing appreciation for the general federation constituency, who owe so much to the woman who opened wide the personal and political and social horizons for women of today, she writes:

"The General Federation of Women's Clubs unites with other national and local organizations in paying homage to Frances E. Willard, who was a truly great woman and a great American. We are ever mindful of the contribution which she made to the cultural life of America; of her courageous leadership against injustice, inequalities, and particularly of her leadership in a campaign against a deadly foe of the home, the child, and of community life.

"To have known Frances E. Willard even as a child was to recognize a leader of great personal charm and magnetism and to sense her power and influence. Personally, we still remember the day she pinned the emblem of her organization upon a bright-red dress which became so important that no one was permitted to even touch it. It became a consecration. The kindly words spoken at the time became an inspiration which lived during girlhood, young motherhood, and into the later mature years. When the news of her death, in 1898, reached the Pacific coast it was as though a sad personal or family message had come to each of us.

"Few women have continued to live so vitally in the hearts of other people. How often we find the perfect expression of our own thoughts in her writings—how often we turn to her for courage in 'carrying on.' She had lived a full life which seemed only to develop other qualities and capacities. Do we not envy a woman who could labor without ceasing, yet remain so calm and serene that her last words should have been, 'How beautiful it is to be with God'?

"Together, the great women's organizations must press on into the demands of this day and this hour. As we face 1939, we shall need the courage and faith of Frances E. Willard entrenched in our own hearts. She worked for God, home, and country. We shall do the same and we shall ultimately win.

"The General Federation of Women's Clubs pays tribute to Frances E. Willard and extends a friendly hand toward the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. 'We are together for the sake of all.'"

"SAIDIE ORR DUNBAR,
"President, General Federation of Women's Clubs."

A seer and a prophet, Frances Willard informed herself constantly as regards the latest inventions. She saw the possibilities of the phonograph and had her voice and the voice of her mother recorded. Whatever was new, she looked at it with the mental query: How can the temperance cause be helped by this? Had she lived in the day of radio, she would have been one of the first to send into the ether her pleas for alcohol education, advantages for women and children, and a general lifting of the social order. The head of the woman's organization having to do with radio writes:

"Frances E. Willard was one of the greatest pioneers of the nineteenth century; a leader in education, temperance, philanthropy, suffrage, and in uniting the women of the world that they might find their rightful place in the political, social, and economic life in all lands.

"Truly she had a prophetic eye, and were she living in the twentieth century, she would doubtless be active in the field of radio, recognizing its potentialities and its influence on the cultural life of the world.

"In 1939, the centenary of Miss Willard's birth, women throughout the world are happy to pay tribute to this great leader who, by her steadfastness of purpose, her tolerance, her philosophy, and her courage, helped to pave the way for the developments and achievements of today.

"YOLANDA MERO-IRION,
"Chairman, Women's National Radio Committee."

What limitless opportunities for the use of motion pictures Frances Willard would have visioned in the invention that was, within a decade after her death, to leap into popularity. Surely the films which the national W. C. T. U. sponsors, and which were made possible through the national temperance education fund, would warm the heart of the woman who adapted all media that came her way to further the scientific teaching of the effects of alcohol. How she would have worked against the harmful features of the present pictures, and how she would have gone out of her way to laud their excellent aspects, working cooperatively with just such a person as is the well-known president of the present Motion Picture Research Council, who writes:

"Frances E. Willard was one of the first American women to make her influence felt throughout the Nation. She had unusual capacity and industry and was a natural-born organizer. It is a real pleasure to send a message of congratulation and greeting on behalf of the Motion Picture Research Council.

"RAY LYMAN WILBUR,
"President, Motion Picture Research Council."

No person with the all-inclusive view that was Frances Willard's could do anything but take a positive stand for peace. She who coined the expression, "Only the golden rule of Christ can bring the golden age of man," worked constantly for peace through everything she did. Her creed was ever a high standard of Christian living and relationships. The president of an organization which pools the peace sentiments of many national organizations, says:

"In celebrating the centenary of the birth of Frances Willard, I would declare my faith that within the next 100 years peace will be more inevitable than war. As war in the past century enlarged its destructiveness by ever more deadly use of science, so in the next century I look for religion and the conscience of humanity to turn victoriously against the war method and the causes from which war springs. We shall utilize the discoveries of science for cooperative planning instead of competitive killing.

"Frances Willard was one of God's chosen vessels for this purpose. She sensed the iniquity of war just as she saw the devastation wrought by liquor. Against both these evils she set in motion gathering forces in the fields of education, feminism, internationalism, and Christianity. The peace movement of the world should be grateful for her contributions and its continuing impetus through the great organization with which she was associated.

"JOHN NEVIN SAYRE,
"President, National Peace Conference."

"To make the whole world more homelike" was Frances Willard's simple but sympathetic way of defining her many activities. She knew the power of motherhood; the potentialities that lay in the brief home-training period for which the mother was responsible. To each baby was due, she advocated, an untainted birthright and a wholesome, well-rounded childhood. An organization which today fosters such principles sends its greetings to this Frances Willard centenary symposium:

"Better than any monument to Frances E. Willard is earnest work to raise the place of women in our national life; to increase the opportunities for their services and special contributions; to help them give as she gave of her own gifts of idealism and intellect. Miss Willard's life and work conclusively indicate that were she living today her guidance would be given to the cause for which the National Council for Mothers and Babies is working. She could not tolerate the unnecessary loss of thousands of lives of mothers and babies each year because we have not yet found a way to distribute needed care. She would rejoice in the fact that over 50 national organizations, covering in their membership those with medical skill—the doctors and nurses—and those who know through their own experience the needs of women, the general organizations of farm women, of women's clubs, have joined their forces to reduce maternal and infant death. She would be proud that the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union is active in this group, working to the best of its ability to bring better care to the mothers and babies of the United States.

"AUGUSTA J. STREET,
"Chairman, National Council for Mothers and Babies."

Once the child begins to leave the constantly sheltering atmosphere of the home and comes to buffet outside contacts, there must be self-developing training, and particularly is this true in the transition period between babyhood and school life. With her sister-in-law, Mary Bannister Willard, Frances Willard opened the first free kindergarten in her home city of Evanston. She abetted the activities of a kindergarten department within the National W. C. T. U. Today, in an age of specialization, there is one national organization which makes the establishment of kindergartens its major. Its founder writes:

"Kind greetings to all members of your organization in this eagerly shared centennial year. The name of Frances Elizabeth Willard is an inspiration to many organizations. Her 'do everything' policy was not a hit-and-miss scattering of effort but, 'distinguished by simplicity and unity,' it was the exemplification of her motto, 'Each for all.'

"Froebel had opened his first kindergarten 2 years before Frances Willard was born and her mother seems to have come into contact with some of his teachings. In her relations with her own children she showed very unusual understanding, so it is not surprising that Miss Willard later became deeply interested in the increase of kindergartens. Under her leadership, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union formed a kindergarten department with a national superintendent.

"Inspired by the earnestness of their great president, the members secured the establishment of kindergartens in many cities throughout the country. It required much perseverance and self-sacrifice to accomplish this, but Frances Willard said, 'Only the golden rule of Christ can bring the golden age of man.' This is just as true today, isn't it?

"BESSIE LOCKE,
"Founder and Executive Secretary,
"National Kindergarten Association."

Seventy-five years ago Frances Willard, not many years out of college, and teaching in the Pittsburgh Female College, went to hear John B. Gough speak and was concerned about all problems which touched Christians. Among the groups laying the groundwork for the activities of the mature Frances Willard was the National Reform Association. Its present national president speaks for that organization and for the National Temperance and Prohibition Council, of which, also, he is president.

"Since the world began, I suppose, no one has rendered as great service to the cause of temperance as the founder of your world's organization, the centenary of whose birth will be celebrated this year. For the contribution she made to this cause every national reformer loves and reveres Frances E. Willard. But national reformers have a deeper love and higher reverence for her because she set before herself and before the Christian womanhood of the world which she organized, a far greater task, a much more inclusive purpose than the destruction of the liquor traffic. This she expressed for herself and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in one of her great messages delivered at a national convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union: 'One vital organic thought, one absorbing purpose, one undying ambition. It is that Christ shall be the world's King * * * King of its courts, its camps, its commerce; King of its colleges and cloisters; King of its customs and constitutions * * * Christ and His law, the true basis of government and the supreme authority in national and in individual life.'

"It is here that Miss Willard and national reformers, the W. C. T. U., and the National Reform Association came into close kinship. For this association which I have the honor to represent, and which has just celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of its birth, through all these years has had as the great objective of its efforts the bringing of this Nation—of the civic realm of the world's life—into willing and loyal subjection to Christ, as its King.

"So on this centenary anniversary of the birth of your great leader we National Reformers clasp hands with you of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in the great task of overthrowing the liquor traffic, and the still greater task of bringing the world to accept its true King.

"The National Temperance and Prohibition Council, representing some 25 national temperance groups and several State organizations, extends greetings and best wishes to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union on this the centenary of the birth of Frances E. Willard.

"The best tribute we can pay to Frances E. Willard is in giving our lives in new devotion to that cause for which she gave the last full measure of devotion.

"R. H. MARTIN,

"President, National Temperance and Prohibition Council."

The many facets of the character and life of Frances Willard continue to reflect enlightenment wherever there are today organizations working for social betterment. National and international groups are developing plans to observe her centenary.

In Paris, at the Sorbonne, 3,000 persons will gather on February 19 to hear an address by the international authority on alcohol, Dr. Robert Herold. Two temperance organizations in France, the White Ribbon, equivalent of the W. C. T. U., and the Blue Cross group, plan celebrations.

From India and Australia, Canada and Scotland, word is being received of the movements which are getting under way to honor Frances Willard during her centenary year. At Helsingfors, Finland, in July, an international group will convene and devote part of its convention program to a recognition of the centenary. A dozen or more national groups in Frances Willard's homeland are organizing the details of their observances, and the W. C. T. U., to which she particularly belongs, has a many-sided program now in progress which culminates in the national convention in Rochester in September, and the pilgrimage to her birthplace at nearby Churchville on the centenary day, September 28, 1939.

There will be simultaneous observances by the thousands of local unions throughout the country when Frances Willard bookshelves will be presented to school and public libraries; when Frances Willard peonies will be planted and Willard centenary souvenir maps displayed. Young women will impersonate Frances Willard through the dramatic monolog, The Uncrowned Queen, and magazines of the country will carry to the reading public articles on Frances Willard and the countless activities for human welfare that she inaugurated and organized through her "do everything" vision and zeal.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Harry M. Brennan, of Louisville, Ky., to be collector of customs collection district No. 42, with headquarters at Louisville, Ky. (Reappointment.)

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Navy.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the following nominations:

Edward J. Noble, of Connecticut, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the term expiring December 31, 1940, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate;

G. Grant Mason, Jr., of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the term expiring December 31, 1941, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate;

Oswald Ryan, of Indiana, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the term expiring December 31, 1942, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate;

Robert H. Hinckley, of Utah, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the term expiring December 31, 1943, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate;

Harilee Branch, of Georgia, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the term expiring December 31, 1944, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate;

Clinton M. Hester, of Montana, to be Administrator in the Civil Aeronautics Authority, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate;

Sumpter Smith, of Alabama, to be a member of the Air Safety Board within the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the term expiring December 31, 1944, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate;

Thomas O. Hardin, of Texas, to be a member of the Air Safety Board within the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the term expiring December 31, 1942, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate;

Robert W. Bruere, of New York, to be a member of the Maritime Labor Board for the term expiring June 22, 1941, the office to which he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate;

Claude E. Seehorn, of Colorado, to be a member of the Maritime Labor Board for the term expiring June 22, 1941, the office to which he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate; and

Louis Bloch, of California, to be a member of the Maritime Labor Board for the term expiring June 22, 1941, the office to which he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for promotion in the Coast Guard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE—JAMES V. ALLRED

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James V. Allred to be United States district judge for the southern district of Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This nomination has previously been passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of this nomination. I presented to the Judiciary Committee, of which I am a member, such objections as I felt were proper, and also the fact that I have received a large number of communications from the State of Texas in opposition to confirmation. Notwithstanding the objections which were presented, my colleagues upon the committee felt constrained to recommend confirmation. I then stated, as I shall now indicate, that I could not and would not vote for confirmation. However, I shall not ask for any further delay.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the statement which I made to the Judiciary Committee with respect to this appointment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

SIR: Will you kindly give me, for the use of the committee, your opinion and information concerning the nomination of Hon. James V. Allred, of Texas, to be United States district judge for the southern district of Texas?

Under a rule of the committee, unless a reply is received from you within a week from this date, it will be assumed that you have no objection to this nomination.

Respectfully,

HENRY F. ASHURST, Chairman.

HON. TOM CONNALLY,
United States Senate.

REPLY

JANUARY 16, 1939.

DEAR CHAIRMAN ASHURST: In compliance with a long-standing rule of the Judiciary Committee, you have called upon the Texas Senators for our opinion and information concerning the nomination of Hon. James V. Allred to be district judge for the southern district of Texas. In reply to your inquiry, frankness compels me to state that I did not favor the appointment of Governor Allred as such district judge. I actively supported Hon. Walton D. Taylor, of Houston, Tex. Both in writing and in person I urged the appointment of Mr. Taylor upon the Attorney General and upon the President, and personally accompanied Mr. Taylor on a visit to the Attorney General in behalf of his appointment. President Roosevelt did not see fit to follow my suggestion, but, under authority vested in him, made his own selection. However, in view of the exercise by President Roosevelt of his power of appointment, I have no objection which I care to urge as to confirmation.

TOM CONNALLY.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to state that I have no objection to this nomination and that I favor confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE—FRANK A. PICARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank A. Picard to be United States district judge for the eastern district of Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE—T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH

The legislative clerk read the nomination of T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH to be United States district judge for the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of this nomination. Before the Judiciary Committee I invited attention to the fact that Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH is not a resident of the District of Columbia. In view of the vast amount of litigation arising within the District, I felt that some resident of the District, a lawyer of ability and competence—and there are many—should have been selected, rather than some person who is not a resident of the District. I do attest to the ability and competency of Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. My only objection was that he was not a resident of the District, and I felt that the situation called for a resident of the District for judicial service within the District.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, without dissenting at all from the view expressed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and without any purpose in the world to project myself into the affairs of Maryland, I will say that my own association with Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH on conference committees of the Banking and Currency Committees of the two Houses prompts me to say that I have never in my life met a more frank, more honorable, or more trustworthy man than ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH. He might not agree with you, and very often did not agree with me, but we always knew what his opinion was, and when he expressed it he stood by it. I hope the Senate will unanimously confirm the nomination.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, I am very glad indeed to hear the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] express himself as he has. This appointment is agreeable to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and to myself. I urged President Roosevelt to give Representative GOLDSBOROUGH this appointment as judge.

It happens that I have known Representative GOLDSBOROUGH all his life. We were born and raised in adjoining counties of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, and I have always been in close touch with him. As a member of the bar he easily acquired a prominent position early in life. He was State's attorney for his county, and he made a very excellent record as prosecuting officer. About 20 years ago he was elected to the House of Representatives, and has been reelected each 2 years since then, usually by increasing majorities. No representative from the Eastern Shore of Maryland, which is the First District of Maryland, has ever received majorities as large as Representative GOLDSBOROUGH has obtained on certain occasions.

By reason of the fact that his home was very close to Washington, and also because of his close interest in and devotion to the law, he has managed to continue the practice of law to a limited extent. However, he has always cherished the ambition to become a judge; and now that this opportunity is open to him, I sincerely hope that his nomination will be confirmed. I am satisfied that as a judge he will show the same ability, the same integrity, and the same conscientious regard for duty which have characterized his activities as a lawyer, as a Member of Congress, and as a private citizen.

I sincerely hope the nomination will be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Alex Smith to be United States marshal for the northern district of Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James H. Patterson to be United States marshal for the third division of the Territory of Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That concludes the Executive Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, February 17, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 16, 1939

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Shackelford Miller, Jr., of Kentucky, to be United States district judge for the western district of Kentucky, vice Elwood Hamilton, elevated to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The following-named passed assistant surgeons to be surgeons in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from the dates set opposite their names:

Albert T. Morrison, February 1, 1939.

Langdon R. White, March 9, 1939.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

MEDICAL ADMINISTRATIVE CORPS

To be second lieutenants with rank from date of appointment

Second Lt. Claud Dale La Fors, Infantry Reserve.

Bernard Korn, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ennis Dallas Sandberg, of Kansas City, Kans.

James Thomas Richards, of Austin, Tex.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Maj. Owen Meredith Marshburn, Field Artillery, with rank from August 1, 1935.

TO ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT

First Lt. Ferdinand Marion Humphries, Coast Artillery Corps, with rank from June 13, 1936.

First Lt. Jermain Ferdinand Rodenhauser, Coast Artillery Corps, with rank from August 1, 1935.

First Lt. James Donald Sams, Infantry, with rank from August 1, 1935.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

MEDICAL CORPS

To be lieutenant colonel

Maj. Carlton Culley Starkes, Medical Corps, from March 1, 1939.

To be major

Capt. Dean McLaughlin Walker, Medical Corps, from March 5, 1939.

To be captains

First Lt. William Congdon Harrison, Medical Corps, from March 7, 1939.

First Lt. Joseph Rich, Medical Corps, from March 7, 1939.

First Lt. Francis Fred Viglione, Medical Corps, from March 30, 1939.

DENTAL CORPS

To be captains

First Lt. George Henry Timke, Jr., Dental Corps, from March 11, 1939.

First Lt. Clyde Danford Oatman, Jr., Dental Corps, from March 26, 1939.

VETERINARY CORPS

To be captain

First Lt. John Kenneth Allen, Veterinary Corps, from March 15, 1939.

CHAPLAINS

Chaplain Alva Jennings Brasted (lieutenant colonel), to be chaplain with the rank of colonel, United States Army, from March 3, 1939.

Chaplain Herbert Adron Rinard (major), to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel, United States Army, from March 10, 1939.

APPOINTMENT IN THE NAVY

Capt. Harry A. Stuart, an additional number in grade, to be a rear admiral in the Navy.

POSTMASTERS

IOWA

Clarence N. Hildebrand to be postmaster at Belmond, Iowa, in place of C. N. Hildebrand. Incumbent's commission expired June 6, 1938.

Albert E. Newell to be postmaster at Eddyville, Iowa, in place of A. E. Newell. Incumbent's commission expired June 18, 1938.

Asa Earl Boyer to be postmaster at Maquoketa, Iowa, in place of A. E. Boyer. Incumbent's commission expired March 14, 1938.

Mark F. Hogan to be postmaster at Monticello, Iowa, in place of M. F. Hogan. Incumbent's commission expired May 31, 1938.

LOUISIANA

Owen R. Phillips to be postmaster at Glenmora, La., in place of O. R. Phillips. Incumbent's commission expired June 6, 1938.

Philip C. Girlinghouse to be postmaster at Jena, La., in place of P. C. Girlinghouse. Incumbent's commission expired June 18, 1938.

Thomas E. Barham to be postmaster at Oak Ridge, La., in place of T. E. Barham. Incumbent's commission expired June 6, 1938.

MAINE

Guy W. Swan to be postmaster at Princeton, Maine, in place of G. W. Swan. Incumbent's commission expired April 2, 1938.

Charlene F. Tebbetts to be postmaster at Readfield, Maine. Office became Presidential July 1, 1938.

MASSACHUSETTS

Robert E. Smith to be postmaster at Townsend, Mass., in place of R. E. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired April 2, 1938.

MICHIGAN

William V. Clegg to be postmaster at Eaton Rapids, Mich., in place of W. V. Clegg. Incumbent's commission expired April 27, 1938.

John D. Mershon to be postmaster at Saginaw, Mich., in place of J. D. Mershon. Incumbent's commission expired May 22, 1938.

MINNESOTA

William E. Charlton to be postmaster at Williams, Minn., in place of W. E. Charlton. Incumbent's commission expired June 12, 1938.

MISSISSIPPI

Levi G. Bassett to be postmaster at Louin, Miss., in place of L. G. Bassett. Incumbent's commission expired February 10, 1938.

MISSOURI

Hugh M. Price to be postmaster at La Monte, Mo., in place of H. M. Price. Incumbent's commission expired April 25, 1938.

Lonnie A. B. Leslie to be postmaster at Russellville, Mo., in place of L. A. B. Leslie. Incumbent's commission expired June 13, 1938.

MONTANA

Alvin O. Lien to be postmaster at Brockton, Mont., in place of A. O. Lien. Incumbent's commission expired June 18, 1938.

NEW MEXICO

Rosalie E. Branch to be postmaster at Mora, N. Mex., in place of Rosalie Branch. Incumbent's commission expired June 7, 1938.

NEW YORK

Austin A. Crary to be postmaster at East Rockaway, N. Y., in place of A. A. Crary. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1938.

James E. Burns to be postmaster at Glen Cove, N. Y., in place of J. E. Burns. Incumbent's commission expired June 15, 1938.

Royal B. Ingersoll to be postmaster at Houghton, N. Y., in place of R. B. Ingersoll. Incumbent's commission expired June 18, 1938.

Rae M. Schoonmaker to be postmaster at Kerhonkson, N. Y., in place of R. M. Schoonmaker. Incumbent's commission expired June 18, 1938.

Mary J. Morgan to be postmaster at Medford Station, N. Y., in place of M. J. Morgan. Incumbent's commission expired June 18, 1938.

Albert Goldman to be postmaster at New York, N. Y., in place of Albert Goldman. Incumbent's commission expired January 16, 1939.

William E. Farnsworth to be postmaster at Oakfield, N. Y., in place of W. E. Farnsworth. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1938.

Joseph J. Cruse to be postmaster at Poland, N. Y., in place of J. J. Cruse. Incumbent's commission expired May 28, 1938.

NORTH CAROLINA

Samuel B. Hovis to be postmaster at Bessemer City, N. C., in place of S. B. Hovis. Incumbent's commission expired June 18, 1938.

Clarence G. Pike to be postmaster at Fremont, N. C., in place of C. G. Pike. Incumbent's commission expired June 18, 1938.

Fred W. Kluttz to be postmaster at Rockwell, N. C. Office became Presidential July 1, 1938.

PENNSYLVANIA

John C. Amig to be postmaster at Lewistown, Pa., in place of J. C. Amig. Incumbent's commission expired June 6, 1938.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Walter W. Goudelock to be postmaster at Pacolet Mills, S. C. Office became Presidential July 1, 1938.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Ira H. Pinnell to be postmaster at Eagle Butte, S. Dak., in place of I. H. Pinnell. Incumbent's commission expired May 22, 1938.

Ray W. Pitsor to be postmaster at Faith, S. Dak., in place of R. W. Pitsor. Incumbent's commission expired May 22, 1938.

TEXAS

Edward F. Gaston to be postmaster at Dayton, Tex., in place of E. F. Gaston. Incumbent's commission expired June 9, 1938.

Effe P. Minnock to be postmaster at Galena Park, Tex., in place of E. P. Minnock. Incumbent's commission expired June 12, 1938.

Joe C. Martin to be postmaster at Itasca, Tex., in place of J. C. Martin. Incumbent's commission expired April 25, 1938.

Fred Boothe to be postmaster at Gonzales, Tex., in place of Fred Boothe. Incumbent's commission expired June 18, 1938.

Pauline L. Bogatto to be postmaster at Lamarque, Tex. Office became Presidential July 1, 1938.

Maud Collier to be postmaster at Pelly, Tex., in place of Maud Collier. Incumbent's commission expired June 12, 1938.

Daniel J. Quill to be postmaster at San Antonio, Tex., in place of D. J. Quill. Incumbent's commission expired February 15, 1939.

VERMONT

Ernest A. Naylor to be postmaster at Alburg, Vt., in place of E. A. Naylor. Incumbent's commission expired May 12, 1938.

Peter E. Kehoe to be postmaster at West Pawlet, Vt., in place of P. E. Kehoe. Incumbent's commission expired April 25, 1938.

VIRGINIA

Elizabeth P. White to be postmaster at Sandston, Va. Office became Presidential July 1, 1937.

WASHINGTON

Pearl G. M. Johnson to be postmaster at Mercer Island, Wash. Office became Presidential July 1, 1938.

Eudocia B. Leech to be postmaster at Steilacoom, Wash., in place of E. B. Leech. Incumbent's commission expired June 6, 1938.

WISCONSIN

Vincent J. Dwyer to be postmaster at Alma Center, Wis., in place of V. J. Dwyer. Incumbent's commission expired June 15, 1938.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 16, 1939

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES

James V. Allred to be United States district judge for the southern district of Texas.

Frank A. Picard to be United States district judge for the eastern district of Michigan.

T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH to be United States district judge for the District of Columbia.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

Alex Smith to be United States marshal for the northern district of Alabama.

James H. Patterson to be United States marshal for the third division of the Territory of Alaska.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O changeless One, life's guide and spiritual goal, stimulate our thoughts with the blessedness of the riches of Thy goodness, mercy, love, and pity. May all hearts be joined together in the common love of our common Father and grant that all laws and institutions may feel Thy presence. O gather into Thy encircling arms and soft mothering bosom the sick in all homes and in all institutions. Be the angel of light and hope upon their immortal souls like dawn upon the hills of earth. Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy holy name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SUNDRY MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Hess, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed a joint resolution and a bill of the House of the following titles:

On February 4, 1939:

H. J. Res. 83. Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

On February 10, 1939:

H. R. 2762. An act to consolidate and codify the internal revenue laws of the United States.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

FEBRUARY 15, 1939.

The SPEAKER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The certificate of election, in due form of law, of Hon. LANSDALE G. SASSCER as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-sixth Congress from the Fifth Congressional District of the State of Maryland, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Stephen W. Gambrill, is on file in this office.

Very truly yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

SWEARING-IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. SASSCER appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 53, Seventy-fourth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission the following Members of the House to fill existing vacancies thereon: Mr. McGRANERY, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. DARROW, of Pennsylvania.

GOLDEN GATE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, on next Saturday at noon the Golden Gate International Exposition will open its gates to the world. It is my distinguished privilege, as the Representative of the district in which it has been built, to extend to all of the Members of Congress a most cordial invitation to visit this great exposition.

Those of you who attended the last world's fair held in San Francisco—the Panama-Pacific Exposition of 1915—all retain, I am sure, memories of its rare beauty and charm. San Francisco assures you that its new exposition will be a worthy successor to that dream city of the past.

The 1915 fair commemorated the completion of the Panama Canal, the miracle of engineering which linked the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

The 1939 exposition celebrates two new engineering miracles, the great bridges spanning San Francisco Bay, each the largest of its type in the world.

The site of the exposition is an artificial island, built in the center of the bay, between the two bridges. It has been christened Treasure Island, and upon it there stands today a spectacular city of exhibit palaces, surrounded by beautiful gardens and trees of every species.

The people of San Francisco are grateful to the Congress of the United States for its generous appropriation for the Federal Building and exhibit, which will be one of the most attractive features of the exposition. And they are extremely anxious that the Members of Congress shall see for themselves the good use to which this money has been put.

The gentleman from California [Mr. Buck] and I will leave here by plane this afternoon to attend the opening of the exposition. We would like to take all of the Members of the House with us, but, regretting that this is an impossibility, we shall carry with us instead, by your leave, the greetings and good wishes of Congress to the people of California, assembled by the Golden Gate.

The exposition will continue until December 2, 1939. It is styled "A Pageant of the Pacific." Eleven Western States of America are its sponsors, with the San Francisco Bay area as host community, and more than 30 foreign nations participating. Its designers have built a compact world's fair, stressing beauty and glamour rather than size, and have taken every advantage of Treasure Island's unique setting in the center of a great harbor.

Here stand the two wonder bridges of the world—the $80,000,000 San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge, longest and most costly anywhere; and the $33,000,000 Golden Gate Bridge, crossing the harbor entrance with the longest single span ever created.

Over these two steel structures huge clipper ships fly on schedule to the Orient, bringing distant Asia within days, not weeks, of America. This ocean air service has accelerated the tempo of trade intercourse with the Orient, just as the bridges have unified the San Francisco Bay area.

The Golden Gate International Exposition will be a travel fair, assembling the vacation resources of the Pacific slope and displaying them as a rich background for the industrial progress that makes them more easily available.

With the western fair established as a travel fair, the 11 Western States gave it their enthusiastic cosponsorship, wiping out sectional lines. Foreign nations were quick to join, so that the close of 1938 found all but three of the South and Central American nations, and every Pacific country except Russia, China, and British Malaya pledged to participate.

The Federal Government is represented by a stately building and comprehensive national exhibits, with George Creel, nationally known writer, as commissioner in charge. The 7-acre building, costing $600,000, faces the Court of the Nation, where ceremonies, concerts, army maneuvers, and pageantry will be held.

The Government's $1,500,000 display, first of its kind ever undertaken, will be unique in the history of Government participation in expositions. Instead of a jumbled mess of dull pictures and duller charts, the United States commission for the exposition has endeavored to present a dramatized and interesting story of how our Government works and to show the taxpayer how his dollar is spent.

Seven major themes were selected for the backbone of the exhibit. These will treat social welfare, national defense, conservation, housing, science, economic affairs, and Indian life. Each Federal agency was called upon to coordinate with each other Federal agency in presenting the exhibit. Motion pictures, puppets, sound effects, and animated devices will be used effectively to dramatize this first all-inclusive governmental exhibit.

Hawaii occupies 21,000 square feet in the Pacific Basin, with a pavilion typical of Polynesian life. The Netherlands East Indies has erected a spacious pavilion, redolent of the atmosphere of the "Spice Islands" and decorated by bas-reliefs copied from famed ruins of Borobodoer and ancient jungle temples. Norway's building faithfully reproduces a Norwegian ski lodge, and Japan's medieval castle, representative of Nipponese tradition, stresses the cultural, industrial, and tourist sides of Japanese life.

Johore is in a replica of the Johore Dewan, or council house, with a display featuring tourism and big-game hunting. French Indochina's two-story building, fabricated in Saigon and shipped in sections, was the first foreign building to reach Treasure Island. France has built an elaborate pavilion for a display of arts, crafts, de luxe trades, and travel. New Zealand's building bears the facade of a Maori house; Costa Rica, in striking contrast, has a coffee plantation.

The Philippine Commonwealth has a Spanish colonial pavilion with a 100-foot tower; Australia's pavilion presents the unusual flora and fauna found "down under," and Peru's building traces the roots of modern civilization back to the Incas. Italy's elaborate buildings stress the arts, cultures, and industries, and Brazil's pavilion combines the cultural and commercial attractions. Argentina's building is modernistic, and Chile chose a pavilion of native design. El Salvador's building will combine a tourist, agricultural, and commercial display.

Other nations exhibiting in their own buildings include Guatemala, Ecuador, Mexico, Colombia, Venezuela, and Panama. Alaska, an outlying Territory, is also included in this group. In the International Hall, one of the main palaces, the list of foreign countries which have exhibits include Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Sweden, Rumania, Belgium, Portugal, Turkey, Hungary, Holland, Bulgaria, and Greece. British Columbia, although a foreign governmental unit, will exhibit in the Hall of Western States.

California's appropriation of $5,000,000 for the story of the Golden State was a major factor in enlisting the aid and support of her sister States. Seventeen big buildings, plus active participation in affairs at many points on Treasure Island, are required to tell this story. The climax building of the State group is the California Hospitality Building, and surrounding it are 10 others dedicated to groups of California's 58 counties. These include structures for the Redwood Empire, Mission Trails counties, Shasta-Cascade, Alameda-Contra Costa, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Sacramento Valley-Mountain, San Joaquin, southern California, and Alta California counties.

In addition to Government and State participation, more than 250 outstanding American industries, have exhibit space on Treasure Island. Their buildings or displays in the great exhibit halls radiate from the Tower of the Sun. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from California, Mr. Buck, has requested me to ask unanimous consent that he may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two tables of official figures and two brief paragraphs from newspapers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

CITY OF ST. LOUIS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, 175 years ago, to be exact, either February 14 or 15, 1764, Auguste Chouteau, accompanied by a party of 30, reached a site on the Mississippi River that Pierre Laclede had selected about 2 months before and founded the city of St. Louis, now the second largest city of the United States west of the Mississippi River.

History tells us Pierre Laclede was at the head of the last colonial expedition that left New Orleans, which was in August 1763. His objective was to locate a trading post near the mouth of the Missouri River. When he decided this trading post should be located at what is now in the center of the eastern boundary of St. Louis, he said in time it "might become hereafter, one of the finest cities in America." This prediction has come true.

Mr. Speaker, in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of Tuesday, February 14 is a short article depicting the founding of St. Louis. Under permission granted me by the House I include that article as part of my remarks. The article follows:

TODAY IS ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING OF ST. LOUIS—CITY WAS ORIGINALLY CALLED "PAINCOURT," WHICH IS FRENCH FOR "SHORT OF BREAD"

The little village of "Paincourt" is 175 years old this week. "Paincourt" was founded in February 1764 and is better known as St. Louis. But the old French called it "Paincourt"—French for "short of bread" and a sly dig at the first St. Louis fur traders, who were too busy making money to grow wheat and had to bring in their groceries from Ste. Genevieve.

The birthday is either February 14 or 15. Thirty brawny Frenchmen fathered Paincourt-St. Louis. On a February evening 175 years ago they landed at a little cove in the river at the foot of Walnut Street and climbed a little gully to a spot where Pierre Laclede, 2 months before, had blazed some walnut trees to mark the site. The next morning, the 30 men started to clear the ground and build a shack.

Auguste Chouteau, 14-year-old boy who bossed the clearing of the walnut trees on Second Street, wrote down the date in a journal when he was an old man. That journal is the only firsthand evidence about the first days in St. Louis. But Chouteau was tired or hurried when he put down the date. He wrote "février (February) 1" and then a scrawl after the 1 which may be a 4 or 5. To make it worse, he or someone else later wrote "mars" (March) over the "février."

UP THE RIVER

Other evidence rules out the date in March. Laclede sent Chouteau up the river from Fort Chartres, near the present Chester, Ill., as early as weather permitted—probably in February. Chouteau, 45 years afterward, told the recorder of deeds he left Chartres February 10 and arrived in St. Louis February 15. Gabriel Chouteau, his second son, wrote in 1882 that "my father came to the place where St. Louis now stands, February 14, 1764." In 1847 the anniversary was celebrated on February 15. The first translation of the Chouteau journal from French into English in 1858 rendered the date the 14th.

A man, a woman, and a boy! According to an old saying, no great thing is ever done without a man in the front, a boy at his side, and a woman in the background. It was so at the founding of St. Louis.

Pierre Laclede was born near Pau, France, in the Pyrenees mountain country along the Spanish border, in 1724. He came of a good family, lawyers and professional men. His elder brother was a government official. But Pierre wanted to seek his fortune in the New World.

He was 26 when he landed at New Orleans. He could speak and write Spanish, a valued talent in a many-languaged city. He was good looking and democratic. He had a serious side. Soon he was known as a popular young bachelor in New Orleans social circles.

On a summer day in the old square or on a semitropical night in some Creole garden he met a young woman. She was Mme. Marie Therese Bourgeois Chouteau. She had been married to a Rene Auguste Chouteau when she was 15 and had one son, Auguste Chouteau. She was just past 20. She and Laclede fell in love.

They were the man and the woman.

In 1760 the wilderness stretched north from New Orleans to Canada. On paper it belonged to the King of France. It was marsh, forest, and prairie. A few savages stamped around on what is now downtown Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha, and Kansas City.

Marquette and La Salle had canoed across the Great Lakes from Canada and paddled down the Mississippi River. A few missionary priests came down from Quebec and founded mission stations at Cahokia, Kaskaskia, and Vincennes. A French fort was built at Chartres to keep off the Spanish from Santa Fe, N. Mex. There was a lead mine at Ste. Genevieve. The rest of the Mississippi country was like the Congo in Africa.

FUR APLENTY

But there was fur in the Mississippi country like the ivory on the Congo. A good man could make money in the wilderness. The redskins traded furs in for hardware and beads; the same furs brought high prices in Paris and London.

That was why Laclede and Col. Antoine Maxent, leading New Orleans merchant, organized a new syndicate in 1762. The Acting Governor General of Louisiana gave them exclusive trading rights in the Missouri River Valley. Maxent furnished the capital and political connections. Laclede was field executive. In that capacity he started up the river on August 3, 1763, to establish a trading post at or near the mouth of the Missouri River. Young Auguste Chouteau was with him.

The trip was in river boats—apparently cordelle boats. When there was a south wind, these low-huller barges sailed upstream. When there was a north wind, the crews got out and walked along the bank and pulled the boats behind them.

It was the last fleet sent out by France to found a great city in the New World. Quebec, Montreal, Detroit, New Orleans, and now St. Louis. Before the departure, Laclede learned the east bank of the Mississippi had just been ceded by France to England in the treaty which closed the Seven Years War. So his settlement would have to be on the west shore to be in France. He did not know France had secretly conveyed Louisiana, or the west shore, to Spain and that there was no more France in the New World.

Atop a pile of baggage on one of the cordelle boats sat young Auguste Chouteau.

He was the son of Rene Auguste Chouteau and Mme. Chouteau and was a baby when Laclede and his mother met in New Orleans. Laclede won the baby's heart as well as the mother's.

Now, at 14, he was first lieutenant of the expedition. It was to fall to him to be boss of the party which actually founded the city.

He was the boy.

Here is the English translation of the journal he wrote afterward. The "he" is Laclede:

"He occupied himself (this is the English translation) with the means of forming an establishment suitable for commerce, Ste. Genevieve not suiting him because of its distance from the Missouri and its insalubrious situation. These reasons decided him to seek a more advantageous site. In consequence, he set out from Fort de Chartres in the month of December, took with him a young man in his confidence (Chouteau), and examined all the ground from the Fort de Chartres to the Missouri.

"He was delighted to see the situation where St. Louis at present stands; he did not hesitate a moment to form there the establishment that he proposed. Besides the beauty of the site, he found there all the advantages that one could desire to found a settlement which might become very considerable hereafter. After having examined all thoroughly, he fixed upon the place where he wished to form his settlement, marked with his own hand some trees, and said to Chouteau, 'You will come here as soon as navigation opens and will cause this place to be cleared in order to form our settlement after the plan that I shall give you.' We set out immediately afterward to return to Fort de Chartres, where he said with enthusiasm to Monsieur de Neyon and to his officers, that he had found a situation where he was going to form a settlement which might become hereafter one of the finest cities of America; so many advantages were embraced in this site by its locality and its central position for forming settlements. * * *

"Navigation being open in the early part of February, he fitted out a boat, in which he put 30 men, nearly all mechanics, and he gave the charge of it to Chouteau, and said to him: 'You will proceed and land at the place where we marked the trees; you will commence to have the place cleared, and build a large shed to contain the provisions and the tools, and small cabins to lodge the men * * *. I arrived at the place designated on the (here follows the controversial date of the founding of the city), and on the morning of the next day I put the men to work. They commenced the shed, which was built in a short time, and the little cabins for the men were built in the vicinity.

"In the early part of April, Laclede arrived among us. He occupied himself with his settlement, fixed the place where he wished to build his house, laid a plan of the village which he wished to found, and he named it St. Louis, in honor of Louis XV, whose subject he expected to remain for a long time; he never imagined he was a subject of the King of Spain; and ordered me to follow the plan exactly because he could not remain any longer with us. He was obliged to proceed to Fort de Chartres to remove the goods that he had in the fort before the arrival of the English. * * * I followed to the best of my ability his plan and used the utmost diligence to accelerate the building of the house."

Mme. Chouteau joined Laclede and her son at the new village in the autumn. A carter drove her north from Kaskaskia to Cahokia. Laclede rode beside the wagon on horseback.

So a man, woman, and boy founded St. Louis.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, by authority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I ask unanimous consent that that committee may have permission to sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—OFFICES ABROAD IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State and the accompanying draft of proposed legislation designed to authorize the payment of burial expenses and expenses in connection with last illness and death of native employees who die while serving in offices abroad of executive departments of the United States Government.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 16, 1939.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—WATER-POLLUTION CONTROL (H. DOC. NO. 155)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

The last Congress recognized the national importance of pollution abatement in our streams and lakes by passing, during its closing days, an act providing for the creation of a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service and for the establishment of a permanent system of Federal grants-in-aid and loans to assist in constructing pollution-abatement projects. Although fully subscribing to the general purposes of that act, I felt compelled to withhold my approval of it because of the method which it provided for the authorization of loans and grants-in-aid. It would have prevented the consideration of such appropriations as a part of the annual Budget for all purposes. My reasons are set forth in detail in my memorandum of June 25, 1938. I hope that at this session the whole problem of water pollution may again receive your attention.

To facilitate study of the problem by the Congress, I am transmitting a report on Water Pollution in the United States, which outlines the status of pollution, the cost of bringing about a reasonable degree of abatement, and the financial, technical, and administrative aspects of such a program. The document was prepared at my request by a special advisory committee of the National Resources Committee composed of representative experts from the Departments of War, Treasury, the Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce, and from private and State agencies.

No quick and easy solution of these problems is in sight. The committee estimates that an expenditure by public and private agencies of approximately $2,000,000,000 over a period of 10 to 20 years may be required to construct works necessary to abate the more objectional pollution. Inasmuch as the needed works are chiefly treatment plants for municipal sewage and industrial waste, the responsibility for them rests primarily with municipal government and private industry. Much construction work is in progress. Many State agencies have forced remedial action where basic studies have shown it to be practicable.

Unprecedented advances in cleaning up our streams have been made possible by the public works and work relief programs during the past 6 years. The report states that more progress has been made in abatement of municipal waste during that period than during the entire 25 years preceding, chiefly as a result of Federal financial stimulation. As in many other fields of conservation, great improvement in the Nation's basic assets of water has been incident to the fight against unemployment. If this construction work is to continue at a substantial rate, and if the necessary research, education, and enforcement activities are to be carried out most effectively, the Federal Government must lend financial support and technical stimulation.

It is my opinion that pending further experimentation with interstate and State enforcement activities, Federal participation in pollution-abatement should take the general form of establishing a central technical agency to promote and coordinate education, research, and enforcement. On the basis of recent experience, it should be supplemented by a system of Federal grants-in-aid and loans organized with due regard for the integrated use and control of water resources, and for a balanced Federal program for public works of all types. The time is overdue for the Federal Government to take vigorous leadership along these lines.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 15, 1939.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—NATIONAL ENERGY RESOURCES (H. DOC. NO. 160)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with my request of March 15, 1938, the National Resources Committee, in consultation with the other Federal agencies concerned, has prepared a comprehensive study of our energy resources, which I present herewith for your consideration.

This report represents the joint effort of many specialists both within and outside the Federal Government. It suggests policies, investigations, and legislation necessary to carry forward a broad national program for the prudent utilization and conservation of the Nation's energy resources.

Our resources of coal, oil, gas, and water power provide the energy to turn the wheels of industry, to service our homes, and to aid in national defense. We now use more energy per capita than any other people, and our scientists tell us there will be a progressively increasing demand for energy for all purposes.

Our energy resources are not inexhaustible, yet we are permitting waste in their use and production. In some instances, to achieve apparent economies today future generations will be forced to carry the burden of unnecessarily high costs and to substitute inferior fuels for particular purposes. National policies concerning these vital resources must recognize the availability of all of them; the location of each with respect to its markets; the costs of transporting them; the technological developments which will increase the efficiency of their production and use; the use of the lower grade coals; and the relationships between the increased use of energy and the general economic development of the country.

In the past the Federal Government and the States have undertaken various measures to conserve our heritage in these resources. In general, however, each of these efforts has been directed toward the problems in a single field: toward the protection of the public interest in the power of flowing water in the Nation's rivers; toward the relief of economic and human distress in the mining of coal; or toward the correction of demoralizing and wasteful practices and conditions in the industries producing oil and natural gas. It is time now to take a larger view; to recognize—more fully than has been possible or perhaps needful in the past—that each of our great natural resources of energy affects the others.

It is difficult in the long run to envisage a national coal policy, or a national petroleum policy, or a national water-power policy without also in time a national policy directed toward all of these energy producers—that is, a national energy resources policy. Such a broader and integrated policy toward the problems of coal, petroleum, natural gas, and water power cannot be evolved overnight.

The widening interest and responsibility on the part of the Federal Government for the conservation and wise use of the Nation's energy resources raises many perplexing questions of policy determination. Clearly, there must be adequate and continuing planning and provision for studies which will reflect the best technical experience available, as well as full consideration for both regional and group interests.

Some Federal legislation affecting the energy resources will expire at the end of this fiscal year, other legislation at the end of a few more years. This report sets forth a useful frame of reference for legislative programs affecting these resources and illustrate another approach to the systematic husbandry of our natural resources. Specific recommendations are advanced for solution of the most pressing problems.

In order to facilitate its use by the Congress, I recommend that this report be printed together with supporting staff reports and illustrations, when these are available in final form, in conformity with similar reports prepared by the National Resources Committee.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 15, 1939.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey, Mr. LEMKE, and Mr. REES of Kansas asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered last night in connection with memorial services for Susan B. Anthony.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by Mr. Joseph P. Lash on the 27th day of December 1938.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by the Secretary of the Interior on the subject of conservation of grazing in our national parks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. RABAUT, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 4218) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 43), which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEFAN reserved all points of order on the bill.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the legislative branch appropriation bill, 1940; and pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may continue throughout the day, one half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4218; and pending that motion, asks unanimous consent that the general debate on the bill run throughout the day, the time to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Nebraska. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for the information of the minority, I would like to ask the majority member on this committee when we may expect to start reading the bill for amendment—about 2 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Why?

Mr. STEFAN. We have considerable requests for time, I may say to the majority leader. There are a number of Members who want to speak.

Mr. RAYBURN. Tomorrow?

Mr. STEFAN. I have requests for 3 or 4 hours, although I know we cannot give them that much time.

Mr. RAYBURN. We will complete the consideration of the bill tomorrow.

Mr. STEFAN. It is intended, I understand, to complete the consideration of the bill tomorrow; yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. If we have a late session tomorrow to read the bill, the 2 hours taken in general debate tomorrow will certainly be responsible for it.

Mr. STEFAN. I think it is generally understood we are going to complete the consideration of the bill tomorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. We are.

Mr. STEFAN. It should not take over one-half hour or 45 minutes to read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4218) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, with Mr. COSTELLO in the chair.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes. Mr. Chairman, we have before us the legislative establishment appropriation bill for 1940. In 1939 the appropriation in this bill was $22,210,883. The Budget estimate for 1940 was $24,287,946. There is recommended in this bill $21,636,398. We are under the 1939 appropriation by the sum of $574,485 and under the Budget estimate by $2,651,548.

The high spots of this bill dealing with many departments on Capitol Hill, I will take up one by one, starting with the items under the caption of "Architect of the Capitol." It came as a distinct surprise to the committee to learn that the two roofs, the one over the House side and the one over the Senate side, are not in the very best condition. These roofs have been on this building for a period of 85 years.

The roofs have been subject to strain and fatigue. The committee had an exhaustive study made concerning this very important matter. It is estimated that to replace these roofs will cost approximately $585,000. It came as a surprise to the members of the committee to learn that even the ceiling in this room is cast iron, all the structural braces in the roof are cast iron, and this is dealing with an entirely different material than would be employed in constructing roofs today. The ordinary load of a roof is estimated to be 30 pounds to the square foot, but a roof is always built to carry four times that estimated load.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I will be very pleased to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. I understand that the roofs on the House and Senate wings of the Capitol were constructed about 85 years ago; is that correct?

Mr. RABAUT. That is correct.

Mr. LANHAM. Has the committee made sufficient investigation to determine how imminent any danger may be from the present condition of these roofs?

Mr. RABAUT. I intend to develop that as I go along.

Mr. LANHAM. And another thing, if the gentleman will touch upon this, my recollection is this bill provides an appropriation of $585,000 for the purpose of renewing these roofs. What has been done to arrive at that sum? Upon what is that estimate predicated and has there been an inspection of the roofs by experts to determine accurately just what should be done and what the reasonable cost would be?

Mr. RABAUT. I will be very pleased to develop that subject for the gentleman from Texas.

The matter of the condition of the roofs was discovered when the roofs were being examined for the purpose of making them fireproof, and when the anticipated load of fireproofing the roofs was contemplated and the structure was studied, it was found they would not only not take the fireproofing, but they were in danger from their own weight, according to present-day standards.

As I was saying when the gentleman asked me the question, the ordinary roof load is figured in modern engineering to carry four times the required amount of 30 pounds to the square foot. The roof over the Capitol is about 50 percent efficient. It developed in the hearings that there were certain strains on the pins that hold up the structural part of this roof. It developed that the regular strain on these pins, which should be in the neighborhood of 12,000 pounds to a certain unit, are strained to the point of something like 77,000 pounds, and that the roof of itself under ordinary conditions is safe, but the roof would not be safe with tremendous snow, followed by rain, turning to ice with changing temperature. In such case it developed in the hearings we would be very wise to step out of the structure.

It is also true that prominent roofs that have collapsed have been new roofs, the collapse being due to faulty construction, but it is also true there is no roof in existence today of this size, built in this style, any place that is known of that was built in the same period, of the same type of materials.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. I wonder if in case of heavy snow, to which the gentleman has referred, it would be possible to remove the snow and thus prevent that danger?

Mr. RABAUT. Something would have to be done under the information that has been given the members of the committee. They would probably employ live steam.

Mr. MAHON. But the gentleman does not feel there is any immediate danger of collapse which should cause the House any alarm?

Mr. RABAUT. No; and I do not think the public should be alarmed, but I feel it would be well to take the precaution that has been suggested to us.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. I was here when the Knickerbocker disaster occurred and that was something that struck the hearts of all of us, because it resulted in great loss of life. We have now a roof on this building which has lasted 85 years. Is it proposed to put a roof on today that will last that long again?

Mr. RABAUT. I made a remark in committee that perhaps the members ought to take a course in engineering. I am not able to say anything about that except as the evidence that was given the laymen on the committee by experts, including engineers from the National Bureau of Standards, the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and the Procurement Division, and the famous engineer Mr. Thomas W. Marshall, all of the others agreeing with a letter that he sent to the Architect of the Capitol, saying that fatigue and strain and undetected faults that may be in the roof are something that the committee and the Congress should absolutely take notice of, and this testimony is backed up by the gentlemen from the departments to whom I have just referred.

Mr. LANHAM. I should say to the gentleman that beside the question of safety, the preservation of the Capitol, and proper care are absolutely imperative, when needed, because, in my judgment, there is no more beautiful building in all the world. When will this repair be made?

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I am aware of the gentleman's great interest in the Capitol and of his profound knowledge of its history. It is as disturbing to the members of our committee as it is, evidently, to the gentleman from Texas today. This morning before the full Committee on Appropriations it was decided that inasmuch as nothing can be done with the building while we are in session, further time should be given to the committee to conduct a further study, and that an amount of $5,000 should be appropriated to secure additional advice from engineers. If the work is to be done, it will have to be done while Congress is not in session, and it will be necessary to work at least two shifts to get it ready before the Congress returns.

Mr. LANHAM. The evidence before the committee was that an abnormally large and heavy snowstorm would endanger the safety of the building?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes; and there is extensive testimony in the hearings about that.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. To tell the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that our information is that in case we have a 30-inch fall of snow on this roof, we will have instructions to move out, and this committee went on record, which would indicate that we feel something should be done immediately to safeguard the lives of the Members who are in the House and our visitors in the galleries.

Mr. LANHAM. I am quite in sympathy with that, and also that the proper precaution for the preservation of the Capitol should be taken. I am simply trying by my inquiries to elicit information as to the imminent or emergency nature of the condition here and what should be done right away. Personally, I am in favor of doing whatever is necessary to be done.

Mr. STEFAN. Throughout the hearings and our interrogation of witnesses before the committee, we made it very plain that nothing should be done here which would injure or destroy or eliminate any of the valuable American architecture that is present in this Capitol, which the gentleman has fought to preserve.

Mr. LANHAM. In addition to that, is it true that the plans in prospect do not contemplate any architectural changes, but merely the matter of replacing the roof as a matter of safety?

Mr. STEFAN. Insofar as the roofs are concerned, but I warn my colleague that there are plans on foot today to change the appearance of this valuable building; that is, to move the front of the Capitol out to match with the House and Senate wings. That movement is already on foot. I oppose that, and I am sure the gentleman does.

Mr. LANHAM. I am quite familiar with that situation, but no architectural changes are contemplated in the repair of these roofs?

Mr. STEFAN. None whatever, and I am sure that my chairman will agree to that. There is no contemplated change in the architectural appearance. The roof merely is to be replaced.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. By opening up this subject of repairs to a part of the building, will it not then be open for the improvement that has been suggested here, changing the entire face of the Capitol?

Mr. RABAUT. There have been repairs to the roof of the Capitol in several places. Of course, an emergency knows no set rule, and this is an emergency measure.

We are advised by the engineers not to delay this matter beyond the next recess of Congress.

Mr. DOWELL. About what will the repairs that are necessary now cost?

Mr. RABAUT. The estimate—and it is only an estimate—is $585,000. That is a new roof for the House wing and a new roof for the Senate wing. Incidentally, the claim is that the Senate wing is in worse condition than the House wing.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. If everything that is old is bad, and therefore incapable of serving its present day needs, why not tear down the whole Capitol and build it anew, along the lines of present-day ideas? This Capitol has stood here for some eighty-odd years and seems to have served fairly well.

Mr. RABAUT. The committee is simply charged with the duty to present such matters as come before the committee to the House. That is the position of your chairman.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I am wondering, after hearing the gentleman's statement about the alarm over the roof situation, whether he thinks, considering the attitude of the press generally, there would be much alarm on the part of the American people if they thought there was danger of these two roofs collapsing while the Congress was in session?

Mr. RABAUT. It has been suggested that perhaps the hanging of the loudspeaker upon the roof was more than the old structure would stand. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Have there been any studies or reports in regard to this cast-iron dome over the central portion of the Capitol?

Mr. RABAUT. It has been examined and found to be in very good shape. The dome, on account of its shape, is a different type of structure.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. It is cast iron.

Mr. RABAUT. Yes. All the braces in the roof over the Chamber are cast iron, and that is what makes it difficult to rebuild.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I am not learned in the sciences, but I have understood that the fatigue of metals was particularly noticeable in cast iron, and that particular feature has only been studied at length within the last few years.

Mr. RABAUT. I may say to the gentleman that the full Committee on Appropriations took the amount for reconstruction of the roofs from the bill this morning with the idea that we should have some additional study and bring it up before the close of this session, after further investigation has been made by engineers. Then it could be brought up again in a deficiency bill if it is determined the work should be undertaken.

Now, under "Architect of the Capitol" we have some other suggested improvements which the committee did not see fit to approve. For paving of roadways around the Capitol, $390,000 was proposed. This amount was not thought necessary. It was thought improper to make the improvement now because of the fact that if the roof is to be repaired or replaced, there will be a great deal of heavy traffic and we would have our new roadway all cut up. So we think we should just leave this matter stand as it is for the present. I feel it should wait until the entire Capitol is changed, if they are going to change it. If they are going to drop the subject of changing the Capitol, then the roadway could be adjusted according to the plan of those having that matter in charge.

There was a request by the Architect's office to replace a roof on the terrace out here, in the amount of $345,350. The committee visited the structure, went through the passes below the terrace, and suggested that if the rooms were to be used for some purpose affecting the Congress itself and the activities of the Congress, and not for shops and places of storage, and so on, the committee might be interested in repairing it and making necessary alterations to adapt it to such use. So this matter is left out of the bill. We will have a new plan available for consideration next year.

The Library of Congress: As the committee knows, the Library has moved into the new annex building. The committee was confronted with a request for 181 new employees for general expansion. A similar situation to that existed 40 years ago when the Library was moved from the Capitol into the Library proper, across the park.

Immediately upon moving into the new building the personnel was doubled to properly staff the building. Within 2 years the new Librarian took charge and the personnel of the Library was redoubled in another 2 years. The committee feels that inasmuch as the proposed appointment of a new Librarian is awaiting the action of the President, and the present Librarian, Dr. Putnam, is to become Librarian Emeritus of the Library, the new Librarian should be free to continue the development of the Library according to his own ideas with the advice and counsel of the Librarian Emeritus, whose 40 years bear silent testimony to the great strides made in this glorious institution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Now, paralleling the situation in 1397, we have a new building over there. Congress last year allowed $100,000 for staffing the new building—for personnel. This covers the new reading room and all the new departments not heretofore necessary. If the members of the committee have not visited the annex to the Library, you have missed a treat. Go over and look at the annex of the Library and you will see there the last word in the transportation of books; the last word in lighting and in study rooms. It is just an ideal spot for the historian of today and tomorrow. So make a visit to the new Library.

We have allowed an increase of $15,000, making a total sum of $85,000 for books for the law library. For the first time a limitation has been placed upon travel for the Librarian and his staff. This has been set at $5,000. The existing activities of the Library have been continued in the bill, and provision has been made for two new divisions now being set up through gifts from the outside, which activities, of course, require some personnel. There is the new Hispanic room and the new photo-duplication section. Both of these rooms have been equipped very elaborately from gifts that have been made for these purposes to the Library.

We come now to an item that will prove somewhat of a surprise to the membership, but it is an item that has, for the last 2 years, been laid in the lap of this committee. This is an item under the heading Government Printing Office. There has been distributed in the House this morning samples of the format of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. On the cover of this format you will find an analysis showing an estimated saving of $123,750 per annum. Expressed in percentages it amounts to 16 percent. This is estimated on the size of the RECORD last year. Should the session be longer this year, as we expect it will be, we figure the saving will be proportionately greater. For this reason we have deducted from the amount of the appropriation for the Government Printing Office the sum of $135,000.

All of the pages in this format are laid out in pairs. You will note that the first two pages are a print of the front page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the two styles. On the left-hand page you have the RECORD set up in two columns, as is the style today. On the right-hand side you have the proposed format of the RECORD in three columns, and at the bottom of the third column you see the saving of space. So, too, if you turn to the other pages, which are taken at random from different RECORDS just to give an idea of the general saving that would be effected by this proposed change to a three-column page, you will note the saving of space.

While we mention the proposed saving of $135,000 which has been laid in the committee's lap for 2 years straight by an outright offer from the Government Printer to reduce his appropriation $135,000 if we wish to make this change in the RECORD, we have also looked into what effect the change in printing the RECORD would have upon the eyesight and, indirectly, the health of the Members and those who read the RECORD. I have here some letters which were secured by the attending physician, Dr. Calver. I asked him what the effect of a change in the RECORD would be. The present RECORD, with its long lines, causes a double muscular action of the eye. It also causes a greater searching action of the eye when reading to locate the next line.

With the short line of the three-column page proposed there is a single muscular action of the eye, and the searching effort is greatly reduced. It is declared by physicians to be a very readable arrangement and less taxing upon the nerves of the eye.

Dr. Calver writes me:

I am enclosing four letters written by the Surgeon of the Army, the Surgeon General of the Navy, the commanding officer of the United States Naval Hospital, and Dr. William Thornwall Davis, one of the outstanding ophthalmologists in the city of Washington, giving their comments on the proposed change in the form of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is interesting to note that these gentlemen are all in favor of the proposed change on the basis of the reduction of strain and eye fatigue.

The designing of the style of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not a matter coming within the jurisdiction of this committee, but the saving of money is distinctly within the province of the Committee on Appropriations. The format of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is strictly a matter that comes within the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on Printing. I have talked to members of the Joint Committee on Printing and the question was raised by one member as to what effect this change in form would have on the employees of the Government Printing Office. We took up that phase of the question with the Public Printer and I interrogated him at length concerning it.

He assured me that no one would be dismissed and no one would suffer a reduction in pay. You know, we are inclined to regard the RECORD as the principal job of the Government Printing Office, but, actually, the RECORD is only an incident in the greatly varied activities of the Government Printing Office. The Government Printing Office operates 12 months a year. The RECORD is printed only during the time the Congress is in session. While in the last few years we have learned what it is to be here for considerable lengths of time, we must remember that some years ago the duration of sessions was much shorter. Thus the RECORD is incidental to the entire activities of the Printing Office.

The suggestion is still made, however, by the Government Printer that we can save $135,000. The proposed change is further supported by the statement of physicians and oculists that it is more readable and that it causes less eyestrain. The committee feels, with all due respect to the other committees involved, that it should take cognizance of the suggested savings, and the committee is unanimous in suggesting to the House that this change be made.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, if the joint committee feels this should not be done, after due study, that committee has until the last deficiency bill to make its decision, at which time the Public Printer may come in and ask for a deficiency appropriation in the amount of $135,000, which the committee has taken from his appropriation. Incidentally, may I say when I presented this matter today to the full Committee on Appropriations there was not one dissenting vote. So I am happy to bring it before the House, and I hope you will act favorably upon it.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. On page 10 of the report there is a statement to this effect:

Under the law the Joint Committee on Printing is vested with authority to fix the format of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and members of the Joint Committee are now considering the advisability of making the proposed change.

May I call to the gentleman's attention and to the attention of the Members of the House the fact that there has been no meeting of the Joint Committee on Printing? As a member of the Joint Committee on Printing, I have no knowledge whatever of this matter having been given consideration or having been looked into, or of any action whatsoever.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. As a member of the Joint Committee on Printing, may I say that last December, when Mr. Lambeth was chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, there was sent to all members by correspondence a letter in reference to this change. Each individual member had notice. However, no committee meetings have been held, and, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] is a new member of the committee, I may say it is possible this matter will be taken up if and when we have a meeting of the joint committee.

Mr. CONNERY. In other words, the Committee on Appropriations is now placing the Joint Committee on Printing on the spot, if this provision in the bill goes through, forcing them to take some action toward adopting this new format for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am not convinced that a saving of $135,000 can be made unless at least $100,000 of that $135,000 is taken out of labor down there in the Government Printing Office. I cannot see how it can be done without eventually doing away with jobs.

Mr. RICH. As the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations stated a minute ago, the Joint Committee on Printing was not forced into this. I made inquiry this morning. It was only the matter of making a deduction of $135,000 in this bill. The Joint Committee on Printing will have an opportunity to convene between now and the 1st of June and if and when the members of that committee decide they want to put it into effect, O. K. If they decide it should not go into effect, then they may ask for a subsequent appropriation of $135,000 and the Government Printing Office will not be inconvenienced in any manner.

Mr. CONNERY. Probably I should look at this as a magnanimous gesture on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, this endeavor of the Appropriations Committee to force the Printing Committee to take favorable action by initiating this action through a reduced appropriation; but my idea is that the Joint Committee on Printing should have had priority in considering this proposal, and should have had priority in presenting it to the House for appropriate action.

Mr. RICH. The Joint Committee on Printing has had every opportunity to consider it because we have been in session for practically a month and a half. We have not had a meeting of the Joint Committee on Printing. That is no fault of the chairman of that committee, because he has been willing to have a committee meeting at any time and he is willing to give his time and attention to the matter; however, we are having a difficult time in getting the Senate to join with the House in this matter.

Mr. CONNERY. When the Committee on Printing does take the matter up we have no assurance it will look with favor on this change. I have been informed this matter was placed before both the Republican and Democratic leaders during the late days of the last session of the Congress and every one of them was against the proposition.

Mr. RICH. That is not the fact.

Mr. CONNERY. I have been so informed.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I note the analysis of savings set forth on this sample is $123,750, whereas the gentleman indicated the saving would be approximately $135,000.

Mr. RABAUT. I think I stated that this is based on the size of the RECORD last year, and, as we anticipate a longer session, which will make a larger and more voluminous RECORD, the savings will be greater.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. That explains the matter.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY]. It is true that there is some feeling about this change; however, it is also true that for 2 years straight the Government Printing Office has laid in the lap of this committee this saving of $135,000, and the committee can no longer be put in the position of looking with indifference upon it. If after the Joint Committee on Printing has made a study of the matter it should rule otherwise, if it should feel this change should not be made, no injustice has been done anyone, because the Government Printer may go to the deficiency committee and have this amount returned to him due to the fact the Joint Committee on Printing did not change the format of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman to explain a little more where these savings will come from?

Mr. RABAUT. It is explained right on page 1.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Explain it for the RECORD. Is it true that 75 percent will come from the workers? Will it be necessary to reduce the personnel over in the Printing Office?

Mr. RABAUT. There is no one in this House who comes from a district in which there are more workers than the gentleman before you from Detroit, Mich.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am not trying to embarrass the gentleman, but I would like information.

Mr. RABAUT. There is no greater friend of the workingman in this House than I am. We have this set-up, and we ought to have some respect for the readability of the RECORD or for the format of the RECORD as far as it affects eyesight. As I say, we should have some respect for that problem. Here we have the testimony of prominent oculists, men high in their profession, and they say this is a great improvement.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Further, these are the figures with regard to the savings that will be made:

	Present format (2 column)	Proposed 7½ on 8½- point (3 column)
Composition.....	$302,873.00	$249,475.45
Imposition and make-up.....	27,950.00	23,206.89
Platemaking.....	59,626.00	49,600.47
Presswork.....	140,000.00	117,242.00
Binding.....	95,000.00	79,378.50
Paper stock.....	103,742.56	86,736.65
Total.....	729,191.56	605,441.56
Saving.....		$123,750.00
Percent.....		16.97

I asked the following question during the hearings:

Mr. RABAUT. Will this change to this improved format for the RECORD cause any reduction in personnel in the Government Printing Office?

Mr. GIEGACK. We do not contemplate any reduction in personnel because of this change in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Then there must be less work for those already employed?

Mr. RABAUT. There is less work, less paper is used, it is a smaller-sized RECORD, and when the RECORD is bound it will be a smaller-sized volume.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Then this will represent a pay cut for the people who are now employed in the Printing Office?

Mr. RABAUT. There will not be a pay cut. There will not be a single person who will receive a cut in pay. As a matter of fact, the Government Printing Office never has been current with its work. This would give them somewhat of a breathing spell. They will be able to get closer to operating on time. As I said before, the RECORD is only one of the activities of the Government Printing Office and, in fact, is only a seasonal printing job.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I believe the real question raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts, who is a member of the Committee on Printing, is that the Committee on Printing has jurisdiction over all printing matters; that we all agree, and the Committee on Appropriations appropriates the money authorized by law. As I understand, there is no new legislation in this bill; therefore, there must be lodged somewhere the authority to fix or change the form of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This would naturally go to the Committee on Printing. The gentleman from Massachusetts is complaining because the Committee on Appropriations is usurping and attempting by indirection to perform the functions of the Committee on Printing. I notice this provision is drawn so artfully that no point of order would lie against it. It is just a question of your allowing so much and then making the committee come in and make a negative case.

I agree with the gentleman as far as economy is concerned, but I believe the Committee on Appropriations should be very careful not to attempt to become a supercommittee which would make the legislation for all the things coming before the Congress.

Mr. RABAUT. There is no attempt on the part of the Appropriations Committee to legislate anything. We do not want to legislate at all. However, no one is charged with the responsibility of checking the possibility of this saving except this committee, which has had the proposition offered to them for 2 consecutive years. The committee felt, and I think rightfully so, that they should attempt to make this saving.

Then if it is shown that the saving cannot be made without adversely affecting the membership of the House and Senate and other users of the RECORD, which would be determined by the findings of the Joint Committee on Printing, the Public Printer could be told, "You were wrong in your suggestion to the Appropriations Committee and you can go back and ask for a deficiency appropriation."

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. JARMAN. The gentleman has stated at least twice that this matter has been in the lap of his committee for 2 years. Does the gentleman mean to tell the House this format has been before the committee for 2 years?

Mr. RABAUT. I did not say anything about the format. I said that the proposed saving of $135,000 has been before the committee. The only reason the format is here is to show what the suggested change is. We are not proposing the new format. We are just telling you what the Government Printing Office says can be done.

Mr. JARMAN. Will the gentleman tell the Committee when this particular format was prepared?

Mr. RABAUT. There was a format previous to this one having between the lines what is called a space of a half point.

It was the same as this format, except that a change was proposed in this format at my suggestion, in order to meet an objection that was presented to me to the effect that some Members of the Senate thought the lines were spaced too narrowly with half a point between the lines of printing. Therefore, I suggested that a new format be made up with the idea of seeing whether or not they would approve of it. Then I thought the House members of the Joint Committee would give even greater approval of it than they apparently gave it the first time I talked to them about it. It seems that since that time something happened which caused them to feel that the chairman was attempting to take from that committee some prerogative in exercising his evident duty to take cognizance of this possible saving of $135,000, which is backed up by the testimony of the oculists, who claim the improved format is more readable than the present one.

Mr. JARMAN. Does the gentleman say the original format was discarded because of some objection in the Senate? Of course, the gentleman does not mean to say that the objection was only in the Senate.

Mr. RABAUT. No. The only objection I had from a Member of the House, if the gentleman wishes me to bring out this fact, was from my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], who raised question about the labor involved.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman has made the statement that he has been assured by the Public Printer, and, for that matter, I have also been so assured by the Public Printer, that this change will in no way affect anybody's job; but just take the first line in this table on the first page of this analysis of the savings on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which states, "Composition, present format, $302,873," as against $249,475 under the proposed format.

If the gentleman or anybody else could show me how they are going to make that saving without affecting labor by reduction of wages and loss of jobs, I would like to have them do it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I may say I do not believe we have had a single Department of the Government come before the Committee on Appropriations without complaining about the high cost of printing at the Government Printing Office. Practically every Department of the Government claims that it could get its printing done away from the Government Printing Office a whole lot cheaper than in the Government Printing Office. As was stated by the chairman of the subcommittee a few moments ago, the Public Printer assured him that the difference in the cost of composition would be with respect to men whom he could use in doing work in other branches of the Government Printing Office.

If he can use the same people that he has over there for other work that he is trying to do, goodness knows we ought to cut down the expense of the Government Printing Office in any way we can. That is your duty and that is my duty, and I know the chairman of the subcommittee is willing to do anything he can to have a good, sound, economical job done. I am not here speaking for this matter, because when the time comes we, as a Joint Committee on Printing, will take this up and study every phase of it, and then do that which, in our judgment, is best, and I am convinced that the chairman of the subcommittee is not trying in any way to do anything that would take away from the Joint Committee on Printing any of its rights or privileges.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional 10 minutes.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. JARMAN. Will the gentleman tell the Committee when and where this present format originated?

Mr. RABAUT. The original format—I do not know where it originated.

Mr. JARMAN. The one you passed on?

Mr. RABAUT. That is only a copy of another format.

Mr. JARMAN. I mean this copy of it.

Mr. RABAUT. The change in the leading of this format was made last week. An additional half-point lead was placed between the lines. As I explained before, the original had a half point between the lines. The present long line, two-column CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has a point and a half between the lines, and this proposed format now of three columns has one point between the lines.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman if any member of the Joint Committee on Printing aside from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], and myself have seen this?

Mr. RABAUT. I do not know whether others have seen it or not. I showed it to the three gentlemen mentioned because they constitute the House membership of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. CONNERY. In other words, this format has been printed by the Public Printer at the suggestion of the Committee on Appropriations not because of any approval by the House Committee on Printing or the Joint Committee on Printing?

Mr. RABAUT. So he could prove to us and could prove to the House that we have a right, at least, to say that we believe that the $135,000 can justifiably be saved. There is plenty of time on this bill, and everybody will be given all the time he wants, but I want to continue and finish my remarks.

I want you to turn to the last page of this sample format of the RECORD. On the last page of this sample format of the RECORD there is a copy of a proposed speech as sent out by the Members of the Congress. Under the present system you have a capacity of 475 words per page, or 950 words on two pages. Under the proposed format in the printing of the RECORD the Members of Congress can send out that same sheet with 820 words on a single sheet, or 1,640 words on a double sheet. The reduction in cost of reprints of speeches resulting from the adoption of the improved format will be approximately 45 percent. I think we ought to acknowledge the situation as it exists.

I want to thank the Committee for the attention they have given me.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado and Mr. DUNN rose.

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I just want to say that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON] and myself held a little caucus here with the dual formats before us and we rather thought the present format was easier to read.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Could we not save the Members of the House and the Government a great deal of money by adopting the three-column format and establishing a mat service, so that any Member that wanted to put his remarks before the public in his district could get a mat impression of his speech and run it through the newspapers without going to all the expense and trouble of putting a franking charge on the Post Office Department, when they could put the whole thing before the public just by getting an impression of their speech from that mat and having it run through the newspapers on standard newspaper print?

Mr. RABAUT. That is a very interesting suggestion.

I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. DUNN. I did not hear all of the gentleman's address, but I want to know whether, with this saving of $135,000 a year, anyone would lose his job?

Mr. RABAUT. No; not according to the testimony presented to the Committee.

Mr. DUNN. I do not want any more employees losing their jobs.

Mr. RABAUT. I agree with the gentleman. I reserve the remainder of my time and yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

WHAT SHALL OUR FOREIGN POLICY BE?

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, in the confused and unsettled state of the world today, the question of our foreign relations is graver, more delicate, and fraught with more potentialities of danger to our peace than at any time since we made the fateful decision to participate in the World War.

The whole issue of our foreign relations and our national defense has become so befogged by propaganda, hysteria, fear, pride, and resentment that I am impelled to an effort to clarify and simplify the issue in the interests of the national welfare.

I desire to address myself to this question of our foreign relations, not in any spirit of criticism of anybody or of any policy, but rather in a spirit of dispassionate analysis of the fundamental essentials underlying the whole question, in order to promote, if possible, clear thinking on the issue.

There is one common danger which threatens this and other nations of the world alike. That is emotionalism. The questions of our foreign policy, of our relations with other governments and countries with whom we are at peace, and of our national defense, ought, for the sake of world peace and the safety of our own Nation, to be considered with great calmness and deliberation, and not in an atmosphere supercharged with passion, resentments, suspicions, partisanship, economic fears, racial hatreds, or other forms of irrational emotionalism.

At the outset I want to call to the attention of the House the fact that the statements and declarations made by the high officials of our Government and by the Members of the Congress are not only given a significance abroad which we in this country do not attach to many of the expressions, but are twisted and distorted in other countries until they come to mean something entirely different than the ideas in our minds when we give utterance to these all too frequently ill-considered sentiments and arguments.

Mr. Chairman, great confusion has arisen from the secrecy surrounding our foreign policy. A certain amount of secrecy in the conduct of our foreign affairs by those charged with that function is, of course, necessary and inescapable. On the other hand, it is highly desirable, if we are to maintain that calm and deliberative state of mind which will enable us to make the wisest decisions, that there should be no more secrecy about the conduct of our foreign relations than is absolutely essential to the national welfare.

We have already witnessed the confusion, the acrimonious debate, the controversy, and the emotionalism aroused by secret conferences. Harsh words have been spoken which ought not to have been spoken. Controversies have arisen which ought not to have arisen. Suspensions have been engendered which ought not to have been engendered. Divergencies of views have come about which ought to have been avoided. If there is any subject upon which there should be the closest, freest, frankest, sincerest cooperation between the administrative and legislative departments of the Government to the end of helping to maintain world peace and of keeping this country out of war, it is the subject of our foreign relations and our national defense.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me give you what I conceive to be the fundamentals of the different policies which are urged upon us. I wish to repeat that I am approaching the subject not in a spirit of criticism but in a spirit of a desire to clarify the question, in order that we may think straight in adopting whatever policy we shall eventually embrace with regard to our foreign relations and our national defense.

It serves no good purpose to deny that the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet possess tremendous power, through their public utterances, to shape sentiments and mold public opinion in other countries. That is also true of Members of the Congress. That being true, the welfare of this Nation, perhaps the blood and the lives of our citizens, demand that all of us should carefully weigh our words when we publicly discuss the relations existing between other nations, such quarrels as may be in the making between other nations, and our own relations to those international relations and quarrels.

Mr. Chairman, we have two opposing policies urged upon our consideration. Let me observe at this point that, up to certain limits, our national defense needs to be expanded and improved. We might as well recognize, however, that beyond those limits the question of an adequate national defense depends entirely upon which of two policies we adopt in our foreign relations. One of these policies—the one favored by the administration—is an internationalistic policy—at least, to a more or less limited degree. The other policy—opposed to the administration's views—is a nationalistic, or isolationist, policy. Let us first consider the internationalistic policy and reduce it to its essentials.

We are told by administration spokesmen that another world war impends. Some declare that it is imminent—the question of a few months. Others declare that it will come within the next 2 years. All of them declare that if a war breaks out in Europe, we cannot avoid being gravely affected by it and, in all probability, sooner or later being drawn into it. "We cannot remain aloof," say administration spokesmen.

It is further contended by the supporters of the administration policy that the so-called democracies of the Old World—meaning principally France and England—are fighting with their backs to the wall against increasing encroachments and growing power on the part of the so-called "aggressor-dictator" nations, meaning principally Germany, Italy, and Japan.

We are also told by administration spokesmen that the South American republics within the zone of influence of the Monroe Doctrine are likewise faced with both economic and ideological penetration by the totalitarian Governments of Germany, Italy, and Japan. Thus far we have heard little about the totalitarian Government of Russia, although communism, too, is making rapid inroads, it is said, in South and Central America, as well as in this country.

The contention of the administration spokesmen is that we must support an economic alliance with those nations opposed to Germany, Italy, and Japan, and facilitate their purchases of machinery and munitions of war in this country, while we invoke economic sanctions against Germany, Italy, and Japan.

It is further contended by the administration that we can pursue such a policy of favoring one group of nations on a cash-and-carry basis, at the same time invoke economic sanctions against other nations, and still remain "short of war."

The administration spokesmen further assert that if we do not thus throw our economic and moral weight on the side of the so-called European democracies, the new philosophies of force may overrun the other continents and invade our own. We are told by the administration that "when we deliberately try to legislate neutrality, our neutrality laws may operate unevenly and unfairly—may actually give aid to an aggressor and deny it to the victim."

Behind all of these assertions apparently lies a conviction on the part of the administration spokesmen that if the so-called aggressor nations can by force overcome and subjugate the European democratic nations, they can then utilize the economic and manpower and the material resources of the subjugated nations to support an attack against us that would be a grave threat to our lives and our Nation.

The administration advocates point out to us that if we act now in an economic alliance with the democratic nations of Europe to discourage, by both our attitude and our economic power, the philosophy of force on the part of the dictator nations, a general war will be averted and time will be afforded to find a way for the peaceful settlement of controversial issues.

The administration spokesmen do not tell us how they propose to effectuate the economic sanctions to be invoked against the dictator nations. They do not tell us what policy we would follow in the event the aggressor nations and the democracies of the Old World became locked in armed conflict, in which case the democratic nations might not have the money with which to make cash payments to us for machines and munitions of war or for foodstuffs and clothing stuffs for their civilian populations, as well as their armed forces.

The administration spokesmen do not say what would be our policy in event the democratic nations should face defeat in such a war and should call upon us again to throw our manpower into the fray on their side.

Mr. Chairman, having thus briefly outlined the fundamental essentials of the administration's foreign policy, I desire now to examine the isolationist policy.

The advocates of an isolationist policy assert that nobody knows whether or not another world war impends, because nobody knows just how far the rulers of the dictator nations are actually prepared to go toward an armed conflict, by reason of their economic limitations, the danger of internal revolution, and so on.

But, say these advocates of isolation, whether or not war comes in Europe, we can avoid being drawn into it by staying at home and minding our own business and trying to solve our domestic problems as rapidly and as successfully as we can. These isolationist advocates point out that the only way we can meet commercial competition in the South and Central Americas is to manufacture and sell our products in the South and Central American countries at prices which will successfully meet the competition of German, Italian, and Japanese goods. These isolationists further contend that if we attempt to take the attitude that our South and Central American neighbors cannot buy from the dictator nations, but must buy from us at a higher price, such an attitude would be, in fact, imperialistic and would be an abandonment of the administration's good-neighbor policy.

These isolationist advocates further assert that force of arms will not stop the spread of ideologies, because ideas are intangible and cannot be killed with bullets. They say further that a peaceful, prosperous, and friendly United States of America would be the very best example to the peoples of the South and Central Americas of the blessings and advantages of democracy. These isolationists contend that the best conceivable defense against the penetration into this country of either communism, nazi-ism, or fascism is an employed, prosperous people who are maintaining themselves and their self-respect by their own efforts.

These isolationists point out that it is a singular fact that throughout all of this discussion over the past year or more about dictator governments little or nothing has been said about the Stalin Government of Russia, which is perhaps the most dictatorial government on earth today and which rules by terrorism, torture, the bullet, and the noose.

The isolationists contend that when we enter into an economic alliance with the democratic governments of Europe, and begin to invoke economic sanctions against the dictator governments of the world, we have then and there ended our neutrality and already have become participants in an economic world war which inevitably will lead us into a world conflict at arms.

The isolationists insist that if we pursue such a policy of economic alliance with one group of nations while invoking economic sanctions against other nations, we cannot hope to remain "short of war," but will be led directly into war. They further assert that as soon as we take part in such an economic contest and begin to try to starve other nations of either munitions of war or food and clothing stuffs, the decision as to when armed conflict will ensue will rest with those nations against whom we are economically at war, and not with us. It will be for them, and not for us, to decide when they shall resort to arms in order to find relief from economic pressures.

Isolationist spokesmen insist that if Germany and Italy, for instance, were to engage in a decisive war with England and France, they would be so exhausted in both an economic and a military sense that they could not even contemplate crossing the ocean to invade and conquer us for half a century to come.

These isolationists further assert that a policy of economic sanctions could be made only partially effective, because there would be no way for us to prevent other neutral nations from purchasing and reselling our munitions and goods, except by invoking economic sanctions against all the nations of the world which might be doing business and carrying on trade with the dictator nations. This, of course, would also be true of embargoes under the Neutrality Act if war should ensue.

Our isolationist friends—some of them, at least—insist that our attitude and expressions on this question, instead of deterring the dictator nations away from war, may well cause them to hasten into a war in the hope that they can win such a conflict before the United States could get into a position to make itself effective on the side of the democracies.

The isolationists point out that we got into the World War by successive steps, which would be repeated in event of another war. They cite, first, that there was a very delicate question as to which side we would take in the last war—whether that of the Central Powers or of the Allies. They also call attention to the fact that at first our allies wanted only money, or rather credits—which meant munitions and supplies. They did not want us to send men. Before the conflict was over, however, we had more men in France than some of the other nations. Following the war our allies were not even grateful for our expenditures of money and men. We were berated for not having gone into the war sooner. The war debts and the post-war debts were scaled down and reduced, and scaled down and reduced, and even today the remainder of those debts is in default.

The isolationists insist that it is illogical to believe that England and France, for instance, are going to purchase American airplanes unless they have positive assurance that in event they are engaged in war they will be able to get both parts and replacements from us. It is further pointed out that in an armed conflict our economic allies, the democracies, would again find themselves short of money with which to purchase machines and munitions of war and other necessary supplies, and probably short of ships with which to transport such machines and munitions and supplies from America to their own shores.

The result would be, say these isolationists, that we would again be asked by the democratic nations to finance their war, and, finally, if they became hard pressed, we would take the last step—as we did in the World War—and send men across to spill their blood. With such an armed conflict in progress, assert the isolationists, the moral obligations resting upon us to stand by our economic allies would be too strong to be resisted.

These advocates of isolation also claim—and not without a great degree of logic—that if an economic and moral alliance with the Old World democracies is a necessity for our own safety, in event they were too hard pressed by the dictator nations in an armed conflict the same reasons would impel us to send our citizens again to foreign battlefields. The isolation advocates insist on this basis that the inevitable final result would be that not only would we have to finance and help fight another war, and not only would we never be able to collect any of the war loans made to finance another war, but the depression in the United States which would follow such a war, as depressions have always followed wars, would be so great as gravely to threaten, if not destroy, our own constitutional form of government and throw us into a fascistic or a communistic dictatorship.

These isolationists insist that if we are going to take the first step of economic alliance with any group of nations, and if we are going to take the second step of invoking economic sanctions against any other group of nations, we ought to face the facts squarely and let the people of the Nation know that such a course probably will lead to our participation in another world conflict. They assert, further, that the people, who have to do the fighting and the dying and the paying in any war in which we are engaged, ought to have the final decision as to whether or not we shall embark upon such a course.

Finally, these isolationists assert that if we are going to try to bring moral pressures and economic sanctions to bear in an effort to avert war we would be far more effective if we were to take the open position that we would throw the whole force of our resources—our economic and our manpower—on the side of the democratic nations in event of such a conflict, and that we would do it promptly.

This brings us squarely face to face with the question, Do the American people want to go into another world war in an effort to make the world safe for democracy or to end wars?

Now, Mr. Chairman, we can clearly see that the question of an adequate defense—beyond certain well-defined limits which we are informed by our Army and Navy officers are essential as common-sense insurance against eventualities—hinges upon the question of which policy we are to pursue. If we pursue one policy—that of internationalism and economic alliance—then we will need a military machine capable not only of defending our own shores but of maintaining a line of communication with foreign shores where our armies might be fighting. If we are to follow a stay-at-home-and-mind-our-own-business policy, then we will need a military defense mechanism of a much different character.

Thus, it seems to me we are faced with a necessity for a clear choice of either an internationalistic or an isolationist policy before we can determine with certainty the necessities and requirements of our military machine. The House and Senate Committees on Military Affairs seemed to have heard one sort of report from military officers and another kind of report from at least two of our foreign Ambassadors.

The question arises here as to whether two foreign Ambassadors are more capable of weighing the conditions in Europe and judging how imminent is war, and how vitally and how quickly that war may affect us, than are our military officials, with their special training, their constant study of these questions, and their vast network of intelligence agents throughout the world.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, there have been assertions that these Ambassadors were recalled to Washington by the administration and sent before the congressional committees as high-pressure salesmen rather than as experienced observers and judges of the imminence of war and its probable effects upon this Nation.

However that may be—and I am passing no judgment on that question—we must make a choice as to our advisers. Either they will be our military and naval authorities, who ought to be able to advise us very capably, or they will be civilians who might possibly be actuated by something other than cool, dispassionate, logical analysis based upon accurate information.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that I have at least made clear the fundamental essentials of these two conflicting policies, and in doing so that I may have emphasized the necessity for cool, calm, dispassionate deliberation on this question, instead of emotionalism, hysteria, suspicion, rancor, hatreds, or resentments.

I have not considered a middle course, so-called, between these two philosophies of internationalism on the one hand and isolation on the other, because, I confess, I have been unable to see any middle course. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we either must take sides or remain completely aloof. It seems to me that if we do take sides we must do so with a full and clear realization that we may be embarked upon a journey that will lead us directly into another World War; while if we take the other course, we may find ourselves standing practically alone as the last great democracy in a world gone mad with blood lust and a philosophy of force.

However, whatever we in the Congress decide to do should be done with calmness and deliberation and a due sense of the momentous results which must, in any case, grow out of our decision. [Applause.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation bill that we now bring before you is the second regular annual supply bill reported thus far this session and deals with appropriations for our legislative establishment for the fiscal year 1940. It comes to you as concrete evidence of how much it costs you to run your business up here on Capitol Hill. Your subcommittee has been working on this bill since January 30 and has had unusual opportunity to examine our proposed legislative expenditures with care. Only recently this House passed the independent offices bill, carrying $1,604,000,000. This bill was cut $1,580,000. I call your attention to the present bill, which came to our committee with Budget estimates of $24,287,946 and which we bring to you with a total of $21,636,398, a saving under the Budget of $2,651,548.

You may also be interested to know that requests running into many hundreds of thousands of dollars were eliminated by our subcommittee because we felt that we must begin economizing in every department of government. Included in these eliminations were requests for new terraces and repairs, $345,000; new pavement in front of the Capitol, $390,000; moving floors from the Office Building to the House, $200,000; roofs, $585,000; printing, $135,000; new greenhouses, $90,000; new sidewalks, $25,000; new personnel, $340,000; printing and binding, $108,000; and many other items too numerous to mention here.

You may also be interested to know that there came before us only two heads of activities who asked or suggested reductions. One suggested that we could cut the Government Printing Office appropriation $135,000 and there was another suggested cut of $2,500.

Every Member of this House should diligently read the hearings on this bill. It contains valuable information for each Member regarding what it costs to run this House and the legislative branch of the Government. While the hearings contain but 330 pages, there was the equivalent of many pages of "off the record" discussions through which your subcommittee endeavored to learn where further reductions could be made.

The entire hearings, in my opinion, developed the fact that the subcommittees, as well as the full Committee on Appropriations and the entire House membership, are groping pretty much in the dark on how much money we should or should not appropriate for the various activities of the Government. We are entirely dependent upon the honesty and competency of the department and bureau heads who appear before us showing justifications for these expenditures. The value of the Appropriations Committee clerks is beyond estimate. These able men in our service are the guardian angels of committee members and, in my opinion, save the Government many times the amount they receive in salary.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. Not with reference to this particular appropriation bill but with reference to various other agencies of the Government and departments, I recall that in the last Congress the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Umstead] made the pertinent suggestion that it would be an expenditure that would make for economy, if the Congress would authorize certain experts to serve as agents of the Committee on Appropriations, and would investigate through the year in the various departments those very items and the way these moneys are expended, in order to know what items could be properly eliminated. Does not the gentleman think that would be a wise provision if the Congress should give as assistants to the Committee on Appropriations men of this character, whose job it would be the year round to investigate these items, these expenditures, and give us expert information through the Committee on Appropriations as to economies that could reasonably and properly be effected?

Mr. STEFAN. I may say to my colleague from Texas that he is making exactly the statement that I was about to make, and I thank him for his contribution. I shall continue from there on. The gentleman has hit the nail on the head.

Mr. LANHAM. Are not their labors so onerous that they do not have time themselves to make this investigation that I speak of.

Mr. STEFAN. There is no question about that. These valuable clerks in the Committee on Appropriations are career men who know more about appropriations than any Member in the House. I feel that the men occupying the responsible positions as heads of the various departments and bureaus are highly qualified and are possessed of high character. Yet I feel that the administrators in each department and bureau are likely to be so keenly interested in the growth and expansion of their activities that they are not always helpful to committees seeking to reasonably restrain and regulate such expansion.

The membership of these committees, knowing the ever-mounting indebtedness of the Federal Government, must feel that some day a real accounting must be made to the taxpayers. There is a national debt of around $40,000,000,000 and the deficiency of revenue receipts as compared to expenditures seems not to have been considered by some of the witnesses that appear before the committees.

This is glaringly manifest in one statement made to our subcommittee by a high official. He said: "Reductions do not often happen in Government establishments." I do not quote him by way of criticism but just to show Members how those in Government service feel about it and that they really know that "reductions do not often happen."

For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I feel that this Congress should give immediate study to the possibility of employing disinterested experts. Men who know costs and who know something about efficiency and coordination of business so that that knowledge may be applied to expenditures in the Government establishments. Perhaps some of the present valuable clerks of the Appropriations Committee could be so utilized. But, certainly, if we are to continue to expend the people's money upon the recommendations of employees to whom the funds are entrusted, there is bound to be some over-emphasis leading to appropriations that might otherwise be reduced or eliminated. Disinterested efficiency experts, trained in the matter of saving money for the Government; men who are responsible directly to the Congress, would actually save many millions of dollars every year and the membership would actually know that appropriations are being made according to scientific rather than guesswork standards.

I know that there is an opportunity for more saving in this branch of the Government. I know that there are many activities of doubtful utility that should be eliminated, and I hope that subsequent subcommittees handling future bills of this kind will profit somewhat by whatever savings we have made in this particular bill. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the committee by saving nearly $2,000,000 has set the precedent which we should follow in future appropriations.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think the committee has done a very fine piece of work. This reduction is one of the best showings that any subcommittee has brought before the House.

Mr. STEFAN. There should be more. We know that.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would like to get the gentleman's opinion with regard to the roof matter, whether the gentleman thinks there is any immediate necessity for any further investigation, or what should be done as a matter of protection.

Mr. STEFAN. The matter of $585,000 for the replacement of the roof over this Chamber and the roof over the Senate Chamber came before us suddenly. We knew nothing about it until it came before us all of a sudden. It came as the result of an investigation on the part of a very high type consulting engineer. In answer to my question as to whether or not there was immediate danger he told me that in case we have a 30-inch snow he would recommend that the Members of the House move out. He told us there is 50 percent danger in these roofs. This committee did not want to be on record as failing to safeguard life. They brought before us the question of the Knickerbocker Theater, when the roof caved in some 20 years ago as the result of a heavy snow, and many lives were lost. We did not want to be on record as being niggardly in money when it came to saving human life. However, they told us they would not do any work until the House was vacant; until the Congress had adjourned.

My concern and the concern of the membership of the committee was with your lives and the lives of these precious people who are sitting in the galleries, who visit here every day. If there is any danger whatsoever, the danger must exist now. At our meeting this morning we eliminated the $585,000, because we felt we had not received enough expert information. So we have in the bill an item of $5,000 for immediate investigation, further investigation, with the hope that if there is any immediate danger, your lives and the lives of the public will be safeguarded.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does not the gentleman think that the acoustics of this Chamber should be improved? This is the greatest deliberative body in the world, and this Chamber has the poorest acoustic properties.

Mr. STEFAN. I do not think so. As the result of the installation of these loud speakers, the acoustics are all right, if you will use them properly. But nothing should be done in this entire building which would in any way eliminate any valuable American architecture. There is a movement on foot, and has been for many years, to do a lot of tearing down and changing. I have been fighting, as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, together with my distinguished chairman and other Members of this House, for years and years, to stop modern vandals, who would destroy valuable American architecture. A movement is on foot today to move the front of the Capitol out to meet the House wing; to put up a marble dome, and God knows what; destroy many of the scroll works and valuable things that we should preserve for future generations.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman does not think that the men who designed the ceiling of the Mormon Temple in Salt Lake City were vandals, does he? The gentleman does not think that the men who designed the ceiling of the great Radio City in New York are vandals, does he?

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, we do not refer or are we discussing the Mormon Temple or Radio City in New York. The question was asked whether or not the acoustics could be improved. I think there has been a great improvement since we installed this voice-aid system.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman recognizes, however, that in general debate, if a Member does not have access to one of these loud speakers, his voice does not rise any higher than it ever did.

Mr. STEFAN. Well, that is a debatable question. You can add all the microphones you want.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON].

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, during the last several days Republican oratory has flown freely as Republican leaders throughout the Nation gathered to observe the birthday of the father of their party, Abraham Lincoln.

I have listened intensely and with a degree of amusement to their ridiculous claims for achievement during recent years and to their equally ridiculous tirades against the present Democratic administration and its accomplishments which have, however, in virtually every instance been supported by the vote of an overwhelming majority of the Republican membership of Congress. Now, Mr. Chairman, as a Member of this Congress, as a member of the Democratic Party, and as one who loves his country, I do not intend that this challenge go unanswered.

After having listened to their self-praise, their claims of present-day accomplishment, and being myself familiar with Republican leaderships and their results during the last quarter of a century, I recalled the political philosophy of the founder of that party, the great humanitarian, the fearless courageous leader, Abraham Lincoln, and I then secured a copy of the Republican platform of 1860, upon which Lincoln was elected President, and again read its provisions. I could not help but be amused at the tremendous contrast between the principles of Republicanism, as announced and practiced by Lincoln, and Republicanism, as practiced by Republican leadership during my lifetime. Regardless of our views toward prevailing conditions and the sectional issues of 1860, there could be no doubt but that Abraham Lincoln, like the founder of our great Democratic Party, Thomas Jefferson, firmly believed in observing and promoting the rights, the opportunities, the liberty and freedom of the average citizen of America. It was upon his love for and devotion to the meek, the humble, and the lowly citizen that he based the greatness of his party and the determination of his efforts. It was his love for humanity that gave a soul to the Republican Party. The Republican Party in recent years, however, has practiced doctrines as far from these as the East is from the West.

The Republican Party, under whose rule I have lived the major portion of my life, has practiced a governmental policy of special privilege, unjust economic discriminations, and selfish protection for favored interests that has sapped the economic vitality of this Nation, pauperized the producers of our raw products, concentrated the wealth and the purchasing power of our people in the hands of a few dominating families, and brought our Nation to the brink of destruction. Their satellites, like the Scribes and Pharisees of old, pronounce beautiful prayers of praise on the street corners and in the public places, but practice the iniquities of special privilege in their secret councils.

When I read of Lincoln and then of the leaders of Lincoln's party today, I am reminded of the description of the mighty Caesar as given by Cassius to Brutus, when he said:

'Tis a common proof that lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face;
But when he once attains the upmost round
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds,
Scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend.

The principles of the lowly Lincoln have today become the scorn of the party of Lincoln. Could Abraham Lincoln return today and observe the travesties perpetrated by Republican leaders in his name, he would scourge them from the party even as Christ drove the money changers from the temple. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in 1932 the American people, disgusted with hypocritical Republican leadership, turned in their hour of desperate need, as they had done so often before in the history of our Nation, to the principles and to the leaders of democracy. They accepted and proclaimed the political doctrine as announced by the Democratic Party in the campaign of 1932, and they still believe in those doctrines. True it might be that our Democratic leaders in their anxiety to ameliorate the desperate plight of the great mass of our citizenship listened too intently to the false doctrines of economic and political theorists who follow the false gods of planned economy, socialism, and communism. The average citizen, however, has no desire to turn back to the equally false doctrine of the Republican leadership, special privilege, by which the average citizen has been driven to poverty and servitude. They will not return to it. [Applause.]

Much good has been accomplished by Democratic leadership during the last 6 years. Many evils have been corrected, many injustices removed. It is only natural that at the same time some evil should have crept in and some false doctrines at times confused those who occupied high place. The Democratic Party today, however, holds firmly the torch of human liberty within its fearless grasp; and here in the Congress, in this House of Representatives, abides that Democratic leadership which loves our freedom and our liberty, a leadership that is courageously and successfully promoting, protecting, and defending the weak, the needy, and the destitute in spite of the scorn and ridicule of a party leadership which, having lived sumptuously upon the economic lifeblood of a great people for over half a century, has grown immune to the pleading cries of the average citizen in his hour of need.

Much yet remains to be done. We must learn again the principles of the true American system of government, principles forgotten during years of Republican exploitation. The great people of our country forgetting for a time that the price of liberty is eternal vigilance were bought with their own gold into almost complete servitude. But America has now awakened. We will learn again the true principles of free government and apply them to our problems yet unsolved. Under Democratic leadership we are learning them again and we are applying them. Under the banner of democracy we shall continue to carry the torch of freedom. The scorn of a diseased Republican Party will serve only to point out our errors and give courage to our efforts. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, what, except the sneers of a cynic, is the Republican Party offering as a solution to our unsolved problems? How would they solve the problems of the manufacturers, the laborers, the miner and the farmer except by a return to their iniquitous practices of greed and avarice? What leadership do they offer to the average citizen of this country in his desperate effort to earn a living for himself, his wife, and his children except the leadership of despair, of economic servitude divested of both liberty and private initiative? Such leadership, Mr. Chairman, travels the highway toward feudalism, toward monarchy, toward the divine right of kings. Mr. Chairman, Americans over a century and a half ago marched with George Washington in command against the forces of tyrannical power, and in the blood of their comrades struck down by the rule of brutal force, out of this highway of human servitude across the wilderness of trials and experimentation, into the long-sought roadway of free government.

They perfected a new and untried political organization known as Americanism and used it to secure for themselves and their posterity their inalienable rights.

Abraham Lincoln loved that political system and gave his life in the strengthening of it; but today the Republican Party, made great through the inspired determination of a great leader, has lost its soul; its useful day has past. There still remains, however, a living, breathing, growing democracy in whose ranks march millions of descendants of the followers of Washington, good American citizens who love their freedom, their liberty, and their free institutions. Their devotion to the cause of Americanism will save our institutions and preserve the rights and the liberties of our people. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that I have not a prepared address to answer my distinguished colleague from Georgia. He must have put much time and effort into the preparation of that manuscript. Imagination had to run wild in the efforts he made to try to find some excuse for the unfortunate conditions that prevail in the Democratic Party today.

I extend to you Members on the Democratic side today my sympathy. It is a sad condition of affairs when the majority party finds itself with dissension prevailing such as prevails among you men today. It is not surprising that dissensions drive deeper wedges day by day into your ranks. It could not be otherwise with the New Deal's disturbing presence in your midst. With its vacillations and inconsistencies to contend with, how could harmony prevail? I do sympathize with your unfortunate lot. It is a pathetic condition.

I have read in the newspapers of the futile efforts you have made to try to bring about a degree of harmony, to try to find some place where you men could find common ground. I am sorry for every one of you men who have resented the purge. Of all men, I am surprised at the distinguished gentleman from Georgia coming here today and trying to belabor with his words the Republican Party, for it was in Georgia that the purge persisted; it was in Georgia that this one-man party system, against which most of you men are rebelling, had its worst effect. [Applause.] It was in Georgia that you men felt the lash of the Simon Legrees in the past primary campaign, as one of your distinguished sons, one of the valiant men of the Democratic Party, one of those fearless and courageous leaders dared defy the White House and appear as a candidate for another body.

Then it was that the invective; then it was that the patronage whip; then it was that the buying power of your party's leadership tried to purge your party of a brilliant son of Georgia.

I am sorry for your discord. I am sorry for the dissension. It is only because of the dissension in your own ranks that the gentleman from Georgia resorted to the tactics he used today. You are divided. We are united. Complete harmony prevails among Republicans. [Applause.]

We have a united front today. It is not necessary for the minority leader to stand up to try to bring together a warring group of factions. It is not necessary for the minority leader on this side to send out pleas that the membership be present. It is not necessary in any way for the minority leader to take the position that the men are afraid to come to the floor of the House and take a stand. It can only be fear that depletes your ranks here on the floor.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I decline to yield.

Mr. PATRICK. I do not blame the gentleman.

Mr. DITTER. May I say to my distinguished friend that if his side of the House will give me additional time I will be happy to yield.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. I would like to ask the gentleman what they have to fight for over there, how you are going to have any lack of harmony in the Republican Party, when you lambast the Democrats for being too liberal and reach right out and embrace the Townsend plan in one sweep?

Mr. DITTER. May I answer the gentleman by saying that I know of no declaration of the party leadership which has embraced the Townsend system; however, I do know the leadership on the minority side has embraced every liberalism for which Lincoln contended as against the collectivism and regimentation of the present New Deal party in power. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it not passing strange that the new dealers find it necessary to put to the front as their defender a man who has perhaps as bad a New Deal record, as far as voting goes, as any man on that side?

Mr. DITTER. That is the unfortunate and embarrassing position that my distinguished colleague who preceded me finds himself in. On vote after vote he repudiated this New Deal policy. Time after time he took exception to what today is the Democratic policy. I want you men on this side to bear in mind one thing. The Democratic Party is responsible for the New Deal, and nobody on this side can avoid responsibility for the failures and the futility of the efforts that have been made by the New Deal to correct the conditions from which the country is suffering. May I repeat the Democratic Party is responsible for the New Deal. Its trust may have been betrayed. It may have been deceived and hoodwinked. But try as it will, the Democratic Party cannot escape the responsibility for the New Deal debacle.

May I remind the group on this side that we still have, some 11,000,000 unemployed. We still have the great problem of our social difficulties and our economic distresses unsolved. We have had 6 years of this New Deal. After 6 years of lending and spending, of ranting and chanting, of dealing and squealing, the problems which you promised to solve remain unsolved.

Mr. Chairman, the Republican Party is not in any way ashamed of the solidarity that prevails in its ranks today. It flaunts this solidarity in the face of a discordant, disrupted, disorganized group on this side. It flaunts this solidarity and harmony in the face of every one of you who came to your party caucus a few days ago and repudiated the efforts of the White House to make your party a one-man party. The Republican Party stands where Lincoln stood; for a liberalism as broad as the need of humanity, for a common sense that knows that every dollar that is spent has to be earned, that every dollar wasted is somebody's toil thrown away.

Mr. GEYER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I decline to yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. This must be a filibuster.

Mr. DITTER. I cannot accept that as a challenge, sir, when I only have 10 minutes. Give me an hour and I will reply.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman was given 5 minutes by this side. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. May I say to the gentleman, I will yield to my friend from Massachusetts providing he will not at this point give voice to the same expression of opinion with reference to the constitutional responsibilities of a Member of Congress, such as he expressed last week—

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman yielding on condition?

Mr. DITTER. During the consideration of the tax bill. Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman yielding on condition? I never thought the gentleman would do a thing like that.

Mr. DITTER. I never thought my distinguished friend would take the stand he did a few days ago. If the gentleman now repudiates the statement he made last week, with reference to constitutional responsibility on the part of a Member of Congress, or if he wishes to amplify in any way that statement I shall be happy to yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's observation—

Mr. DITTER. I have not yielded to the gentleman except for a purpose and with a condition. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON].

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, I feel that it would be fitting at this time to spread upon the records of this legislative branch of our Government some words of tribute in recognition of the things that the late Pontiff, Pope Pius XI, stood for and exemplified in a long life of spiritual guidance and intelligent and forceful leadership of one of the greatest Christian organizations existing in the world today. It is significant that today millions of persons outside of the church of which he was the supreme ruler and doctrinal arbiter have added their testimonies of regret at his passing to the many millions the world over who acknowledge his apostolic succession and his spiritual leadership. Significant, too, is the grave concern that is being universally expressed as to the choice of his successor, for in these perilous times of wars and rumors of wars his voice was always symbolical of the message that was bequeathed to us by the Master he acknowledged as the apostle of brotherhood among men and the Prince of Peace and Good Will.

It matters not what may be our differences in matters of creeds, in forms of worship, in methods of religious organization. Fundamentally all followers of the gentle Nazarene who came to bring a new gospel to the world 2,000 years ago are in accord if they accept that gospel. The great religious organization of which Pius XI was the head—and the two hundred and sixty-first, I am reminded, in that succession—is one of the oldest in point of continuity as a religious government now in existence. Its history goes back to the dim dawns of modern civilization.

DOWN THE CENTURIES

I recall in this connection the eloquent words of a great Protestant historian, Thomas Babington Macaulay. In one of his essays reviewing a book dealing with the life of the papacy, he said, referring to the long continuance of the Roman Church and its spiritual influence down the ages:

She saw the commencement of all governments and of all the ecclesiastical establishments that now exist in this world. She was great and respected before the Saxon set foot in Britain, before the Franks passed the Rhine, when Grecian eloquence was still in flower at Antioch, when idols were still worshiped in the temple of Mecca. And she may still exist in undiminished vigor when some traveler from New Zealand shall, in the midst of a vast solitude, take his stand upon a broken arch of London Bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's.

I make this quotation not in any spirit of religious controversy but simply as a reminder on this occasion of the far-flung backgrounds of history that lie behind the man who has just ended his succession and passed on, leaving that great organization, with its millions of devoted adherents, awaiting in anxiety for the next spiritual leader in line who, it is hoped, will have the courage, the energy, the faith, the freedom of soul, and the great humanitarian inspiration that Pius XI displayed throughout his long life and his noble pontifical reign. His last days were spent in a changing world menaced by ominous signs of spiritual disintegration. The ancient tenets of his church and of the Master whose work he sought to carry on so faithfully, he realized, are being flouted in many lands. Racial and religious hatreds are being fomented and the old and cruel doctrines of force and conquest and pagan brutalities are seeping into the political atmosphere of many countries and threatening many more. The gentle philosophy of Him who said "Love thy neighbor as thyself" is being supplanted by a philosophy of brute force and the crashing of the moral standards that inevitably go down in the paths of wars and conquest.

A COURAGEOUS SPIRITUAL LEADER

This great ruler of a spiritual world set his face courageously to oppose these modern trends—to warn us against the changes that he saw coming, to lift up his voice in eloquent encyclical pleas to mankind to stand by the faith of the fathers and the moral doctrines he deemed essential to the continuance of civilization and the spirit of peace among men. His greatest concern was for the maintenance of the moral standards that make for the very existence of that civilization. We are told by the press dispatches that the very last word upon his lips was "peace." Throughout his pontifical life this man pleaded for it, fought for it, stood up for it in season and out of season. He was valiant for the truth and always courageous in speaking his mind in the face of its enemies.

Gentle though he was in spirit and in his dealings with those around him, this Pope was a strong man in every way. In his youth a climber of mountains and a follower of an outdoor life, he became inured to physical hardships. But he was not only physically strong; he had strength of will, of heart, of purpose. Even in the hours of his illness he rose to his feet to conduct the daily duties of the Vatican that required his attention. A great scholar, an informed librarian, a scientist, a statesman; these great qualities of his mere manhood were surmounted and directed by his supereminent recognition of the spiritual place that he held as the supreme leader of a great religious organization whose reason for being, he deemed, was the regeneration of mankind and the inculcation of the higher virtues of faith, hope, and charity, upon which his church was founded. He brought these considerations to the solution of every problem that came to his hands, and let me say he dealt with these problems in a wholly modern manner. He dodged no issues. He never compromised. Matrimony to him was an indissoluble sacrament, uniting one man and one woman until death did them part. Education to him meant the education that built up the moralities. He spoke his mind about the influences that were at work in the theater, in literature, in the press, in social frivolities and freedoms to undermine these fundamental moralities. He was undaunted by dictators or political despots. The sophistries of politicians did not bewilder him. With a clear insight he saw the growing evils of an unbalanced industrial system and warned against their tendencies, fairly and impartially. Within that free little Vatican City he viewed the world with a free mind, a free soul, and a heart that understood the "still sad music of humanity," untarnished by worldly aims or selfish schemes of aggrandizement. It was a spot of earth that he kept free from purely physical concerns, dedicated solely to the higher concerns of spirit and the welfare of the higher natures of men, the welfare of the soul, not merely in a world to come but in the world we now live in.

HIS LAST THOUGHT FOR PEACE

These are not mere generalities. Pius XI, by the testimony of men of all creeds today, won the admiration of all by his modern methods of dealing with social problems and his outspoken efforts to bring contending factions together and to settle the disputes of statesmen and nations by timely advice and cooperation. He cautioned the industrial world against low wages to workingmen and spoke to workingmen against inordinate demands. He hated communism, not the communism that is created by the specious sophistries of scheming politicians, but the real communism that denies God and hates religion. I mean that sort of communism that is exemplified in a growing spirit of infidelity, of disbelief in Christianity and all that it stands for, and the sort of communism whose aim and purpose is the re-creation of a pagan world, whatever the name you may apply to it. He denounced the modern so-called nationalism as well. "It is a real evil," he said, "and it is not an exaggeration to call it a malediction in the field of religion." Above all, he hated war. His voice died out with the word of peace upon his lips. Those lips are silent now, but let us hope that those words of his departing spirit may live to arouse the world to a realization of the logic of peace and the horror of war.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

TRADE TREATIES

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, before addressing myself to the subject of trade treaties, I want to say that I would have greatly enjoyed participating in the debate that has just been going on. I wish to congratulate our friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] on being an able exponent of the policies of Abraham Lincoln, a defender of the Constitution, and a prover of the merits of the Republican attitude on great public questions. It was a gem of a speech, and I believe the gentleman well deserves all the praise he received from both sides of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that our friends on the majority side of the House have the advantage over those of us on the minority side in that they are able to make use of all the governmental departments and agencies in gathering material for their remarks. Despite this fact, they have failed to make out a case for the trade-treaty program. Nor have they answered or in any way refuted the basic criticisms of the program which its opponents have presented.

Proponents of the program originally contended that it was the only method by which our foreign trade could be restored. It was said that we must reduce our tariffs in order to secure export markets; that congressional methods of tariff revision were too cumbersome, and hence Congress must surrender its tariff and treaty-making authority to the President, without reserving the right of ratification or rejection of the treaties and without laying down a legislative formula to control the President in making reductions in rates.

TRADE RECOVERY BEGAN UNDER TARIFF ACT OF 1930

I most emphatically deny that the trade-treaty program is the only way our foreign trade can be restored. If it be true, as trade-treaty proponents unjustifiably contend, that the Tariff Act of 1930 was in a measure responsible for the 1929 world-wide depression, then it must be equally true that that same act was responsible for the upturn in our foreign trade—both in imports and exports—between 1932 and the time the trade-treaty program went into effect. Those advocating the program, however, are so hard pressed for evidence of the alleged benefits of trade treaties that they even claim the treaties were responsible for the upturn in trade which resulted long before the treaties ever went into effect. In 1934, only one trade treaty—that with Cuba—was in effect, and it was only operative during the last 4 months. During 1935, only three additional treaties came into effect—that with Belgium on May 1, that with Haiti on June 3, and that with Sweden on August 5. During the entire year 1935, our total exports to these countries increased by approximately 28 millions over the previous year.

Even if all this increase be credited to the treaty program—which I do not concede, since the general trend of exports to all countries was upward—but even if it is all credited to the effect of the treaties, the total is very small in comparison with the total recovery of our export trade from 1932 to 1935. During that period, our total exports increased from $1,611,000,000 to $2,283,000,000, or by $671,000,000. Now, if we subtract the increased export trade which may or may not have resulted from the operation of the four trade treaties in effect in 1935, we have a balance of over $640,000,000, representing increased export trade from 1932 to 1935, which cannot be credited in any sense to the trade-treaty program. This fact certainly disposes of the contention that the trade-treaty program is the only way by which our export trade can be restored.

CONGRESSIONAL TARIFF POWERS SURRENDERED UNDER TREATY PROGRAM

As to the question whether congressional methods of tariff revision are too cumbersome, the record speaks for itself. The proposition is somewhat moot, inasmuch as it has been shown that the Tariff Act of 1930, which the Congress itself wrote, brought about a substantial recovery in our export trade. It was contended that the President must have a free hand in the negotiation of the trade treaties in order to deal effectively with other governments whose heads had similar authority. But while the Congress of the United States has surrendered its authority over tariff and treaty making to the President, legislative bodies in most of the countries with which treaties have been negotiated have reserved the right to approve or reject the treaties. Thus this argument is disposed of. The real reason why the administration wanted a free hand in writing the trade treaties was that it was not certain that Congress would approve the treaties when negotiated, and I am quite sure that that is true insofar as most of them that thus far have been negotiated are concerned. However, that is no justification for surrendering the tariff and treaty-making power to the Executive, in direct contravention of the most fundamental provisions of the Constitution.

NO PRECEDENT FOR STAR-CHAMBER METHODS OF NEGOTIATION

Just a word as to the method of negotiating the trade treaties. Whenever any criticism is made of the present star-chamber procedure, by which negotiations are carried on behind closed doors, with representatives of foreign countries sitting around the table with a small group of self-styled tariff experts, trade-treaty proponents always attempt to draw an analogy between such methods and the manner in which previous tariff bills have been written in Congress. They charge that when the Republicans wrote the tariff bill of 1930 the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee were not permitted to assist in drafting the bill. That, of course, is nothing new, since the Democrats did the same thing when they were in power. However, the important point is that when a tariff bill is finally drafted, whether by Republicans or Democrats, it is brought before both Houses for discussion.

But when the trade treaties emerge from the secret council chambers there is no opportunity for review or criticism. Only after they have been signed by the President and thus been made binding on this country are their terms ever made public. Then it is too late to do anything about them. No hearings are ever held on a completed treaty. No opportunity is given Congress to approve or reject them. The people have no voice, through their elected Representatives and Senators in the proceedings at any juncture. In my opinion, democracy and representative government cease to exist under such a system. It is very much analogous to the system of government by decree which exists in certain foreign countries.

OUR TARIFFS NOW WRITTEN BY FOREIGNERS

I want to say that I would much rather trust my Democratic colleagues to write a tariff schedule in the interest of our people—even though Republican Members were excluded—than I would to turn this function of the Congress over to emissaries of foreign governments, whose only interest is to secure a greater share of our rich domestic market at the expense of American agriculture, industry, and labor. Under present procedure, these foreign representatives have more to say about the tariff rates of this country than we Members of Congress who are sent here as the representatives of the people, and to whom is vested under the Constitution the exclusive power to regulate tariff rates. How much longer are you Democrats going to permit this outrageous situation to exist? Certainly the people are not going to permit it to exist beyond 1941.

ACT OF 1930 WRITTEN ON SCIENTIFIC BASIS

In this connection, I want to refer briefly to one of the stock Democratic jibes at the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act of 1930, which falls in the category of demagoguery. I refer to the wholly unfounded charge that a certain interested private citizen had a hand in its preparation. Of course even our Democratic friends know that there is no truth in the charge. I can testify of my own knowledge how the Tariff Act of 1930 was written because I participated in the drafting. Outside of the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, the only persons present were Government officials, mostly employees of the Tariff Commission who had special knowledge of the items being considered from time to time. No outside persons were ever present. Rates were fixed, not on the basis of what some person or group desired, but on the basis of what was necessary to equalize foreign and domestic production costs, as indicated by studies made by the nonpartisan experts of the Tariff Commission. This cost-of-production formula was incorporated in the flexible tariff provisions, enabling the President to adjust duties up or down in accordance therewith as conditions of competition changed subsequent to the passage of the act. This formula has been completely eliminated and ignored under the trade-treaty program.

Whatever may be the demerits of Republican tariff measures, they have at least had the virtue of being written in the interest of the American people, which is more than can be said of the trade-treaty program.

TREATIES NOT CONDUCTIVE TO PEACE

Since the enactment of the Reciprocal Tariff Act in 1934, a new argument has been advanced in support of the treaty program of which nothing was heard when the legislation was first proposed. I refer to the contention that the treaty program is conducive to world peace. The argument was not advanced until after it became apparent that the treaty program was failing to bring about the great boom in our export trade which was promised. The peace argument was brought forth in an effort to distract attention from the failure of the program in other directions. But after 4½ years it is now quite apparent that it is equally a failure insofar as preserving peace is concerned.

NO TANGIBLE CONTRIBUTION TO PEACE CAN BE CITED

We are all in favor of peace, and certainly no one any more so than I. But let us seriously ask ourselves, Just what concrete contribution has the treaty program made toward world peace since it has been in operation?

No one can cite a single tangible result in that direction. On the other hand, we find that during the entire time the program has been in operation conditions throughout the world have grown progressively worse. Never was peace more in jeopardy than today.

SUPPORT OF TREATY PROGRAM BASED ON MISLEADING PROPAGANDA

The present trade-treaty program no longer has a leg on which to stand, yet I do not deny that it has widespread support, particularly in the press, based very largely upon the one-sided and frequently misleading propaganda with which the State Department floods the country. When the other side of the picture is presented—and there is evidence that the people and the press are gradually awakening to what is actually going on under the treaty program—there will, I am sure, be a decided change of attitude. I am told that in one congressional district the sole issue on which the successful Republican candidate campaigned was opposition to the treaty program. I have noted also that the chief proponent of the trade-treaty program here in this House during the past 4 years has been returned to private life by his constituents.

Last Sunday was the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, who, I may say, was a great protectionist. Lincoln once said:

I have faith in the people. Let them know the truth and the country is safe.

I, too, have faith in the people, and when they find out the truth about the trade-treaty program they are going to take steps to restore the traditional protective-tariff policy of this country and put back in the hands of their elected Representatives and Senators in Congress the power and duty of fixing tariff rates in accordance with that principle.

EXAMPLE OF STATE DEPARTMENT PROPAGANDA

A moment ago, I made a passing reference to the "frequently misleading" propaganda of the State Department. This is not a mere unfounded charge on my part. Let me give you a definite example: Not long ago a Mr. Edminster, an official of the State Department's trade-treaty division, made a speech down in North Carolina in which he endeavored to cite some of the alleged benefits of the treaty program to that State, pointing particularly to the large increase in cigarette exports. Whether purposely or unintentionally I do not know, but Mr. Edminster failed to tell the good people of North Carolina that 91 percent of the increased exports of cigarettes went to nontreaty countries. Then, later in his address, he had the audacity to say that the opposition to the trade-treaty program was largely based upon "misinformation and misunderstanding."

MEMBERS WHO VOTED FOR TREATY PROGRAM ASK EXEMPTION OF THEIR PRODUCTS

I have no doubt but that many Members of the House and Senate who voted for the Reciprocal Tariff Act have grave misgivings about their action. It is of course an undeniable fact that many of these Members have appeared before the Committee for Reciprocity Information asking that no reductions be made under trade treaties on the products of their particular district or State. Of course the tariff has always been a "local issue" within the Democratic Party. When Republican tariff bills have been before this body, we have seen Democratic Members vote in favor of tariffs on the products of their section and then vote against the bill on final passage. So there is nothing inconsistent in their attitude of favoring the sacrifice of home industries to foreign competition so long as the industries sacrificed are not located in their own sections.

SELFISH POSITION OF PROPONENTS

I believe the record will show that the only defense of the trade-treaty program in this House has come from a few Members on the other side of the aisle who have one or two export products in their districts on which concessions have been obtained from some foreign country. While these Members are apparently willing to see industries and workers in other sections injured in the mere hope that the products of their own sections may find a larger outlet abroad, they overlook the fact that whatever increased market may be obtained abroad will be offset by an equal if not greater loss of sales in the home market to those who have been sacrificed in order that the foreign market might be obtained.

Let me illustrate the point in this way: Suppose we consider that the reduction made on British woolen goods under the British treaty was to enable American automobile producers to sell more cars to Great Britain. By reason of the destruction of our own woolen industry and throwing the employees out of their jobs, the motorcar industry loses one or more sales in the home market for every additional sale it makes abroad. This cannot be denied.

BIPARTISAN OPPOSITION TO TREATY PROGRAM GROWING

It may or may not be significant, but the fact is that there are now pending before the Ways and Means Committee a number of bills seeking to repeal the Reciprocal Tariff Act and abrogate the treaties made thereunder. Others provide for Senate or House and Senate ratification. In the other body, one of the distinguished Members of the majority party has introduced a resolution (S. Res. 69, 76th Cong., 1st sess.), reading as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that foreign-trade agreements entered into under the act entitled "An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930," approved June 12, 1934, are treaties which under the Constitution can be made only by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and, there being nothing in such act which provides that such agreements should not be ratified by the Senate, as other treaties are ratified, it is the sense of the Senate that such agreements should be made effective only if the Senate has advised and consented to their ratification.

I cite this resolution merely as evidence of the growing bipartisan opposition to present trade-treaty methods. I concur in the view expressed in the foregoing resolution that the so-called trade agreements are in effect treaties and should be ratified by the Senate. In order for them to be valid as executive agreements, such as were negotiated under the Tariff Acts of 1890 and 1897, they must not involve the exercise of any legislative powers such as the President now has under the Reciprocal Tariff Act. As I pointed out in my remarks of January 10, 1939, the latter act lays down no legislative rule or formula to control the President in making rates, and he therefore exercises discretionary legislative authority contrary to the Constitution.

HOUSE SHOULD HAVE SAY IN TREATY RATIFICATION

While I agree that the present so-called trade agreements are in effect treaties, and are therefore subject to Senate confirmation, I do not believe that this alone would validate them. As the treaties affect the revenue, they cannot be made valid and operative, in my opinion, without the concurrent approval of the House of Representatives. As I discussed this phase of the question in my remarks last month, I shall not go into it again in detail. Whether viewed as treaties or as executive agreements, the present so-called trade agreements are in either case clearly unconstitutional.

UNJUSTIFIED CLAIMS OF TREATY PROPONENTS

Let us turn now to the practical side of the trade-treaty program. I have already referred in passing to the extravagant claims made by proponents of the program, and I now want to show you how unjustified these claims are. One of the principal arguments made in favor of the program is that under its operation, exports have increased more rapidly to treaty countries than to nontreaty countries, and hence it is contended that the trade treaties must be responsible for this increase. When we consider the total trade to treaty countries, and compare it with the total trade to nontreaty countries, it will be found that our exports increased faster to the first group, taken as a whole. However, when we come to analyze our export trade to individual treaty countries, the results are not so favorable to the treaty program. Trade-treaty proponents never present this side of the picture. Here are the facts:

EXPORTS TO NONTREATY COUNTRIES GREATER IN MANY CASES

Take first our trade with the South American countries. It will be found that our exports to several nontreaty countries in South America have increased a great deal more than our exports to many treaty countries. For example, comparing exports in the first 11 months of 1938 with the same period in 1935, our exports to Argentina, a nontreaty country, increased by 73 percent, while our exports to Brazil, a treaty country, increased by only 37 percent. Likewise, exports to Venezuela, a nontreaty country, increased by 178 percent, while exports to Colombia, a treaty country, increased by 81 percent.

Turning to Europe, we find that exports to Germany, a nontreaty country, which in addition is excluded from the benefits of our treaty concessions, increased by 26 percent as against only a 21-percent increase in our exports to France, a treaty country. Exports to Norway, a nontreaty country, increased in approximately the same percentage as our exports to Sweden, a treaty country. Many other similar examples could be given, all of which tend to prove that there is absolutely no justification for the claim made by trade-treaty proponents that the treaty program is directly responsible for the larger increase in our export trade to treaty countries. If there were any basis for this claim, exports to individual treaty countries should consistently show a larger increase than exports to nontreaty countries, which we have seen is not the case.

TREATY PROGRAM DID NOT PREVENT EXPORT DECLINE LAST YEAR

If the trade-treaty program exerts such a beneficent influence upon our export trade, then why did it not prevent the sharp drop in our export trade last year to several of the larger treaty countries? I refer particularly to our exports to Canada, Cuba, Brazil, Belgium, and France. In the case of numerous nontreaty countries, notably Denmark, Soviet Russia, Ireland, Chile, and Venezuela, our exports were greater in 1938 than in 1937. All of which shows that it is a mere coincidence that our exports to treaty countries, taken as a unit, have increased faster than our exports to nontreaty countries, taken as a unit.

The same holds true of exports of agricultural products as applies to exports in general. In fact, there is not even any ground for arguing that the trade-treaty program has substantially benefited the major farm products, because few concessions of any consequence have as yet been obtained for such products. I referred to this matter in my remarks last month and shall not go over the ground again.

FAVORABLE TRADE BALANCE IN 1938 NOT DUE TO TRADE TREATIES

Trade-treaty proponents have called attention to the large favorable trade balance last year—that is, the excess of exports over imports—and have thrown out the inference that it is entirely due to the trade-treaty program. As a matter of fact, the treaty program had nothing whatever to do with it, and I will show you why. In the first place, the trade-treaty program was supposed to increase our export trade, yet exports declined last year by 7.6 percent over 1937. Thus our favorable trade balance last year was not due to any increase in exports. What, then, was responsible for it?

The answer is to be found in the fact that imports declined by more than $1,000,000,000 last year over 1937. The circumstance that imports were less than exports gives us a favorable trade balance. But is the trade-treaty program to be given credit for the decline in imports? Not at all. The purpose of the trade-treaty program is not to discourage imports, but to encourage them. No tariff rates have ever been increased under the treaty program; they have only been lowered.

Thus we find that there is no ground whatever on which we can give the treaty program credit for the favorable trade balance last year. Yet we constantly hear proponents of the program pointing to the favorable trade balance as evidence of the benefits of the treaty program. This is further indication of the campaign of misrepresentation by which support for the program is sustained.

While the trade-treaty proponents now point with pride to the favorable trade balance, with which the trade-treaty program had nothing to do, I very well recall that one of the original arguments for the treaty program was that since we were a creditor nation it was "unhealthy" for us to have an excess of exports over imports. While I have never subscribed to this theory, I cite the argument merely to show how the trade-treaty proponents have changed their position.

REAL CAUSE FOR DECLINE IN IMPORTS IN 1938

While we have seen that the trade-treaty program was not responsible for the decline in imports last year we have not ascertained what was the real cause. The answer is to be found in the resumption of somewhat normal agricultural production in the United States, obviating the necessity for large imports of foreign agricultural products, and in the decline in purchasing power among our people due to the Roosevelt depression. This is not merely an opinion on my part. It is corroborated in official departmental publications. In the November 5 issue of Commerce Reports it is stated:

Import trade reflected the recession in business activity and the improvement in agricultural production in the United States.

The Department of Agriculture, in the August 13, 1938, issue of Foreign Crops and Markets, states:

The decrease in business activity influences the value of practically all our imports, both agricultural and other. It was accompanied by lower prices and by a general falling off in demand. Raw materials were needed in smaller quantity by factories and finished products were purchased to a lesser extent by workers.

There is food for thought in these two quotations.

While the Tariff Act of 1930 was unjustly blamed for the depression of 1929, the fact is, on the other hand, that the Trade Treaty Act of 1934 did not prevent the Roosevelt depression of recent date. It did not prevent the decline in farm income over $1,000,000,000 last year. It is very likely that the trade-treaty program was to some extent at least responsible for the Roosevelt depression, because it proceeds upon the fallacious principle that our prosperity at home is dependent upon the foreign market, whereas history has proved beyond any doubt that insofar as the United States is concerned, its prosperity is primarily dependent upon the home market.

PROSPERITY BASED ON HOME MARKET

The fact that our imports decline in times of depression and increase when we are prosperous definitely shows that our foreign trade will take care of itself when conditions at home are good; in other words, that increased foreign trade is a consequence, and not the cause, of domestic prosperity.

EXPORTS OF WAR MATERIALS A LARGE FACTOR IN PRESENT EXPORT TRADE

Just a word about the connection of war materials with our present export market. Trade-treaty proponents have tried without success to dispute the fact that our present export trade is sustained to a considerable extent by increasingly large exports of war materials. I have previously made the statement—and I stand by it—that if it had not been for the large exports of war materials in 1937 we would have had an unfavorable trade balance in that year. This is shown by the table inserted in the RECORD of April 12, 1938, by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS PROVE TRUTH OF CHARGE

I say now that the exports of war materials made up a large part of our total export trade in 1938, and that if it had not been for such exports, our total export trade would have declined last year by much more than 7.6 percent. Let me quote from the February 11, 1939, issue of Commerce Reports:

Exports of a number of manufactured articles for which demands in foreign countries had greatly increased in 1937, partly as a result of armament programs, continued to expand during 1938.

The article goes on to point out that exports of aircraft were several times larger in 1938 than in 1929, and also states that fuel-oil exports were above the 1929 total. On February 9 the majority leader in the other body inserted in the RECORD a statement by the Department of Commerce dealing with foreign trade. It contains this significant statement:

The demand for American machinery and metal manufactures has continued strong, due in a considerable measure to the heavy requirements of the rearmament programs of several European countries which have prevented those normally large exporting countries from supplying both export and domestic demands.

In view of these statements from the Department of Commerce, I trust that no Member on the majority side will now get up and try to deny—as several have done in the past—that a large part of our present export trade is in war materials.

ALLEGED PEACE PROGRAM SUSTAINED BY WAR EXPORTS

The preservation of peace is, as I have previously pointed out, one of the arguments now being used to sustain diminishing support for the trade-treaty program, but here we have the spectacle of the program being saved from complete disrepute by the large exports of war materials, with which it, of course, has no direct connection. The dove of peace thus feeds on armament exports.

MORE THAN 1,000 DUTY REDUCTIONS MADE UNDER TREATY PROGRAM

Let us now analyze the trade-treaty program from the standpoint of what it has done to our tariff structure. The Tariff Act of 1930 theoretically is still the law of the land, but it has been completely emasculated by the trade-treaty program. The United States Tariff Commission recently published a document of 171 pages showing changes made in the Tariff Act of 1930 under the flexible tariff and under the trade-treaty program. All but a few of the changes were made under the latter. In order to know what the tariff on a given article now is, you first look up the article in the Tariff Act of 1930 and then turn to this 171-page document of the Tariff Commission to see if the rate has been changed.

I have previously called the attention of the House to the fact that under the various trade treaties now in effect, some one-thousand-odd reductions in duties have been made. The result has been that this administration has brought about a piece-meal, but general, downward revision of the tariff.

Under the trade-treaty law, the President cannot reduce a duty by more than 50 percent. That is one provision of the act at least for which we can be thankful, but of course the fact remains that a 50-percent reduction is a rather drastic one.

SEVEN-TENTHS OF REDUCTIONS ARE OF MORE THAN 30 PERCENT

Now to what extent has the President availed himself of his authority to reduce tariffs the full 50 percent? I quote from an analysis of the treaty reductions, made by the American Tariff League. That organization found that the total number of reductions made under the treaty program (excluding the purely bilateral treaty with Cuba) total 1,056. Of this number, 365 rates, or over one-third, were reduced by the full 50 percent. One hundred and forty-four rates were reduced from 40 to 49 percent. Adding these to the first mentioned, we see that half the total number of reductions amounted to more than 40 percent. If we include the duties that have been reduced 30 percent or more, we find that the total covers seven-tenths of all the reductions. Let me repeat these figures, because they are important to bear in mind. They show what has been going on under the treaty program. Remember this: One-third the reductions have amounted to the full 50 percent; one-half are more than 40 percent; seven-tenths are more than 30 percent.

EIGHT-TENTHS OF REDUCTIONS BELOW LEVEL OF MODERATE 1922 RATES

If these figures are not sufficiently astounding to arouse the interest of the Members, then listen to what I am going to tell you now. Let us see how the reduced rates compare with the comparable rates under the 1922 Tariff Act, which was in existence before the act of 1930 was passed. The American Tariff League finds that only 928 of the 1,056 reduced rates can be compared directly with the 1922 rates, due to differences in classification, and so forth. Of this total, 776, or more than 83 percent, were reduced below the level of the comparable 1922 rates. Think of that! Over eight-tenths of the reductions below the level of the moderate 1922 rates. Is it any wonder that opposition to the trade-treaty program is growing by leaps and bounds?

WHOLE WORLD GETS BENEFIT OF OUR REDUCTIONS

It would be bad enough if the benefit of these reduced rates were only extended to the individual country with which a particular treaty is negotiated, but when we consider the fact that all the countries in the world save Germany get the benefit of our treaty reductions without giving us any reciprocal concessions in return, it becomes obvious that the trade-treaty program not only threatens the existence of domestic industries but will inevitably result in surrendering our rich domestic market for lean foreign markets.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I correctly understand that Cuba is the only country with which we have a trade agreement that does not extend to all other countries of the most-favored-nation clause insofar as the Cuban concessions are concerned?

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is correct in that statement. Cuba is the only one.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Looking forward to a proposition we will be considering here within a few days pertaining to the Philippine Islands, wherein the State Department is supporting a bill proposing that we extend the most-favored-nation clause to the Philippines until 1961, this will give us two countries where the most-favored-nation clause does not extend to other countries. Sometime when the gentleman has more time, if he cannot do it now, I wish the gentleman would comment on that phase of the Philippine situation.

Mr. TREADWAY. I should be very pleased to join the gentleman in some comment of that kind, because I know from personal experience that the gentleman from Michigan is very well posted both on the sugar situation in Cuba and the general trade situation in the Philippines, having toured that section within a very brief period of years. I should be pleased to take up a discussion of that question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thank the gentleman.

PRESENT TREATY PROGRAM NOT TRULY RECIPROCAL

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the present trade-treaty program goes under the name of "reciprocity," but it has no right to that name. Reciprocity contemplates mutual benefits, but the present program is a strictly one-sided proposition in favor of foreign nations and against the interests of our own people.

The generalization of the treaty concessions is defended by the administration on the ground that concessions usually are made only with respect to products of which the treaty country is our chief source of supply. However, I have shown in past speeches upon this subject that this rule is not universally followed, and that in many instances which I have cited nontreaty countries have been the chief beneficiaries of our concessions without giving us anything in return.

ADMINISTRATION FAILS TO ENFORCE PROVISION OF LAW DENYING TREATY RATES TO CERTAIN NATIONS

In this connection I want to call attention to a provision of the Reciprocal Tariff Act which, if it were being enforced by the administration, would automatically deny the benefits of our treaty concessions to many countries which are now the objects of our generosity—or I should say of the administration's generosity. I refer to the provision which states that if any country discriminates against our commerce, it shall be denied the benefit of the most-favored-nation clause. That provision is not being enforced today. As I have indicated, only one country is on the blacklist despite the fact that many nations are actively discriminating against American commerce. This was admitted by Assistant Secretary of State Sayre before the Ways and Means Committee when that committee was considering the resolution to extend the life of the treaty program. It has also been admitted by another administration tariff spokesman—Commissioner Ryder, of the Tariff Commission—in an article appearing in the London Political Quarterly for December 1937. Thus under present procedure we are not only giving up our home market to the world without getting equivalent concessions in return but we are actually giving it up to many countries which are very definitely discriminating against our own goods.

Secretary Hull partially justifies the generalization of our concessions on the ground that we are thereby setting an example for world-wide removal of trade restrictions. Aside from the injury that results to American producers from this policy, the pitiful part is that the world is not following our example. As was stated in a recent publication of the Tariff Commission:

The policy of bilateral balancing of trade appears to have become more widely accepted in fact than in theory.

In other words, the world is proceeding along the lines of bilateral trading rather than along the lines of most-favored-nation treatment, as provided for under the present program. This is further proven by the article in yesterday's papers stating that Argentina would not enter into a most-favored-nation treaty offered by the United States but wanted a strictly bilateral agreement.

MOST OF REDUCTIONS ARE ON COMPETITIVE FOREIGN PRODUCTS

Continuing with the discussion of the nature of the reductions made under the trade-treaty program, it is hardly necessary for me to remind the House that by far the great majority of the reductions were on foreign articles that directly compete with the products of our own agriculture, industry, and labor. Herein lies the chief objection to the present trade-treaty program, and I want to emphasize that fact as much as I can.

NO JUSTIFICATION FOR IMPORTING THINGS WE ALREADY HAVE

I have many times stated that the only purpose of foreign trade is to exchange our own surpluses for the things we need but do not produce ourselves. No one can successfully challenge that statement. The trade-treaty program, by encouraging and inviting increased imports of competitive products, surrenders our rich domestic market while it vainly attempts to build up our relatively unimportant foreign market. There cannot possibly be any gain to the Nation thereby. It is only when foreign trade is carried on without injury to our own people that it is profitable. Nothing is gained when for every additional dollar's worth of foreign trade an American export industry obtains, a dollar's worth or more of domestic trade must be taken from some other American industry and given up to foreign producers. Nor is it fair or in accordance with the doctrine of "equal rights for all and special privileges for none," to strike down one American industry or one group of American workers in an effort to help the export trade of another American industry or another group of American workers.

Anyone who accepts the principle that the only justification for foreign trade is the exchange of our own surpluses for things we need but cannot produce ourselves necessarily cannot support the present trade-treaty program. Not only does it work an injury on our own people and our national economy, but it involves a needless sacrifice of the American market.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. I dislike very much not to yield to my friend from Virginia, but I have so many more items to cover I should like to proceed. I am sure the gentleman has ample arguments of his own with which he always favors the House.

There is an ample demand in this country for noncompetitive products to provide foreigners with money with which to buy our own products. It is suicidal to continue to follow the present policy of allowing foreign producers to furnish us not only with the things we need but also with the things we already have in abundance and thereby displace our own products and take away the means of livelihood of large segments of our own people.

NO ONE SEEKS EXORBITANT TARIFFS FOR UNITED STATES

Trade-treaty proponents take the attitude that all criticism of the present trade-treaty program arises from those who want to fasten exorbitant tariff rates on the country and shut out all foreign imports. They also take the attitude that all who espouse the doctrine of reciprocity must necessarily support the present alleged reciprocity program 100 percent. I should like to discuss these two propositions very briefly.

The first hardly needs an answer, it being so patently absurd. All Republicans have ever demanded in the way of tariff rates is the equalization of foreign advantages in costs of production. No one could successfully contend that a rate which merely put the American producer on the same footing as the foreign producer was exorbitant or constituted an embargo rate.

If any of the rates of existing law are too high—exorbitant—they can be reduced to a proper level under the flexible tariff provisions which the Republican Party wrote into the Tariff Acts of 1922 and 1930. These provisions are still law, although the present administration has not made much use of them—certainly not to adjust rates upward where conditions demanded.

PRESENT RECIPROCITY PROGRAM ENTIRELY DIFFERENT FROM THAT SPONSORED BY MCKINLEY

As to the second proposition just stated, I want to say that there are all kinds of reciprocity, and just because a person is favorable to the general policy of reciprocity he is not thereby committed to the support of the present program of pseudo reciprocity. From time to time reference has been made by trade-treaty proponents to the fact that President McKinley was a great exponent of reciprocity. Quotations have been read from some of his speeches as endorsing the present alleged reciprocity program. If McKinley knew this, I am sure he would turn over in his grave. The present program is about as far from the type of reciprocity that he and the Republican Party have sponsored as the North Pole is from the South. Those who have quoted from McKinley in support of the present trade-treaty program have purposely failed to give a complete statement of his views. They have lifted certain sentences from the context of his speeches without adding the qualifying words.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY'S EXPOSITION OF TRUE PURPOSE OF RECIPROCITY

I have many times read to this House McKinley's version of the true principles and purpose of reciprocity. I will do so again, because apparently there are some who neither heard nor read the quotation to which I refer. President McKinley, in his inaugural address of March 4, 1897, speaking of the object of reciprocity, said that the "end in view" was always to be—

The opening up of new markets for the products of our country by granting concessions to the products of other lands that we need and cannot produce ourselves and which do not involve any loss of labor to our own people but tend to increase their employment.

Now that is a definite, clear-cut statement, which is not subject to any misinterpretation or misconstruction. Under McKinley's conception of reciprocity, concessions would only be made on noncompetitive foreign products. Under the present program, most concessions have been on competitive products which involve a loss of labor to our own people and tend to increase unemployment. Herein is the difference between the two concepts of reciprocity.

Under McKinley, reciprocity went hand in hand with protection for American agriculture, industry, and labor. Under the present program, protection for American producers has been abandoned. Duties have been reduced far below the cost-of-production differential.

REDUCTIONS NOT CONFINED TO "EXCESSIVE" RATES AS CLAIMED

I recall that when Secretary Hull appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in 1937 in connection with the resolution to extend the life of the treaty program, I asked him some questions relative to the necessity for maintaining tariff protection. He replied that the question of tariff protection per se did not arise in connection with the treaty program, adding:

This program calls merely for dealing with excessive, unreasonable, and trouble-breeding restraints and restrictions on trade.

If the Secretary had confined his reductions under the trade-treaty program to duties which were in truth "excessive and unreasonable"—if any there be—I am sure there would be no widespread opposition to the treaty program today. But he has not done so, as evidenced by the drastic reductions made on over a thousand articles, eight-tenths of the reductions being below the level of the moderate 1922 rates, half of which had not been increased when the 1930 act was passed. We all recall the statement made by Mr. Roosevelt in 1932 that he did not consider any of the agricultural tariffs to be excessive and would not reduce them, yet the Secretary of State, with the President's approval, has reduced the duties on a long list of farm products, many of them the full 50 percent permitted under the Trade Treaty Act.

A CONCRETE ILLUSTRATION OF ADVERSE EFFECT OF TARIFF REDUCTIONS

Trade-treaty proponents will contend that I am unduly alarmed about the prospect of injury to American interests by reason of the reductions under the trade-treaty program. I could very well answer by saying that they in turn are unduly optimistic about the benefits which they seem to think will flow from the treaty program. However, I would rather answer by a definite, concrete illustration of what the treaty program is doing. I hold in my hand an advertisement being circulated in this country by a British tailoring concern, announcing that their representative will be in certain cities at certain hotels on certain dates to solicit orders for British-made suits. At the bottom of the front side of the card a sticker has been attached on which there is printed in bold red type the following:

LXXXIV—96

Owing to the new trade agreement the duty on imported clothing is now only 30 percent, which makes a reduction of approximately $15 per suit.

Now this is a direct tangible result of the trade-treaty program, and we can see how it works out in actual practice. Here is a British concern soliciting orders in America with a view to depriving American tailors of the opportunity to furnish clothing from fabrics made by American workmen out of American wool. Of course, that is exactly what the trade-treaty proponents want, namely, to give foreign producers a greater share of the home market.

ADVERSE EFFECTS SOMETIMES INDIRECT

Even where the reduction in our tariff rates does not directly result in the displacement of American products, it does have the indirect effect of forcing down the price structure, and with it the general level of our wage and living standards. When duties are reduced our producers must reduce their costs so as to compete with the products of cheap foreign labor. They reduce profits, they reduce wages, they get along with less help—anything to enable them to meet the competition. This is why the adverse results of the reductions do not always show up immediately in increased foreign imports. But the effect is just as harmful. Of course, where the American producer, even by going to these lengths, cannot meet the foreign price, he must throw up the sponge, close down his factory, and dismiss his employees.

On February 8, 1939, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SANDAGER] inserted in the RECORD a statement showing that the French trade agreement had cost workers in the American lace industry $3,500,000 in wages annually. Now that is just one industry. Add the loss of wages to workers in other industries by reason of the trade-treaty program and you will have a staggering total. We must keep in mind that approximately half the total number of reductions were made under the British treaty, which only became effective on January 1 of this year. After it has come fully into operation and the whole world begins to take advantage of the reductions made thereunder it will, in my opinion, have a very serious effect upon American workers, not only by depriving them of employment in many instances but by reducing the wage scale of those who are still fortunate enough to retain their jobs.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In connection with our domestic industries being affected, I wish to read a brief paragraph from a letter from Mr. E. H. Cooley, manager of the Massachusetts Fisheries Association, in which he states:

Canadian smoked fillets are quoted this morning on the Boston fish pier at from 11½ to 13 cents per pound, when the lowest cost of production in Boston is 14½ cents a pound, this being the cost of production, not including any profit whatever.

In other words, under that agreement Canadian fish are being sold in this country at less than the cost of production here.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman.

INCONSISTENCY OF ADMINISTRATION'S INTERNAL AND FOREIGN TRADE POLICIES

We have yet to hear any proponent of the trade-treaty program attempt to reconcile the inconsistency between the administration's domestic program and its foreign trade program. Perhaps this is understandable, because it would involve the difficult task of justifying its policy of curtailing American crops while encouraging farm imports from abroad; of trying to reopen employment opportunities in industry while giving foreign workers greater opportunities to furnish the goods consumed in our own market; and of increasing costs of production at home by various policies while giving foreign producers a greater competitive advantage in the American market than they had before by drastic tariff reductions. This inconsistent policy has not been justified or explained because it cannot be.

LABOR MOST ADVERSELY AFFECTED BY INADEQUATE TARIFFS

The burden of inadequate tariffs falls principally upon the shoulders of labor, and no policy could be more at cross-purposes with the effort to raise wages and improve labor standards than the collateral policy of tearing down our tariff structure. Present reductions affect 40 percent of our imports, which means that a serious threat to the welfare of American workers is involved therein.

PROSPERITY CANNOT BE RESTORED BY TARIFF REDUCTIONS

I believe that anyone who will give serious thought to the question will come to the inescapable conclusion that we cannot restore prosperity in America by indiscriminate lowering of the protective tariff; that we cannot maintain existing wage and living standards, let alone increase them, by subjecting our workers to direct competition with the products of the low-wage countries of the rest of the world; that we cannot raise the income of our farmers or the price level of agricultural products by inviting foreign countries to flood our home market with farm products; or that we cannot revive industry and encourage reemployment by permitting foreign producers to supply the goods consumed in the American market at prices which our own manufacturers cannot meet.

THREAT OF TARIFF REDUCTIONS CONTRIBUTES TO UNCERTAINTY

One of the greatest drawbacks to recovery is the uncertainty as to the future. Yet under the trade-treaty program there constantly hangs over every American industry dependent upon tariff protection—both agricultural and manufacturing—like a sword of Damocles, the possibility that the tariff protection which has enabled it to compete in the home market with foreign producers and pay the American scale of wages to its employees will be withdrawn. It is no wonder when we add to the ruinous tariff policy the other administration policies that contribute to fear and uncertainty as to the future and reduce the possibility of profitable enterprise, that American business and industry is in a state of the jitters. Nor is it any wonder that the farmers of the country, with their foreign market destroyed by the program of scarcity and artificial price stimulation, with their home market gradually being surrendered to the foreign producer, with millions of American workers, who constitute the farmer's greatest and richest market, out of jobs, and with the balance threatened with a lower standard of living by reason of industrial tariff reductions. I say it is no wonder that the farmers of the country are in a state of despair.

RESTORATION OF REASONABLE TARIFF PROTECTION WOULD BE BIG STEP TOWARD RECOVERY

In my opinion, the restoration of a reasonable level of protection for the products that we are capable of producing in America would be as big a step in bringing about recovery as any that could be taken. By "reasonable protection," I mean, of course, such tariffs as would equalize competitive conditions in the home market and give our own producers at least an equal opportunity to supply domestic needs.

THE RELATION OF TARIFF PROTECTION TO NATIONAL DEFENSE

Before concluding, I want to call attention to a phase of the tariff question to which little attention has been paid, but which is very apropos at this time, when there is before Congress legislation providing for the national defense. I wonder if it occurred to any of the Members—either yesterday or the day before, when this legislation was before the House—the important part which the protective tariff plays in contributing to the national defense. It would seem to me that at a time when all the world is arming to the teeth and in every way preparing for the emergency which seems inevitable but which we all hope may never occur, it would seem to me that at this time we should go rather slow in destroying our own industries and making ourselves dependent on foreign nations for our needs.

One of the industries essential to national defense is the iron and steel industry, yet the administration has in numerous instances made drastic reductions in the tariffs on iron and steel products which are vital to national defense. I do not mean that the particular products are necessary, but it is essential to maintain certain industries manufacturing purely commercial products whose plants, in the event of war, can be converted into the production of war matériel. I believe that the Secretary of War will bear out this statement.

Under the recent British treaty the duty on woollens was reduced. If war comes, we will need woollen goods to provide uniforms for our soldiers, and we do not want to be dependent upon Great Britain for such goods, because it may be difficult to get them across the water through a possible submarine blockade. I could give any number of similar illustrations. Not only do we need the factories, but we need the skilled hands to turn out the products.

WAR DEPARTMENT REALIZES THE NECESSITY FOR PROTECTION

In this connection, I would like to cite a letter written by Secretary of War Good to the Ways and Means Committee at the time it was considering the tariff bill of 1930.

Secretary Good asked that the committee give protection to the domestic production of certain types of steel cylinders used in peaceful pursuits, because the factory could be readily converted to the manufacture of guns in the event of war. I quote a brief passage:

The process of construction of these cylinders, like the process of construction of guns, requires skilled and specialized labor. Such skilled and specialized labor could be readily diverted from cylinder making to gun making; but if such labor were not on hand and skilled in this work, it would take a number of months to train it to such work.

Without reading the balance of the letter, I shall insert it in its entirety at this point:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 7, 1929.

HON. WILLIS C. HAWLEY,
Chairman, Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HAWLEY: In recent years the Midvale Co., of Philadelphia, have developed steel vessels and cylinders, together with their methods of manufacture, which are used in the fertilizer, chemical, power, oil, and other industries. In some cases these cylinders are up to 90 inches in diameter and over 50 feet in length, weighing as much as 250,000 pounds. The largest size requires a steel ingot weighing more than 200 tons to start its manufacture. The methods of manufacture and the machinery utilized in manufacture of these cylinders would be an extremely valuable asset to the United States in event of war, as furnishing a facility which could be readily converted to the manufacture of large guns.

In addition, these particular cylinders are utilized in improved methods of cracking crude and low-grade oils and in the manufacture of synthetic ammonia, both of which industries would be very vital to this country in a national emergency. In the manufacture of these cylinders the Midvale Co. is met with considerable competition from abroad, particularly from the Krupp Co., of Germany, who are using their gun-making machinery for the making of these cylinders.

Quite generally the gun-making machinery in our large steel companies, which was installed before the World War and which was greatly expanded in its extent during the World War, has now been laid aside or scrapped, and the making and installation of similar machinery in event of another emergency would take so much time as to very greatly delay the production of vital guns.

The War Department therefore looks upon the production of these heavy forged steel cylinders and the machinery for fabricating them as a very great asset to national defense not only from the standpoint of the making of guns but also from that of the making of gasoline and ammonia.

The process of construction of these cylinders, like the process of construction of guns, requires skilled and specialized labor. Such skilled and specialized labor could be readily diverted from cylinder making to gun making, but if such labor were not on hand and skilled in this work, it would take a number of months to train it to such work.

I therefore urge upon your committee the high desirability from a point of view of national defense of giving to this particular industry the protection that is necessary in order that the manufacture of these cylinders and vessels be continued in this country.

Very sincerely,

JAMES W. GOOD, Secretary of War.

The foregoing letter relates to one particular industry, but there are many others which are equally essential to national defense. We should not jeopardize our national defense by destroying these industries through drastic tariff reductions.

TREATY PROGRAM HAS BEEN TRIED AND FOUND WANTING

To return more particularly to the trade-treaty program, I would like, before I conclude my remarks, Mr. Chairman, to read a brief quotation from a speech recently made by President Munro, of the American Tariff League, to which I subscribe 100 percent. Said he:

We have had 4½ years of the trade-agreement program. Much of the policy has obviously been inconsistent with practices at home, and as we have reviewed the record, it has failed equally of developing our export market or of contributing materially to world peace. In addition, it has laid the foundation for a period of foreign competition more devastating than any we have ever experienced in the United States. I believe that the trade-agreement program has had time enough for a fair trial, and that in its present form it has been found wanting.

Mr. Chairman, the more study I give to the administration's trade-treaty program, the more sure I become that it is not in the interest of the American people. It divests Congress of its right to legislate; it permits emissaries of foreign governments to have a hand in determining this country's tariff policy with which is ultimately bound up the welfare of the entire Nation; it encourages importations of foreign products of farm and factory which we already produce for ourselves and thereby takes away the means of livelihood of our own people and aggravates our unemployment problem; it trades off our rich domestic market for lean foreign markets; it sacrifices domestic industries and workers engaged in production for the home market, in which is consumed nine-tenths of what we produce, in what has been a futile effort to help other industries and workers engaged in export trade; and it undermines and destroys the protective tariff system under which our Nation has become the greatest and richest in the world.

It is this sort of thing, Mr. Chairman, that will lead to a turn-over in the election next year. This information is going to reach the voting public between now and the elections of 1940. While we divest ourselves of our right to write tariff bills and place that right in the hands of our competitors in foreign countries, the voters here at home will, with full information before them, see to it that this foolish trade-treaty program is certainly wiped off the statute books as a result of the election that will come in the fall of 1940.

It has failed to accomplish the purposes for which it was intended, but instead has aggravated our economic problems. The Reciprocal Tariff Act should be speedily repealed and the trade treaties entered into thereunder promptly abrogated insofar as they involve reductions in duty on competitive foreign products.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Would the gentleman venture the prognostication that the cotton States will be looking for a tariff on cotton within the next few years?

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I think they will probably need it if they are to continue to survive down there, in view of the great expansion and development of cotton production in many countries.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. Did the gentleman notice a statement of Secretary Ickes asking for an appropriation for the relief of the Puerto Ricans who have been made destitute by the Cuban trade agreement?

Mr. TREADWAY. That is another illustration of the point I have been trying to make for the last three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CULKIN. Has the gentleman noted that the distinguished Secretary of State who claims that these trade agreements make for peace, is now the chief proponent in the administration, next to the President, of strong armament here in America?

Mr. TREADWAY. There is, of course, an inconsistency in considering the trade-treaty program as a method of securing peace and at the same time, as the gentleman from New York has said, increasing our armament by such a tremendous sum as indicated in the appropriation of yesterday.

Mr. CULKIN. That is a confession on the part of the Secretary of State that this policy has failed.

Mr. TREADWAY. There is no question about it.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Is it not a fact that in October 1932 our President, then a candidate, made this assertion and upon this assertion gained the votes of millions of American farmers?

I do not intend to lower the tariff on agricultural products, because by so doing it would be entirely inconsistent with my ideas upon the farm question.

Mr. TREADWAY. He not only did that, but he promised the people economy in appropriations and a reduction in the expenses of the Government, and his accomplishments along that line have certainly been a great failure.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. And he was going to lead the way in that respect.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has the gentleman read what the press has had to say with reference to the Argentine, I believe it is, in the last few days, which interested me very much in this connection? I am informed that between 1933 and 1937 the percentage of increase in our exports to Cuba, a reciprocity-agreement country, increased 291 percent, while in the case of Chile, Peru, Uruguay, and Venezuela, with which we did not have trade agreements, the increases in trade were 349 percent, 286 percent, 264 percent, and 255 percent, respectively. As I understand, we do have a trade treaty with Brazil. Is that correct?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman think there is any danger in the Brazilian situation working around to what the newspapers now indicate with reference to Argentina and further embarrassing our situation there?

Mr. TREADWAY. I believe some of the high officials of Brazil are here now kowtowing to this Government in an endeavor to secure loans with which to buy our own goods. Is not that correct?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that is correct.

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, that is a good example of the situation.

I hope this study of the trade treaties will be generally carried on throughout this session of the Congress, because, to my mind, there is nothing of more value to the American people. [Applause.]

I thank the members of the Committee for their attention.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JARMAN].

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose in the time allotted to me today to give the members of this Committee, insofar as I can, the whole story about a phase of this legislation which was rather generally discussed on the floor this morning, but in which discussion I was not permitted to greatly participate.

The distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT], the very able chairman of this subcommittee, who, I am sure, has done an excellent job in most respects, did not tell you the whole story in this connection, naturally, because of the fact that his is a big job. He is a big cog in the wheels of a very important committee. Time was not available for him to go into the details of every little phase of his bill. Consequently, as I understood him, he only gave you the last phases of this matter. I refer to the reduction of—I do not know how much it is now, but it was $135,000 once, and I have heard it referred to as $125,000 and as $120,000. I have forgotten what the amount was that was used in the debate today, with respect to the appropriation for publishing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

As I say, I am sure the Appropriations Committee has done a good job as it sees it. I am sure it has honestly performed its duty as it saw its duty, despite the fact that I think it very greatly erred under the conditions with respect to this particular matter.

I became a member of the House Committee on Printing, and as such of the Joint Committee on Printing, less than a year ago. The distinguished gentleman from Michigan said this morning that this matter had been in the lap of his committee for 2 years. Consequently I may also be guilty of not giving the House the whole picture, because I do not know what occurred prior to last March, but I shall tell you the whole story since then.

My first information of a proposed change in the format of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD came from a letter from the Public Printer last November, I believe, in which he stated that he wrote at the instance of the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, and he submitted with that letter what I call a brief, and not being a lawyer, just as I am not a printer, it may not be a brief, but I took it to be one, stating his reasons for believing that this change would be beneficial.

Among them was the fact that $135,000 would be saved. Needless to say, the prospect of such an economy greatly appealed to me. He requested that I express my reaction to that change to the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing by December 15. Along with that letter, in addition to the brief, came this set of descriptions, I suppose you would call it, of the change—a so-called comparison between the new and old publication. Mind you, I said "this set." That is set No. 1. That is the set that came to the attention of the Joint Committee on Printing in November or December, and we will lay that aside. It came with the statement that that was the best change that could be made in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That was a great change, and would save $135,000. In compliance with that letter I wrote the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing on December 13, and I read a paragraph from that letter:

I have read these recommendations very carefully and studied the exhibits which accompany them. As a result, I am strongly of the opinion that they should be approved unless you are aware of some objection to doing so with which I am unfamiliar.

I did not hear any more from that. I did not know what action the committee took, but I did hear in passing along in the corridor—from whom I do not know, and I cannot recall it exactly—a remark that the older Members or the leaders or something to that effect—I am not sure of the quotation—of the House and the Senate vetoed that No. 1 proposal.

The next thing I heard was when the distinguished chairman of the legislative committee came to me in the cloak room a week ago day before yesterday—Tuesday, February 7—and asked me if I could get my committee together and join him in his committee room up in the corner within an hour and a half, or something to that effect. I told him I would gladly try, and he told me what he wanted—to discuss this No. 1 proposal. I stated that I had already voted for that provisionally and supposed I was for it unless there was something about it with which I was unfamiliar. He said, "Yes; I have your correspondence." At the appointed time my committee went to his committee room. It is my privilege to preside over my small committee, and it is small, but it is important. It is by no means the size nor of the importance of the Committee on Appropriations, and yet it is a committee which I believe is entitled to its integrity.

We met up there and we were again shown No. 1, the format, and I read the subcommittee the paragraph which I have just read to you. I called their attention to the fact that my first impression was for it, but suggested they notice that I made a reservation. I did not know what the elder statesmen thought of this, and just because I happen to be chairman of a committee I did not think it behooved me to take the bit in my mouth and give him the letter that he requested. He wanted me to give him a letter to the effect that the House Committee on Printing approved it, and I said I left that reservation in the letter to Chairman Lambeth, because I did not believe it behooved me to take the bit in my mouth and put over a proposition whether or no. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, my colleague on the committee [Mr. RICH], was present.

He stated that he wrote the chairman of the joint committee about as I did, except his reservation was that if the Public Printer could do what he said he could do—that is, save $135,000—he was for it. The other member of the committee was present, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, a very able member of this House and of this committee, a man who is going to accomplish much on any committee on which he serves or in any capacity in which he functions, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY]. He had not seen No. 1, and we thought at the time it was advisable for the committee to know what it was doing. So I suggested that Mr. CONNERY take this exhibit No. 1 home and study it, which he did. Mind you, I had told the committee, and so had the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], that we had voted for this with certain reservations.

Mr. CONNERY took exhibit No. 1 home that night, thinking that was what he was called upon to act on. The more I thought about the matter, and Mr. CONNERY shared my view, the more I wanted to know. I knew that I had voted on this matter on December 13. I presumed that the membership of the joint committee had all voted on it. I wanted to know what that vote was. I wanted the joint committee to perform its proper function and not be pushed around. Consequently, I engaged in a conversation, which I was requested to keep in confidence, which convinced me that there was good reason not only that I not give the gentleman the letter he desired, but that the change not be made.

Of course, I wanted to learn from my predecessor, chairman of this committee, who, different from me, was also chairman of the joint committee, what happened as a result of that vote. So I wired my distinguished predecessor, that lovable gentleman, Walter Lambeth, down in Carolina, where I hope he is thoroughly enjoying the rest which he so richly deserves, and I quoted this paragraph I have quoted to you and asked him what was the result of that vote. In reply I received a wire from his secretary to the effect that Walter would be out of town until next week, but that I would find what I wished in a telegram from him to the Public Printer dated December 29 and in a letter of December 23; if that did not give me what I wished, she would contact him and wire me further.

I contacted the Public Printer and requested copies of these communications. Instead of copies he sent me the originals. When I read that letter and that telegram, my mind was made up, that I not only should not give this committee a letter stating that the Committee on Printing of the House approved this change without further action of the joint committee, but that I should protest the change, because of the action of my predecessor, taken in good faith, little more than a month ago, since which the joint committee had had no opportunity to act.

So last Saturday I called the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT], chairman of the subcommittee, and read him the telegram. He just waived it aside. He said, "I have got some new dope. Are you going to be in your office all day?" I said, "Yes." He said, "Can you come up here directly when the Public Printer and some others come?" I said, "Yes." He said, "I will call you." And he did.

I went again to his office. A partial membership of the committee was there, the Public Printer was there, as was Mr. Ansel Wold, the clerk of the Joint Committee on Printing. I was immediately shown some other exhibits, entirely different from those that were distributed to us in November or December. They were shown to me by the distinguished gentleman with the statement that they were far superior to what I assumed was alleged to be the best thing possible back in November. Time does not permit me to explain the difference, but there is quite a difference. I will say, too, for the gentleman who I understand is the father of this, that I believe it to be an improvement over No. 1. But I asked the chairman of the committee, "Where did that come from and when?" He said, "I went down to Mr. Wold's office yesterday and he prepared this and the Public Printer prepared these samples—or whatever you call them—last night."

He took me to task for calling it a "format" this morning. I am not a printer. I do not know what it is. But the Public Printer prepared that, and they had it there that morning. I said, "Mr. RABAUT, do you mean to tell me that Mr. Wold is the only one connected with the Joint Committee on Printing who has seen this until now, and yet you expect me to approve it?" I have forgotten his reply, but it was to the effect that "it was so good." Of course, I immediately gave him to understand that I could not approve it. I said to the committee that I wanted to read them the law on the subject and also a telegram which I had read to the chairman over the telephone.

I need not read to you distinguished and learned members of this Committee the law, because you know the law, but I would like to put it in the RECORD, so, if you will permit me, I shall read the law which covers this subject:

The Joint Committee on Printing shall have control of the arrangement and style, type, spacing, etc., of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and while providing that it shall be substantially a verbatim report of the proceedings, shall take all needed action for the reduction of unnecessary bulk, and shall provide for the publication of an index of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD semimonthly during the session of Congress and at the close thereof.

That is the law on the subject. Did you hear anything there about the Committee on Appropriations?

Then I read this telegram, and in doing so I can but express the opinion that I misunderstood the distinguished chairman of this committee this morning, although I asked him and he repeated it, when I thought he said that the only objection to this change was in the Senate. I must have misunderstood him, although, as stated, I asked him and he repeated it, because I read this telegram to him and his associates on the committee that morning, having previously read it to him over the telephone.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. Yes; gladly.

Mr. RABAUT. Did the gentleman look upon the suggestion with favor or disfavor when he first came to my office, in his opinion—not in my opinion, but in his own opinion. Did the gentleman look upon it with favor or disfavor?

Mr. JARMAN. Decidedly with favor, but with the reservation expressed in that letter; but that was a different format.

Mr. RABAUT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JARMAN. Yes. You did not accord me that courtesy this morning, but I am glad to yield further.

Mr. RABAUT. Oh, I beg your pardon. I did yield.

Mr. JARMAN. I am mistaken again.

Mr. RABAUT. If you looked at it with favor, as you just said you did, I never had it in mind that you were unfavorable to it, and with that encouragement I went forward with the new RECORD.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. JARMAN. I yield further to the gentleman, if he desires.

Mr. RABAUT. No. I just wanted to say to the gentleman that his favorable attitude toward it was what encouraged me to go further and see if we could have an improved format. We do not say that this is the format that should be taken.

Mr. JARMAN. Which one are you talking about?

Mr. RABAUT. I am talking about the one we were talking about this morning. I am not trying to confuse the issue. I want to clarify it.

Mr. JARMAN. That is No. 3. I have not gotten to that yet. I was still talking about No. 2.

Mr. RABAUT. Well, that is out of the picture so far as the one I am talking about is concerned. There will be a greater saving in using format No. 2 rather than No. 3.

The suggestion is only that the committee wanted to back up the right we thought we had to make this saving, with the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing, and we think the gentleman's committee will act favorably. If the committee does not act favorably, then the Government Printing Office can come back and ask for additional appropriation from the deficiency committee.

Mr. JARMAN. I ask the gentleman if he does not remember me telling him in his room or in the committee room substantially this—of course, I may leave out the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i" or something—but does not the gentleman remember my saying to him: "Mr. Chairman," or "Mr. RABAUT," or "Louis," or whatever I said:

If you will proceed in the normal, the legal way, as indicated by the law I quoted, and not cut this appropriation now but permit the Joint Committee on Printing to perform its proper function without duress, as far as I am concerned as an individual and as probably the vice chairman of the committee, if I do not change my mind and still feel that it is a good thing, I will pledge you my best efforts toward action by that committee, which, of course, would mean the same thing, because if you do not cut the appropriation and the committee puts this into effect by the use of either one of these three styles, naturally the difference would be covered back into the Treasury.

Does the gentleman remember my telling him that?

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. I would like to ask the gentleman one question. Was it on the gentleman's first or second appearance before the committee that he made that statement?

Mr. JARMAN. I think it was my second.

Mr. RABAUT. The first time the gentleman came before the committee I was encouraged to proceed. I noticed a great change when he came the second time, but I could not account for it.

Mr. JARMAN. The gentleman, I am sure, remembers calling me over yonder in the corner the morning following my first appearance before his committee, does he not, and asking me what I was going to do about that letter; and I told him that after having had this confidential conversation I had wired Walter Lambeth, and that I wanted to wait until I received a reply? Does the gentleman remember that?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes; I do.

Mr. JARMAN. That was early in the morning.

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. JARMAN. Then in the afternoon he told me that they had already talked about this format. That they were ready to come before this House and ask for a cut in the appropriation and were going to stand by that decision and could take no other attitude despite my protest and the wire from the former chairman of the committee.

Mr. RABAUT. But the gentleman did not take that attitude until after the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] spoke, until after he refused to sign the letter.

Mr. JARMAN. After?

Mr. RABAUT. That was the first time the gentleman came before us objecting to it.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield and ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to answer the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONNERY. For the information of my very able colleague from Alabama and for the information of the gentleman from Michigan, if he will remember correctly, my reason for not being willing to sign any letter of approval was because the time I was asked to do so was the first information I had of this proposition. Being a new member of the joint committee I did not feel that it was proper for me to sign something about which I had no knowledge whatsoever.

Mr. JARMAN. I agree with the gentleman on that and thank him.

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman will yield further, I am sure my able chairman and colleague from Alabama will readily agree with me that the gentleman from Michigan has as fine a labor record as any Member of this House during his entire career in the House of Representatives; but, Mr. Chairman, there is a certain angle here that must not be overlooked, and I would like to quote an excerpt from a letter which I, as a member of the Joint Committee on Printing, received from the Public Printer with reference to this change. At one point the Public Printer states:

There are normally in the Office—

Meaning the Government Printing Office—

8,000 jobs upon which the employees can be used at all times. The lessening of the time required to produce the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will enable this Office to use the time of those people to produce other congressional work and departmental work, and will assist us in placing ourselves on a more nearly current basis.

The Public Printer states, to repeat: "The lessening of the time required to produce." I emphasized, you will note, the word "time."

I say that that lessening of time is a lessening of labor, and if $100,000 or $125,000 is to be saved on the production of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70 to 80 percent of the saving is going to be made at the expense of labor. Referring to the statement made by the Public Printer that the Printing Office is now operating 3 months behind schedule, it seems to me that, instead of a reduction of the appropriation, there should be an increase in the appropriation to provide for additional personnel. There should be no cutting of this appropriation by any $125,000.

Mr. JARMAN. I thank my able colleague for his contribution.

The chairman of the committee has intimated that I changed my mind because of the opinion of my able colleague from Massachusetts. I say to him that if I were going to be a follower, I know of no one I would prefer to follow than him; but, as a matter of fact—and I cannot refrain from calling his attention to it—he must know that I had other reasons than that, because he heard this telegram read twice, and I answer his inquiry about whether I changed my mind at the instance of the able gentleman from Massachusetts by reading this telegram, which was my main reason for changing my mind if I did. I did not really change it, because I had that reservation all along. This telegram is dated December 29, 3 days before Mr. Lambeth served his time out as a Member of this House, as able chairman of the Committee on Printing of this House, and as the equally able chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses.

Mr. A. E. GIEGENGACK.

Re tel.:

Heartily approve changed masthead, exhibit D.

That is something else that is not concerned here.

Wold—

He is the clerk of the Joint Committee on Printing—writes 27th that Speaker BANKHEAD, Representatives RAYBURN, WOODRUM, MARTIN of Massachusetts, Vice President, and Senator McNARY strongly oppose three-column format. Suggest you lay the entire matter before Senator HAYDEN—

Who will become chairman of the joint committee—

Personally, I will concur in his judgment. Regret difficulties account not being able to come to Washington and absence from office until this afternoon.

WALTER LAMBETH, M. C.

Mr. Chairman, that is what made me take advantage of the reservation I made rather than anything else.

I must conclude with one or two more things.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I gladly yield to my colleague and friend, the distinguished gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I notice in the report on this bill the following statement:

Under the law the Joint Committee on Printing is vested with authority to fix the format of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and members of the joint committee are now considering the advisability of making the proposed change.

May I ask if the joint committee has reached any decision in favor of the changed format?

Mr. JARMAN. None whatever. It reached a decision on December 29 against the change, and it has had no meeting since.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I observe a table of figures set out on page 20 of the report. It seems that the amount budgeted for the Government Printing Office would be reduced $135,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. May I ask this question: The full amount for the regular format was allowed by the Budget?

Mr. JARMAN. That is what I understand.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And this reduction has really been below the Budget figure?

Mr. JARMAN. That is as I understand it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Appropriations Committee in appropriating money based on the new format is really doing so ahead of any action on the part of the legislative committee?

Mr. JARMAN. Absolutely. It is doing so contrary to the action of the legislative committee taken on December 29, which has been explained.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. For the further information of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] may I clarify his statement by saying not only before any action was taken but before the Joint Committee on Printing has even started to consider the proposition or has even had the matter laid before them for consideration. There has been no meeting of the Committee on Printing to take up this matter.

Mr. RABAUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. It is all very well to talk about pushing the committee around and to speak of certain responsibilities. We did not push the committee around, because your committee has until the last deficiency bill to make a decision in this matter. Your committee has had this matter before it, not just since you have been chairman of the committee on the House side or vice chairman of the entire committee, but just as long as it has been placed before the Committee on Appropriations. The Appropriations Committee for 2 successive years has had the Public Printer walk into its meeting and say: "Gentlemen, if you wish to save $135,000 on the printing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it can be done in this form."

The Committee on Appropriations did not take cognizance of the request last year, but it thought that this year it should recognize that it could save some money.

If the Joint Committee on Printing does not feel the Public Printer is correct, after due study has been given the subject, it can very well refuse to order the change and submit all the reasons it finds for making such decision. If the committee refuses, then it is up to the Public Printer to return to the Committee on Appropriations and ask for a new appropriation to cover the cut that has been made by the Committee on Appropriations. If the Committee on Printing finds he is correct and that committee can concur, the two committees will then be in accord, and the RECORD will be brought out in some other form than now, thereby effecting the saving. That is the only position my committee takes. It does not seek to legislate. It just seeks to reduce the appropriation for the printing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is entirely within the jurisdiction of that committee.

Mr. JARMAN. In doing so you are saying we must do a certain thing.

Mr. RABAUT. No; we say the thing should be studied and the Committee on Printing has indicated its intention to study the problem.

Mr. JARMAN. The gentleman agrees with me in this, though, that had this cut not occurred, and the joint committee as he says has until June 1 to make a decision, as far as the saving is concerned it would not make a particle of difference?

Mr. RABAUT. There would be a difference in the position of the Committee on Appropriations in ignoring a saving which it has twice been invited to effect and the committee is cognizant of that.

Mr. JARMAN. The committee is interested in its position?

Mr. RABAUT. The committee is aware of the position in which it finds itself.

Mr. JARMAN. That goes along with something I said in the committee meeting the other day.

I must hurry along because I know the gentleman has other Members to whom he must yield time. The gentleman's theory apparently is that the first action should be taken by the Committee on Appropriations, in direct contrast with the law. My theory is that the action should be first taken by the Committee on Printing. In line with this, I understand that considerable investigation has occurred.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. JARMAN. In line with that thought considerable investigation has occurred. The House physician was requested to get expert testimony from the Army and Navy, and reported to the chairman of the committee on the floor here yesterday afternoon. I take it that it is the duty of the Joint Committee on Printing to make such an investigation and to have whatever hearing is necessary. It is not the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to do that. I may be entirely wrong about this matter; I do not know, but I believe I can understand the English language. I believe I can understand the law I have read to you. I believe it means just what it states. I believe I can understand that telegram.

In addition, let me say that someone has suggested to me that before final action occurs on this matter I discuss the question with a very venerable and unanimously beloved Member of this House on that side, who, as I understand, is probably still in the newspaper business, or has been, the very able and distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. I have had no opportunity to do that. A suggestion was made by someone else that the matter be discussed with Senator BORAH, Senator NORRIS, and gentlemen of that type. I wish to say to the committee that I have not, and I hope I never shall, reach the stage of my life when I regard everything old and venerable as obsolete and to be disregarded and kicked out. I never have and I hope I never shall reach the stage when I shall wave aside the opinions of gentlemen like the gentleman from Massachusetts, the gentleman referred to in this telegram, and the able gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol.

I wish to call attention to exhibit No. 2, the second proposal, which appeared Saturday morning, and to the fact that apparently a third proposal appeared on the floor this morning.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. May I say to the gentleman I am not a member of this subcommittee, but I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not believe there is a member of the full Committee on Appropriations who does not recognize the right of the Joint Committee on Printing to determine the form of the RECORD.

Mr. JARMAN. I am glad to have that information.

I cannot yield further to the gentleman unless I am given more time.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ENGEL. While I do not wish to disclose anything particularly that happened in committee, I may say that I asked in committee whether, if the Joint Committee on Printing did not approve this new format, we could bring in a deficiency appropriation for the Government Printing Office, and they said "yes." It had not occurred to me that if the RECORD was changed the saving might be made by having the money go back into the Treasury. I just do not want the gentleman to feel that the Committee on Appropriations is trying to take away any rights that belong to his committee or any other committee.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Will not the gentleman from Michigan agree that this subcommittee has been presumptuous in the method it has used in presenting this matter to the House? Would it not have been much better if the subcommittee had waited for the Joint Committee on Printing to submit this proposition after giving it thorough examination?

Mr. ENGEL. I was not here when the discussion occurred between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JARMAN]. I do believe the saving should be effected, but it should be effected only if and when the Committee on Printing has acted on the proposal. If we wish to let it go as it is, there is no question but that the Public Printer will have to continue the printing of the RECORD as it is now being printed until authorized to change it by the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. JARMAN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. ENGEL. There is no question about that at all. If the Joint Committee on Printing does not act, or refuses to act, or refuses to make the change—

Mr. JARMAN. Or decides it is not advisable to act, may I add?

Mr. ENGEL. Absolutely; that is up to you.

Mr. JARMAN. Give us the discretion. It is ours.

Mr. ENGEL. Surely. Then the Committee on Appropriations will have to, and undoubtedly will, come back with a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. JARMAN. Is there any difference as far as the money is concerned how the matter is handled, whether one way or the other?

Mr. ENGEL. If the change is made, the saving will be effected and the money will go back to the Treasury.

Mr. JARMAN. I know; but if the Committee on Appropriations had not seen fit to make this reduction and the Joint Committee on Printing should decide that one of these three formats is preferable and put it into effect before July 1, would not the Government be financially in the same shape as it is in now?

Mr. ENGEL. The excess appropriation would revert to the Treasury.

Mr. JARMAN. Exactly. That is what I pleaded with this subcommittee to do. I appreciate the contribution of the gentleman, and I am pleased to hear his statement about the Committee on Appropriations not wanting to usurp the authority of my committee, because, frankly, I think the testimony indicates a contrary attitude. I know the gentleman did not entertain that attitude.

Mr. ENGEL. I am not speaking for the full committee.

Mr. JARMAN. I am speaking for the Committee on Printing, which is a small one, it is true, but the question is important.

In conclusion, I wish to discuss just two more points. As I said, there is no one who realizes more strongly than I do the importance of the great Committee on Appropriations of this House. I know it is one of the most important committees of the House. I do not feel that it is the only committee, however; there are 46 other standing committees in the House. I believe the question is fundamental as to whether the House is going to be permitted to function in the normal, legal, regular way through these 47 committees, not just the largest ones, or whether the power of the small committees is going to be usurped by the larger ones, in which case we may just as well disband the smaller committees. I think this question is fundamental.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. JARMAN. As I started to say when I was last interrupted, whenever the time arrives that I feel the advice of such venerable gentlemen as Mr. LUCE, Senator BORA, and the other people I have mentioned should be blandly waved aside just simply for one committee to accomplish something and make a name—whenever that time arrives, Mr. Chairman, I expect to turn in my commission to the people of the great Sixth District of Alabama, because I do not think I should continue to represent them here; and as for me, let us assume that one of these three formats is fine, indeed; let us assume that the change would be the best action ever taken by this House; let us assume that these venerable gentlemen can read it much better; let us assume it would be better on their eyes, I say to you that if 10 Members of that stripe feel that what has been to them for all these years their second Bible is being changed in such a way that it will deteriorate for them and be more difficult for them to read, I say to you gentlemen that even if they are entirely mistaken, even if it would be much preferable for them, I do not consider the saving—and no one is more anxious to save $125,000 than I am—but I would not consider the saving as worth while at the expense of dissatisfaction and unhappiness on the part of 10 such gentlemen in this House and on the other side, and I say to you that the Joint Committee on Printing should have an opportunity to go into that matter and see whether that is correct or not.

You have been very generous and I thank you very much and I thank both of the gentlemen for their generosity in yielding me time. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, 9 days have elapsed since the President of the United States requested an additional $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration, and only 43 days remain before the ax will fall on approximately 2,000,000 people who are now on W. P. A.

Yesterday I obtained special permission to address the House and I asked the question, "What is the Committee on Appropriations doing on this matter? Why is it that the Committee on Appropriations is not meeting on this matter, a matter which is so vital, not only to the unemployed of this country who are on W. P. A., but a matter which is so vital to the entire Nation itself?"

I do not believe there is any alibi or any excuse that can be properly advanced for any delay in this matter. There can be no real excuse for the committee not acting on it at once. This matter is of an emergency nature. It was presented to this House on February 7 by the President in an emergency message under the authority given him by Congress when we passed the W. P. A. deficiency bill.

There can be no question in anyone's mind as to the emergency character of the entire W. P. A. situation and the need for action without delay, for action at once. I think it is only proper that at this time I read the language contained in the President's message, to emphasize that he requested action at once without any delay.

The President said:

Therefore on a program of gradual reduction, from 1,500,000 persons to 2,000,000 would be thrown out of Works Progress Administration employment; or, with the addition of those dependent on them, from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 Americans would no longer receive Federal Government aid.

Now, get this:

I ask that the Congress commence immediate consideration of these simple and alarming facts.

The English contained in this language is mighty clear. The President did not say that the committee should meet in March or the end of March, the President asked for immediate consideration and immediate means now and not tomorrow or a month from now.

The President also added:

The operations of the Works Progress Administration are of such magnitude that if a reduction such as I have above described has to be carried out, orderly and efficient planning requires that this be known definitely by the first week in March. It is equally important that the executive branch of the Government be informed at the earliest possible moment what additional funds, if any, will be available on and after April 1.

It is likewise important that the country and the unemployed be informed at the earliest possible moment.

The President asks specifically for consideration before the 1st of March and he states that the executive branch of the Government should know where it stands before the 1st of March, and then the President states as follows, and I call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to this particular section of the President's message:

That the need for orderly planning of the Works Progress Administration program requires that the Administrator should know by the early part of March what funds will be at his disposal after April 1 and that, due to the time required for congressional action, this can be brought about only by my reporting to the Congress on the situation at this time.

I therefore recommend to the Congress immediate consideration of legislation providing an additional sum of $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration to be available in the balance of the current fiscal year.

I realize that perhaps I may be a lone voice crying in the wilderness, as I am crying out here day in and day out in behalf of immediate consideration of this additional appropriation.

It is my intention to daily call to the attention of the country and to the Congress the fact that the Committee on Appropriations is not giving immediate consideration to this emergency and that it is not giving immediate consideration to the President's message in which he asked for immediate consideration. I am not alone in making this demand. I believe that many of the Members of the House join with me in this demand, and I know that I am also speaking for millions and millions of our people throughout the country in making this demand. The W. P. A. issue before the Congress is by no means dead. Nor can you kill it by delay or by the raising of extraneous issues. The American people will not permit you to ignore this problem. This serious emergency will affect 8,000,000 Americans who are dependent upon W. P. A. It will affect every business and industry in the country. If you are opposed to W. P. A., vote against it; but let the Congress have an opportunity to adequately debate the issue and let the country have an opportunity to send its representatives before the committee and let these representatives from all fields of American life be heard, so that the vast damage to the welfare of the Nation, caused by the cut in W. P. A. appropriations, can be understood by Congress. Mr. Chairman, I demand action; a majority of the American people demand action. Any stalling at this time is not fair, and it is hitting below the belt the millions of people directly or indirectly to be injured by the cut Congress made in the appropriations. I appeal to the Members of the House who believe in adequate appropriations for the W. P. A. to join with me every single day in this one-man war which I have started to force the Committee on Appropriations to give the message by the President of the United States the immediate attention it requests, to give the welfare of the unemployed and the welfare of this Nation immediate consideration.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman want to tell us that he is the only representative of the President in advocating the President's policies?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I have given no such impression. I do not speak for the President. The President has spoken for himself and the country on this question, and he has done a swell job. By the way, does the gentleman speak for the Republican Party?

Mr. MICHENER. No.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Very well; and I am speaking my own convictions on the matter as well as those of millions of others who feel the same as I do about this issue.

Mr. MICHENER. But the gentleman has stated that he is making a one-man fight.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I said that I have started a one-man war, and I am asking the other Members of the House who want the additional $150,000,000 appropriated for W. P. A. to join with me in daily demanding that the Committee on Appropriations act at once. I think that is quite clear. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, the great State of Illinois honored itself and paid proper tribute to the womanhood of the world when it placed in Statuary Hall, the Westminster Abbey of the United States, a statue of Frances E. Willard, "Our White Ladye," as she is called. As one who has a high regard for the womanhood of America and a deep respect for the position that woman holds in the present scheme of things, I rise to pay tribute in this centennial year of Frances E. Willard's birth to that great woman from the State of Illinois. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, Frances E. Willard has long held the honor of being the sole representative of the women of America in the Hall of Fame at the National Capitol. That indeed is a singular honor but one for which Miss Willard had every qualification.

In 1864 the Congress of the United States authorized the establishment of the now famous gallery known as Statuary Hall in the old Chamber of the House of Representatives, and provided that the several States were at liberty to place there fitting statues of two of their respective immortals. A whole galaxy of these statues was soon presented by the States. They stand lifelike and real, though of heroic size. It was not until 1899, however, after the short but undeniably inspiring life of Frances E. Willard had ended, that the State of Illinois made a move to fill its second place in the Hall with a white marble statue of "Our White Ladye." The resolution of the State legislature, in authorizing this, spared no words in praise of Miss Willard; indeed it lauded her as being "illustrious for historic renown and distinguished for civic service in Europe and America, in a new, unexplored field of Christian endeavor, the effect of whose efforts and achievements and the influence of whose spotless life and sublime example have been so marked that the world has wondered and admired the author, the organizer, and advocate of purity and temperance, Illinois' most illustrious deceased citizen." The same resolution proudly boasted that the purpose of this unusual honor to the memory of a woman was twofold: The first of course, to immortalize Frances E. Willard herself, and the second, to "show to all nations how exalted a sphere woman occupies in the great State of Illinois."

Mr. Chairman, this year, 1939, is the centennial year of Frances E. Willard's birth. The story of her life is too well known to be retold here. It suffices to say that she came of pioneer stock, Puritan stock, with stamina and will and hardy endurance. It is necessary to say too that the Willard family enjoyed an unusually beautiful home-life, enriched by devotion to ideals and heightened by intellectual curiosity. Frances Willard was ever inspired by this memory of her youth. It gave her the basic principles upon which she builded her career, the foundation for her successful life. Long after, in speaking of the ideal woman, Miss Willard said that the mission of this ideal woman was to "make the whole world homelike." She believed "the true woman will make every place she enters homelike—and she will enter every place in this wide world."

Mr. Chairman, the life of Frances Willard still remains a moving inspiration for womankind and it will ever remain so. She was guided unfailingly along the paths of her three great convictions in life by an ever-increasing spiritual growth, a vivid intellect, and by a singular devotion to duty that compelled her to deny the intrusions of all other interests. She looked upon her convictions as other than human. They were God-given inspirations that commanded her abilities and utilized them for the freeing of woman-kind from the thralldom fostered by past generations. Her greatest conviction was that of temperance. It was a conviction that might well be said to have come to her as part of her inheritance. She took it up with a crusading zeal. She welded together the forces that advocated temperance and through the medium of her great organization, the W. C. T. U., she made the country and then the world conscious of the newly found powers of women. She was an excellent organizer and a fine orator. These abilities combined brought the success that marked her incessant travels to almost every city and town in the entire country. She preached her great conviction unceasingly.

Miss Willard lived during that period of great reforms which came as an aftermath to the horrors and discouragement of the Civil War. Everywhere gifted people, men and women, were becoming aware of the problems that are those of civilization, and everywhere they strove with a new energy to vitalize the forces of social reform. Miss Willard soon realized that her chosen doctrine, temperance, would be immeasurably strengthened should the right of suffrage be gained for women. With great daring for that time, she took up the cause of equal suffrage and preached it with amazing success. Her difficulties were great. Women themselves were afraid to touch this subject and looked upon those who advocated it as somewhat bold and even possessed of characteristics unbecoming to women. Miss Willard triumphed over opinion and by her triumph gained strength for the cause. She felt that she could not fail because she was guided by a spiritual conviction that told her, "You are to speak for woman's ballot as a weapon for protection for her home."

The third great conviction was that of the compelling power of God. A study of Miss Willard's career would indicate that this conviction was the underlying cause for her great success. She had infinite faith in Christianity and an abiding faith in the evangelical method of teaching and preaching the Gospel. At one point in her career she allied herself with perhaps the most powerful and compelling of all the evangelical teachers, Dwight L. Moody, and went forth to preach with a fervor that was truly amazing.

It is gratifying to know that by the time of her death in 1898 Frances Willard was recognized both at home and abroad as the great moral force she had proven to be. She was a factor, one of the most important indeed, that had come forth to rekindle a faith in the power of man to do good. At the same time she was a pioneer among women and for them she led the way to new heights of power and influence. She aided them to achieve their rightful place in guiding and assisting the destiny of the human race. Whittier grasped the true meaning of her worth when he wrote:

She knew the power of banded ill,
But felt that love was stronger still,
And organized for doing good,
The world's united womanhood.

Mr. Chairman, the following epitaph written by the American poet, Robert McIntyre, makes a fitting close to any tribute to the life and work of Frances E. Willard:

OUR WHITE LADY

So pale she lies, in sweet repose!
Not whiter lie the winter snows
On this sad earth. From her cold brow
Unloose the braided myrtles now,
And bind the wreath of cypress there.
Put lilies in her hands and hair;
Come, gather round her, ye who stand
"For God, and home, and native land."

Doth thine anointed vision see,
Brave daughter of democracy,
How Church and State together bow
Above thy casket, weeping now?
They loved thee so, best of our best,
Thou Miriam of the mighty West,
Who dauntless led thy deathless band,
"For God, and home, and native land."

White Ladye, though before thine eyes
The portals fair of Paradise
Unfold on thine enraptured view
The heaven that shone thy white soul through—
Though high the victor's anthem swells
Where thou dost walk the asphodels,
Still shalt thou lead us, still command
"For God, and home, and native land."

Mr. STEFAN. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, as I stand down here in the Well for the first time before this distinguished body, I fully realize that, traditionally, for a new Member the ratio of listening to speaking should be predominantly on the side of the business of listening, and I conform to that policy, because I believe that in a body like this the observations of experience are probably more valuable than the observations of enthusiasm.

But I am also mindful this afternoon of another somewhat axiomatic statement, to the effect that self-preservation is the first law of nature. Consequently, I believe you will agree with me that when anything or anybody seeks to destroy or to tear down a man's home or his homeland, his right of self-preservation becomes paramount and overcomes some of the other man-made axioms. Since this has recently happened to me, I am shunting aside this afternoon the important tradition of silence, to replace it with the tradition of defense and take leave on this busy day to register my protest.

It is in connection with another axiomatic statement that I desire to talk with you. You have all seen among your copybook maxims the old statement saying that "Seeing is believing," but today I point out to you that seeing is not necessarily believing; that it is sometimes highly deceptive and highly deceiving, and I choose to talk on the theme that seeing is deceiving, because of a Government film which I recently saw with my own eyes. I refer to the film entitled "The Plow That Broke the Plains." This talk is intended as a refutation and a rejoinder to that malicious and slanderous attempt to misrepresent the homeland of millions of thrifty people living west of the Mississippi River.

"THE PLOW THAT BROKE THE PLAINS"

The immediate reason that I asked leave to talk to you today is that a short time ago I was asked over to Maryland to address the Izaak Walton League. Being interested in the work of conservation I went over, thinking I would enjoy an evening with my fellow conservationists. I must confess that the evening was sadly marred for me when the chairman announced the fact that they were going to show a film that night depicting the general territory from which the speaker came, and then turned loose upon that innocent audience this film, "The Plow that Broke the Plains"—a film which proudly displays the subtitle, "A documentary film of the United States Government."

Early in the picture a map is displayed, flashing across the screen showing three-quarters of my home State of South Dakota, and the major portions of the States of Montana, North Dakota, Wyoming, Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas. During the entire presentation of this sound motion picture a mournful voice accompanies the scenes which are displayed, and this voice says substantially this:

This is the area of great drought. This is the region of loose soils and high winds. This is the section of no rivers, no trees, and no lakes. This is the story of how a people have ruined the great cattle country and made it a wasted wilderness of disappointment, despair, and distress.

I am willing to admit that during the past 6 years South Dakota and these other States have experienced their share of distress; that we have had drought and grasshoppers; but what section of the United States has not, during the past 6 years, had its share of distress, and by what rhyme or reason is the money of the taxpayers used to concoct a motion-picture show to present to the world at large just the disagreeable and unfortunate aspects of the homeland of some 30,000,000 people?

While my section has had its fight with loose soil and high winds, there have been insect plagues in Dixie; there have been floods in Ohio; we have heard much of hurricanes in New England, earthquakes in California, and typhoons in Florida. We have heard of distress here, there, and elsewhere, but where would there be any justice in having our Government use our money to take a picture just showing this distress?

What would you think, for example, if your Government were to take pictures showing the monotonous white steps of the tenement region of Baltimore and say, "This is the background for the song, 'Maryland, My Maryland'?" Or if it were to show the havoc of the hurricane, and only the havoc of the hurricane, and say to the people of my district, "This is New England"; or if it were to show the people running from an earthquake in California to the accompaniment of the music "California, Here We Come"? Or if it were to point the camera down First Street SW., in Washington, D. C., and tell the people of America, "This is Washington, D. C."? Or if it were to take 100 feet of film showing a man in different positions scratching fleas on the sands of Florida, and say, "This is Florida"? But that is what they have done to South Dakota and the other States mentioned in the map displayed on this film, "The Plow That Broke the Plains."

NOT EVEN THE PROVERBIAL HAPPY ENDING

In contrast to this picture they showed one the same night entitled "The River," which tells a sad enough story about the people of the South, and indicates that they have not exerted a very wise intelligence in their relationship to the soil, but which at least shows the improvements they have learned from experience. The end of this story describes the people of the Mississippi Valley, which has been covered by a flood, growing up and building back and expanding; but in "The Plow That Broke the Plains" we are not even given the courtesy of the proverbial happy ending, because from beginning to end it is a drama of distress.

Consequently I have addressed a letter to the governmental agency which, at your expense and mine, is circulating, free of charge, this disgraceful misrepresentation of my homeland, and I shall insert the letter in the RECORD in full, asking them to be kind enough to withdraw this film from circulation. I think that is a fair request. The people of my State do not want it and do not like it. The people of other sections are entitled to the truth and not such a biased presentation of just one aspect of a great territory.

The letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 15, 1939.

MR. LOWELL MELLETT,

*Executive Director, National Emergency Council,
Washington, D. C.*

DEAR MR. MELLETT: The other night while attending a public meeting over in Maryland, I saw, for the first time, the motion picture with sound accompaniment, entitled, "The Plow That Broke the Plains," which I understood was filmed for the Farm Security Administration under the direction of Pare Lorentz. It is my further understanding that this picture is now being distributed, free of charge, to schools and other organizations requesting it from the United States Film Service which operates under the direction of the National Emergency Council of which you are the executive director.

Inasmuch as an early scene in this motion picture portrays a map in which fully three-fourths of my home State of South Dakota is pictured along with major portions of such States as Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas, I am extremely distressed that this picture should be exhibited in its present form. While I have no desire to impugn the motives of those originally preparing this picture at public expense, I cannot help but resent the fact that its continued exhibition gives an entirely erroneous and unfairly desolate impression of this great homeland of millions of thrifty and happy people.

I have traveled extensively in every State pictured in this map, and while soil erosion is unquestionably a problem which we must solve in this area, "The Plow That Broke the Plains" creates the impression among those not familiar with this territory that the devastation is far more widespread and hopeless than is actually the case.

Either deliberately or unintentionally, the picture incorrectly implies a complete lack of rivers, lakes, and trees in this area, despite the fact that there are over 1,000 miles of river in South Dakota alone, and it indicates that the territory has become virtually worthless for agricultural purposes. It omits any reference, either by picture or spoken word, to the beautiful Black Hills of my home State, for example; to the 500 new lakes which have been built in South Dakota since 1930; to the many prosperous, comfortable homes which dot the entire area pictured on this map; to the fertile fields and friendly wood lots which cover much of this territory; to the prosperous, modern towns of Oklahoma, Kansas, Texas, Nebraska, and all the other States described by the narrator of the picture; to the splendid progress being made in controlling this soil erosion; to the successful experience enjoyed in the raising of new trees through the shelterbelt program; and to a host of other benefits and advantages which are typical of this great area, and which should be included in the picture if it is to give an impartial and honest impression to its audience.

Therefore, because the circulation of this picture so unfairly labels a great section of our country as a territory of lost hope and exhausted opportunities I respectfully request that you immediately announce an executive order withdrawing this picture from circulation and discontinuing all further exhibitions of "The Plow That Broke the Plains."

I have discussed this matter with a number of other Congressmen from the States covered by this picture, and I find them in complete agreement with me in this request. If necessary, I can have others join me in this appeal; but I feel you will readily see the justice of my position and gladly comply with its provisions. The continued exhibition of this picture cannot be considered as anything less than a direct affront to the fine American citizens who are enjoying this area as their homeland and who are constantly working to make it a happier and a more attractive place in which to live. I shall appreciate a letter from you conveying your consideration of this request.

Sincerely yours,

KARL MUNDT,

Member Congress, First District, South Dakota.

P. S.—Since dictating this letter I am in receipt of notice that the South Dakota Editorial Association at its annual midwinter meeting last week adopted a resolution asking that "The Plow That Broke the Plains" be withdrawn from circulation. So you see that it is apparent that among the people most affected by this picture its continued showing is highly unpopular and offensive.

K. M.

I hope and I expect that after this matter has been brought to the attention of the proper authorities, this picture will be withdrawn or modified and revised to show the complete story, showing the improvement which has taken place in the last few years, together with the many natural advantages and opportunities of this area. If so, I will feel that my efforts have been richly rewarded. If not so, I must continue the fight with whatever resources are at my command, because it is grossly unfair and unjust to so condemn a section of the country, and I shall continue to fight until successful, for the benefit of the fair name of my State and a fair deal for this region of the Middle West.

MOSQUITO CONTROL IN A "DESERT"

It may be there are some of you who feel that this film presents a true picture of this section of the country. If so let me point out that this is not even the attitude of the Government which took the film at your expense and which circulated it through the department known as the United States Film Service at your expense, because while the picture was being circulated another Government department sent its agents out into my State which they picture on the map as a land of no lakes, no rivers, and no trees, and sought to establish in the capital city of Pierre a mosquito-control board to eliminate mosquitoes from the swamps to save the natives from malaria. [Laughter.] Consequently there must have been a fallacy in the picture which describes this land as a second cousin to the Sahara Desert without even giving us the courtesy of putting an oasis in the desert or admitting that a camel could live there.

Mr. Chairman, this year the United States plays host to the people of the world by staging two mammoth expositions, one the New York World's Fair, the other the Golden Gate Exposition, of which we have heard something this afternoon. South Dakota is on the main line of travel between these two great expositions. The citizens of my State are eager to point out to the tourists from throughout America the fact that the statements and the conditions presented in this film are false.

We invite you to visit this region, but we do not want a sign nailed up at the border of South Dakota stating, "Out where the worst begins! South Dakota, a land of disappointment, disaster, and dust! Pray you, avoid it."

And we do not want our money being spent by our Government, from taxes which we pay, promoting a motion picture carrying such a fictitious message to the people of America. We want at least to have the right and the privilege other people have to work out our own problems and to solve the distressful situations which have engulfed us in part as they have reached around to touch the people of all other sections of the country.

GOVERNMENT URGES PEOPLE TO SEE FILM

This enterprising department of the Government is not content merely to let the people who request it enjoy the free distribution of this picture but it has become so energetic that it is now sending out circulars advertising the fact that the film is available. So South Dakota and the other States represented not only have to fight a free motion-picture show but the whole Government propaganda machine putting out literature of this kind to induce people to get this picture which is called a documentary film and, consequently, by the uninitiated and the unknowing believed to be typical of this section of the country. Let me read you a passage from a paragraph here in this advertising folder:

A saga of the Great Plains area of the United States. This film of American history surveys the various movements in the Great Plains area, the passing of the buffalo, the successive invasions of the range cattle, the homesteader, and the large-scale farmer. Tremendous, too, are the disastrous dust storms which whip across once fertile areas.

Notice the past tense implication—once fertile areas.

Carrying away rich topsoil and bringing tragedy to the Great Plains.

A DRAMA OF DELUSION

Here are Government documents themselves trying to bring distress to my section of the country. This great drama of delusion to which we are compelled to pay portions of our tax money is the most disgraceful attempt of which I know anything about to misrepresent the environment of the homeland of a large section of happy, prosperous, patriotic Americans. It happens that I have traveled and spoken in all of the States represented by the map at the beginning of this picture. I know the spirit of the people there, I know the topography of the ground. I have fished in the inland lakes in Texas on the very spot this map shows as being nothing but a sea of shifting sand. I have seen the broad streets of the modern cities of Oklahoma which this picture also includes in this land of distress and disaster. I have watched with amazement the productivity of the fields rich in harvest in Nebraska and in Kansas, in South Dakota and in North Dakota. I have seen the great grazing territories of Wyoming and Montana. I have caught trout in the silvery streams of Colorado—all in the section which this film depicts as a modern American desert! I know from personal observation that the people are not the short-sighted soil wreckers and crude ground hogs described by this infamous picture.

If at any time our folks have had to farm too hard or too much, it is not because they were trying to get rich quick; it was not because they were more avaricious than the average man; it was simply because they had to compete against occasional short crops, added to the perpetually unfair prices paid for the products of the agricultural section of America.

I may say to you candidly and honestly, with simple midwestern frankness, that despite the destructive aspects of this film, I believe the great area pictured therein, even today, has the greatest degree of man-acre opportunity available in the Western Hemisphere. No overcrowded sections of population there. No restrictions making it important that a man shall have a big private capital before he may go into business. No sit-down strikes. No wars between classes and groups. Just a thrifty, forward-looking people trying to improve what is already a splendid and verdant homeland.

STILL OPPORTUNITY ALONG THE OREGON TRAIL

Mr. Chairman, there is still wealth in the West. There is still opportunity along the Oregon Trail. The new wealth produced in the area pictured by this film as being a land of lost hope, is the new wealth, I submit, that is turning the wheels of the factories of America today. It is giving employment to the people in the large cities of this land. The tonnage hauled from that great producing area has kept the railroad business from collapsing entirely. Our farmers who have fought these short crops, caused by occasional lack of moisture; our farmers who find themselves today the only great occupational group for whom the Government has established no definite price legislation, now find themselves subjected to this offensive criticism, by the unique activity of their own Government attempting to discredit and disparage the country in which they live.

By trying to keep tourists from visiting it, trying to discourage people from the surrounding country buying from the people within this area, pointing the finger of condemnation, scorn and contempt at a group of people whose activities have largely kept America from complete economic collapse, the Government is handicapping this section.

NO PRICE AND NOW NO PRAISE FOR THE FARMERS

Look at the rest of the record. Where do we find price-fixing legislation today? We find it for labor. We find it for business. We find it for railroads. But not for these farmers who fight inclement weather at times, and who are now fighting this new hazard; these farmers who are trying to do their best to supply the foodstuffs of America, with the catch-as-catch-can prices they have to accept in the open market. Instead of being encouraged for their efforts, they find themselves subjected to this tirade of scorn.

COME OUT AND SEE FOR YOURSELVES

Mr. Chairman, and all America, on behalf of my native State of South Dakota I invite you to visit us next summer. I invite you to come and see with your own eyes why I condemn the film "The Plow That Broke the Plains" as the most dastardly, and disgraceful attempt to besmirch a fair section of the country that has ever been conceived by any nation anywhere. I want you to see the more than 1,000 miles of rivers in the State of South Dakota alone, which brands certainly as an untruth that melancholy voice that says "it is a land of no lakes, no trees, and no rivers."

I want you to come and fish and swim in the more than 1,000 lakes we have in the State of South Dakota today. I want you to visit the more than a million acres of native forest land in the State of South Dakota, and to sit in the shade of the hundreds and thousands of other little wooded lots, planted by the ambition and the vision of the farmers who are not deserting their homes, as indicated by this picture, but are trying to improve them and pass them on to their children in an enhanced and improved state.

I want you to see the fertile fields of my home State of South Dakota on which today is raised some of the richest spring wheat to be found in the country, on which we raise some of the best potatoes, the best barley for malt purposes, and the finest flax, corn, and alfalfa that you can find in America.

THE FIGHT WILL GO ON IF IT MUST

I want you to check with your own eyes the statements I have made from the standpoint of the fact that this region is the opposite to what it has been pictured in this film, the withdrawal of which today I am respectfully requesting, and the withdrawal of which I shall continue to insist upon until either the National Emergency Council or this young man from South Dakota comes out on top. The fight is going on because I believe the cause is right and just.

May I call attention to the fact that the annual farm production of South Dakota today is equal to the production of Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, Connecticut, and Massachusetts combined. May I call your attention to the fact that this year, while they are showing this picture representing our State as a vast area of dust, the national corn-husking contest of America was held on one of the fine cornfields of my home State of South Dakota.

I want you to come out and check for yourself the accuracy of what I am stating here this afternoon and then to realize with me the humiliation I must suffer, visiting in Maryland or some place nearby and having people watch this film, believing it to be typical of that section of America from Canada to the Gulf, but which is fortunate enough to lie west of the Mississippi River.

I want you to visit the beautiful Black Hills. I want you to see the site that Calvin Coolidge chose for his summer White House. I want you to see the Rushmore Monument on which the sculptor is carving the most colossal statues to be found in Christendom. I want you to watch the deer and elk play out in the hills. I want you to enjoy hunting ringneck pheasants in the best pheasant territory in the Nation, a country in which the pheasants are almost as thick as mosquitoes in a Jersey swamp!

I want you to see the gold mines of the Black Hills, because there you will see the richest 100 square miles of land to be found anywhere. I want you to visit this busy, friendly, happy State. The United States News for February 13 pictured a map of the United States telling the true story of the West. It shows that South Dakota which just a few years ago had the greatest per capita wealth in America is again on the way back to national leadership.

Here we have South Dakota on the map with a red line around the State. There is no red ink in the State and less red doctrine there than you can find in any other State in America. [Applause.] You will find there are seven States in America which in 1939 have better than the average national recovery, and among the States is South Dakota, not a land of dust and doubt but a land of prosperity and opportunity. [Applause.]

Now I thank you very much for letting me come down here this afternoon and express myself in defense of my State. I do want you to agree with me that with respect to this film, "Seeing is deceiving." I want you to come out and visit us and see for yourselves the rectitude of my position when I humbly ask that this Government agency withdraw "The Plow That Broke the Plains" from circulation.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I should like to add to my colleague's remarks the fact that he has support for his position from home. I received just now a letter signed by Mr. John H. Craig, secretary of the South Dakota Press Association. The letter reads as follows:

FEBRUARY 13, 1939.

HON. FRANCIS CASE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CASE: The people of South Dakota feel the State is being done an injustice by the showing of the moving picture "The Plow That Broke the Plains." The South Dakota Press Association passed a resolution at its winter convention on Saturday in Huron asking the Senators and Representatives from this State to use their influence in having the film put out of circulation.

Mr. MUNDT. I thank the gentleman. The letter is very fine.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. No doubt the gentleman will receive from the director of the bureau handling this film an answer to the gentleman's protest. Am I correct in assuming that the gentleman intends to ask unanimous consent to place that answer in the RECORD so the other side of this question will be given to the Members of Congress and the public generally?

Mr. MUNDT. If he withdraws the film I shall be pleased to put it in the RECORD. If he intends to keep on showing this film he will have to handle his side of the fight from his end.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In other words, if the director answers the gentleman's protest the gentleman will not put that answer in the RECORD, so the Members of Congress can see the subject from his viewpoint and the viewpoint of those who are responsible for the film?

Mr. MUNDT. I have lived in the West all my life and I know that what I have said is correct. If he will answer me according to the rules of correctness and withdraw his film I certainly will be glad to put the answer in the RECORD. If he proposes to defend the policy of trying to bring disgrace to my homeland I will object to having it put in the RECORD, instead of putting it in myself. [Applause.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does not the gentleman feel that the film has already had circulation and has been speaking for itself in defamation of the State of South Dakota?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; this film has been in circulation and playing for 2 years now. We have made protests in other manners and now we are going to try to appeal to the justice of the Members of Congress, so if we must we can bring pressure to bear to withdraw that film from circulation. I have no desire to impugn the motives—although they would be easier to impugn than to interpret—of the man who made the film. I am objecting to the film because of the reaction of the people who have never seen the area.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I may say to the gentleman I have seen that beautiful State of his, and I know the gentleman speaks the truth. Also, when I was in Hot Springs, I was informed the people there did not lock their front doors at night, because the community was so honest.

Mr. MUNDT. I thank the gentlewoman.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman believe it is quite fair for him to present his side of this subject and have it spread in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and then not permit the other side to present its viewpoint and place it in the RECORD?

Mr. MUNDT. I am sure the gentleman can see how obvious an answer there is to that. Does the gentleman believe it is fair for the National Government for 2 years to spread its side of the story on the screens of America and never give us a chance to tell the truth? [Applause.]

Mr. EBERHARTER. If the gentleman will permit, I may say I believe this film can be doing a great deal of good to the State of South Dakota and that it will make the people conscious of the fact that it is necessary for this Government to spend a good deal of money in such sections of the country in order to rehabilitate them. For that reason I believe the film is doing the State of South Dakota some good in that respect. It is only fair for the gentleman to put the answer of the Director in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. MUNDT. If the conditions were as dry in our State as they appear in the picture, which they are not, it would be quite as unnecessary to show this picture there as hanging a thermometer in Alaska to tell the Eskimos it is cold. You could not do any good any place else by displaying this picture.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. May I suggest that the people of South Dakota would be perfectly willing to have them place the other side of the story in the RECORD if the administration will also give us a film so we can answer the film that has already been in circulation.

Mr. MUNDT. Splendid; that is exactly right and you would assume that would be fair, would you not?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I did not hear the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. MUNDT. We as taxpayers have a lot of money invested in this film that is doing us harm and my colleague from South Dakota suggests that if they will print a film showing the advantageous side of South Dakota we will be glad to give them an opportunity to present their case on the floor here.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The subject the gentleman had before the House was this particular film "The Plow That Broke the Plains." I think we ought at least to give the administration or whoever is responsible for this film an opportunity to present their reasons to the Members of Congress and the people of the United States generally for showing this film in this manner.

Mr. MUNDT. They have been showing their film for 2 years. The period of refutation has just begun. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to read into the RECORD a short editorial from the Boston Sunday Post of January 8, 1938.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, on Friday night, February 17, in the fine city of Woburn, Mass., in my congressional district, the people will gather for a ceremony to unveil a bronze plaque to the memory of a man who has done much for the advancement of our country and whose invention has meant employment for thousands of our citizens. I refer to Charles Goodyear, the discoverer of the vulcanization of rubber.

This being the one hundredth anniversary of his discovery, it is particularly fitting that notice of it should be taken in Woburn, for it was here that his experiments were made and perfected. The plaque I mentioned is being placed in the social hall of the Goodyear School in East Woburn.

On the floor of the House I want to pay my tribute to Charles Goodyear, who, through all kinds of adversity and hardship, illness, poverty, disappointments, struggled on through the years of tireless work until he reached his goal and a glorious success. What an example he sets for the present generation. What an inspiration to us all. He typifies all that is fine in the New England character.

Charles Goodyear, who was to rise from relentless adversity and debtors' prison into high service of his fellow man, was born in New Haven, Conn., December 29, 1800. His father, Amasa Goodyear, was a practical-minded Yankee manufacturer credited with many inventions.

When the boy was 7 the family moved to nearby Naugatuck. There his father started a factory for the manufacture of some of his inventions, which included the first closed lamp for burning oil and an improved spring-steel hay fork.

Young Charles was a quiet, serious boy who showed little aptitude for things mechanical. Of a religious turn of mind, he joined the church at 16 and hoped to become a minister. His father needed his help, however, and for a while he worked in the factory.

Later he went to Philadelphia and apprenticed himself to learn the hardware trade. Upon reaching his majority he came back to Naugatuck to become associated with his father.

In 1824 he married his childhood sweetheart, Clarissa Beecher. Two years later they moved to Philadelphia, where Charles opened a hardware store, selling principally his father's products.

For a time the business, said to have been the first retail hardware concern in the United States, was successful. Then young Goodyear, never physically strong, was taken sick. During 2 years of ill health his business declined.

Then several of his creditors failed. In a valiant effort to meet his obligations, to keep his business going, and to provide for his loyal wife and their child he began selling his patents.

His courageous efforts were unavailing. He lost his store and suffered the humiliation of confinement in a debtors' cell. Released, he turned to inventions of his own in an effort to clear up his debts and regain his feet.

A "safe-eye" button, spring-lever faucets, an improved air pump, and a boat constructed of metal tubes helped him get a new start. It was while he was working on a washer for his spring-lever faucet in 1832 that he became interested in rubber.

Charles Goodyear was 20 years old when American traders began bringing back from Brazil some of the cumbersome rubber shoes made by natives of the Para jungle. These were turned out from clay models over which the Indians poured the milk, or latex, of the rubber trees.

Manufacturers in this country and in England were keenly interested in making in their own factories these shoes, which they called gum elastic, as well as other products of rubber.

But this early rubber, when spread on cloth, would melt and run in summer, grow brittle and crack in winter. Garters and suspenders containing rubber threads had to be kept away from a stove or fireplace.

The fate of an industry, destined to become one of the world's largest and most important, was here to be determined.

It was in 1832, while Charles Goodyear was struggling for a foothold, that he stepped into the store of E. M. Chaffee, in Roxbury, Mass., to buy a life preserver for one of the metal-tube boats on which he was working.

Chaffee had been experimenting with the manufacture of patent-leather shoes, which he made by dissolving rubber in turpentine, adding lampblack for color, and spreading over cloth. His innovations seemed to be going well, and he expanded into making rubberized clothing, caps, and life preservers.

Goodyear saw these products in Chaffee's store. But his interest at the time was not on rubber but on inventions which would produce ready cash. His quick mind saw an improvement which he could make in an inflation tube, and he forthwith sold the idea to Chaffee.

It was a year later that Goodyear returned to the Roxbury store with other ideas which he hoped to sell. He found the merchant in distress. Some $20,000 worth of his rubber goods had decomposed in the summer heat. To keep word of this from spreading, Chaffee had to haul the goods stealthily out of his store under cover of night, and secretly bury them.

Now, at this fateful moment Goodyear's interest was definitely aroused. It was motivated partly, no doubt, by his friend's ruin, but principally because here was a challenging problem.

Once started he was never to cease until success rewarded his doggedness, his sacrifices, his genius, and abounding faith. The road was to lead through extreme poverty, discouragement, imprisonment, and almost every loss that a man may suffer.

Even while Goodyear was conducting his endless and apparently fruitless experiment, the bottom fell out of the American rubber trade. Friends and relatives begged him to drop the work which now seemed indubitably foredoomed to failure.

Refusing, he labored on without flagging, the faith firmly fixed in his mind that there must be some method by which rubber could be treated to make it permanently usable, to keep it from melting in heat, cracking in cold.

Contemporary annals enable us to pick up his unhappy trail in New Haven in 1835. He was trying desperately to hit upon a way to remove the stickiness from his rubber.

In an interlude of financial despair he sold his furniture—even to the linens spun by the toiling hands of his wife. He left his family in a New Haven boarding house and set out for New York, determined to find money to continue his work.

In a dingy, barren, little room, three flights up, in a crooked street in Greenwich Village, his brother-in-law, William De Forrest, was to find him, surrounded by a jumble of kettles, white lead, rubber, and shellac.

He was now trying quicklime and boiling water. At last he seemed to have achieved a rubber cloth with a dry, non-adhesive surface. Taking one of his wife's old silk petticoats, he rubberized it and cut the cloth up into several sample rain hats.

These appeared to be capable of resisting heat as well as rain, and once again Goodyear envisioned success. He made up rubber sheets, and various articles of clothing, wearing the latter about the streets of New York to prove their practicability. A visitor who sought him was told by one of his scornful neighbors:

If you meet a fellow wearing a rubber cap, rubber stock, coat, vest, and shoes, and with a rubber money purse without a cent in it—that will be Goodyear.

He sent some of his products to the Mechanics Institute and received a silver medal, his first award. Just as he was preparing himself for a long overdue measure of acclaim, it was discovered that acid dropped on the sheets neutralized the lime and made them again sticky and unusable.

One eventful day he discovered that a nitric acid treatment apparently would enable his rubber to resist heat. In an outburst of exuberance he made up rubberized cloth bandages, rubberized articles of wearing apparel, rubberized paper on which he wrote a glowing letter to President Andrew Jackson.

A partner came to him with money. They took over an abandoned rubber factory on Staten Island and went into the manufacture of rubber shoes, rubberized clothing, life preservers. He sent for his family to join him.

Then came the panic of 1837. The partner and financial backer went broke; the Goodyears lost everything they had. But the brave little family rallied. While Goodyear went fishing for food for the table, his wife and children took to making rubberized aprons and piano covers by hand and selling them for the bare necessities. Mrs. Goodyear made and sold bonnets of pasteboard.

There was the bitter day when, there being nothing else of intrinsic value in the house, Goodyear set out penniless for New York to pawn the last of the family's silver spoons. To pay for his fare across on the ferry he had to give his umbrella to one of the guards.

But further backing was not to be found. Setting out for Boston he looked up Chaffee again, and got the use of that despairing manufacturer's idle rubber machinery. Still confident of his acid-gas method of treating rubber, Goodyear resumed his experiments and turned to making shoes.

This went well, and soon he was able to sell his patent rights to a Providence company which successfully operated under them for many years.

But the urge to improve his rubber to the perfection he dreamed of had not left Goodyear. He sold out completely, realizing some $5,000 from the disposal of manufacturing licenses, and took his family to Roxbury where the possibilities of still another bankrupt rubber factory had aroused his attention.

He learned that the foreman of the defunct company, Nathaniel Hayward, had attained some success by spreading sulphur on rubber sheeting and drying it in the sun. Goodyear bought his patent and hired Hayward as his foreman.

Goodyear now began an extensive business in the making of life preservers, and took a Government contract for 150 mail bags.

While he was away on a business trip, however, the mail bags decomposed and the life preservers, which had been so confidently shipped out, were returned as worthless. The new method seemed only to have cured the surface.

Having invested everything, Goodyear saw it lost. His furniture was sold under the hammer. He moved his uncomplaining family to Woburn, and settled down to making rubber shoes by hand to provide a bare living.

Now the white frame house beneath the towering elms of Woburn became the focus, the point upon which the story turns.

It was a bitter day early in 1839. While his patient wife was out driving a bargain for food, Goodyear was in the kitchen, eternally compounding and mixing, kneading and rolling his sticky mass of sulphur and rubber. In some manner he dropped a handful of it on top of the hot stove.

Legend says that he dropped it by accident, startled and chagrined when Mrs. Goodyear suddenly returned to find him "experimenting again." Goodyear was to deny in the later years that his discovery was entirely by accident.

Whatever the case was, his alert mind was quick to see what had occurred. To his eager amazement he discovered that the rubber had not melted. It had only charred.

High excitement possessed him. "If the process of charring could be stopped at the right point," his biographer later was to report his reasoning, "it might divest the gum of its native adhesiveness throughout."

He noted that the charred rubber retained its flexibility. Nailing it to the outside of the kitchen door, he let it remain there overnight in subzero temperatures.

Next morning he found that the extreme cold had not affected it.

Now he was sure he was on the right track. But he realized that he must determine the exact degree of heat and period of time necessary to get a perfect cure and smooth surface.

Although, after the heart-breaking years, his dreams seemed about to come true, he forced himself to proceed with extraordinary caution to make test after test.

Day after day, when his wife had finished her baking and left the kitchen free, he made up compounded batches of his rubber and put them in the oven for 1, 2, 3, 6 hours.

He traveled to Lynn and there tried it out in the steam heat of a mill. He tried curing rubber cloth before an open fire by boiling it in his wife's saucepans, by hanging it over a teakettle spout, by roasting it in hot ashes, in hot sand, before a slow fire, before a quick fire.

After hours he haunted the bakeshops of Woburn, importuning the bakers to let him use their ovens. They, as other townspeople, complacently believed the frail little man a harmless lunatic.

At last Goodyear convinced himself he had definitely discovered the process he had so long sought. He named it "vulcanization," for Vulcan, mythological deity of fire.

Unsuccessfully he sought urgent financial aid. He tried contacts and friends in both Boston and New York. They let him know sharply that they were "through with him and his confounded rubber."

The months of 1839 had been dragging on as Goodyear persisted with his tests. He was exhausted and ill and began to be plagued by the fear that he would die before he could carry his work on to the success he was certain awaited.

He sold his library, even his children's schoolbooks, for $5. His family went into the nearby woods to gather fuel; they ate half-grown potatoes. Still he refused to quit.

Convinced that in a big oven of his own he could carry his tests to the final conclusion, he scraped his last pennies together and built one 6 feet square.

In his loved ones' extremity, he received a letter from France wanting to buy his old nitric-acid process for curing rubber. It was characteristic of the man that he wrote back declining the money, stating he had found a better process and would write again when his tests were completed.

It was at this crucial point that his brother-in-law, De Forrest, sent Goodyear $50 to come to New York in a final effort to raise capital. There he met William Rider, a merchant, who furnished capital to start a factory in Springfield, Mass., for making the shirred cloth which Goodyear had invented by pressing rubber thread into fabric.

Two years later, in 1842, Rider went bankrupt, and De Forrest became the financial backer of the Springfield factory. Goodyear put his two brothers, Nelson and Henry, in charge of the plant.

Meanwhile he continued subjecting his process of vulcanization to such a series of conclusive tests that at last he was satisfied he had perfected it.

The plant prospered with the manufacture of articles made of Goodyear's new "vulcanized" rubber. Under his direction more and more articles were turned out, and all proved invariably satisfactory.

In 1843 Goodyear filed a formal application for patent on the discovery of vulcanization. The patent was issued to him on June 14, 1844.

The following is an editorial in the Boston Sunday Post of January 8, 1938:

The city of Woburn has achieved coast-to-coast fame in recent months as a place in which municipal economy is being carried out by a forthright and energetic mayor.

But lest the opinion go out that the municipality is noteworthy only for his crusade, the lion's cage, and lighting by moonlight, the residents this month will observe a centenary of one of the greatest scientific discoveries of modern times.

Through this discovery an entire new world of progress has been possible. Without it the automobile and a host of other common-places of modern life would have been impossible.

It was 100 years ago this month that Charles Goodyear, a bankrupt hardware dealer, recently out of jail for nonpayment of his just debts, discovered the process of vulcanizing rubber.

This changed rubber from a puzzling, sticky substance, of little commercial value, to the serviceable commodity it is today. It made possible the myriad inventions which go with the modern age.

It built factories and cities.

It seems strange that Woburn is still a small city with a population in the 20,000's, while the process discovered in a Woburn kitchen in 1839 should have built such places as Akron, Ohio, with a population of nearly 275,000.

Here, Mr. Chairman, I can say why that is possible. It is due to the fact that we pay higher wages in Massachusetts than in other sections of the country.

But it happened. Goodyear was in his poor and almost barren home 100 years ago this month, puttering with rubber in the kitchen.

His wife, who must have been the soul of patience, was out at the greengrocers, trying to make a few pennies buy a meal. For 7 years this strange, persistent man had been struggling with the ill-smelling, hard-to-handle substance.

The hardware business had gone the way of neglected things, and whatever money the Goodyears had was used up in living and paying for the experiments.

On this particular cold morning he was kneading rubber on a marble slab with a rolling pin. His wife burst in through the kitchen door and so startled the absorbed chemist that he dropped some of the rubber on the top of a hot stove. He had mixed the rubber with sulphur, and in a moment he saw that the heat had changed the consistency of the substance.

It was this accident that started him off on the course which led to the vulcanization of rubber. He named the process himself, and through it rubber became the tremendous factor that it is today.

It would be hard indeed to visualize on that frosty morning the vast forests which would be devoted to the production of rubber, the vessels which would bring the crude product to civilization, and the huge factories, employing thousands of hands, which would spring up to make rubber into thousands of forms.

His invention brought him great honor here and abroad. He probably never realized the full import of his process, for the automobile age was yet ahead.

But he brought to Woburn an added fame, a tradition, and a legend.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELOSON].

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Chairman, I would be ungrateful indeed if I did not recognize and appreciate the able discussion by my colleague the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT]. I also resent the film that the gentleman spoke about a while ago, because Montana does not deserve a reputation of that sort. Montana is a State of nearly 147,000 square miles, with paved roads throughout the entire State. Montana is a State in which you will find the largest and richest mines in the world, a State that has produced gold and is now producing gold, tin, and also manganese. Manganese is a metal we are importing today from Russia. We have streams in indefinite number and we have one of the largest inland lakes in the world in Montana. The headwaters of the Columbia River and the headwaters of the Mississippi are located in Montana. Montana is also an agricultural State.

So I say, I would be ungrateful indeed did I not refer to the State of Montana, although that is not my main purpose in rising. Montana asks for nothing except the right to work and produce, unmolested by the Federal Government. The greatest handicap we have in Montana is the pernicious influence of the Federal departments, which deliberately misrepresent the State of Montana and the rest of the Western States. I received a resolution today from the Legislature of the State of Montana, which I shall read in part:

Be it resolved, That it is the prayer of your memorialists, the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, that the Congress of the United States should, by proper legislation, right the wrong suffered by these farmers, processors, and wage earnings engaged in the growing and manufacturing of beet sugar by immediately raising the domestic sugar quota to permit the unrestricted production of sugar within the continental limits of the United States, and to maintain the protective market by quota reductions and adequate tariffs on foreign sugar.

Mr. Chairman, it is well to bear in mind that when a people are asking for their constitutional rights as reserved to them by the Constitution in amendments 9 and 10, public rights are nearly lost. When a people must petition the Government they have nourished for 151 years to give them back the rights which they originally reserved to themselves, something has happened to our Government that is not for the general welfare of the United States.

That, Mr. Chairman, is approximately our position today. When the sugar producers of Montana petition this body to restore their right to produce and supply our own tables with our own production, it is not only for the welfare of the people in my State, but it is for the general good of the people in every State of the Union.

Had this been a special or partisan request, no support would have been given to it by me before this House. However, this involves a problem of magnitude, and is therefore the concern of Congress. It also concerns the welfare of the Nation and must therefore be corrected not only as an aid in our present state of peace but as a greater necessity should trouble overtake us. I shall ask my colleagues to give this serious consideration because it concerns every State in this Union, and it is for the general interest and general welfare of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, just one observation contained in the memorial which I desire to especially emphasize; that is, the higher wages and income of the beet workers and growers over that enjoyed by the sugarcane workers in the offshore areas. I call the attention of the House to the most unusual statement appearing in the Appendix of the Record on page 540. Wages of $9.72 per day for those working in domestic sugar-beet fields is worthy of our serious attention. Any industry that can pay such high wages on basis of present purchasing power of the dollar is worthy of perpetuation, protection, and expansion. I challenge any other line of agricultural activity to show such excellent returns to the hand laborers. This is a group of workers with purchasing power which far exceeds that of anything we can hope to obtain in the tropical areas. The industry in the offshore areas is not built and operated on such an economy, and in no wise can Cuba show such a fair division of the proceeds with the field workers.

The memorial follows:

House Joint Memorial 7

A memorial to the Congress of the United States of America requesting it to assist the beet-sugar industry in Montana

Whereas only 29.5 percent of domestic sugar sales are allotted to domestic producers at present, Cuba has practically the same amount, and our insular possessions 41.5 percent, American producers are rightfully entitled to all of the domestic market that they are able to supply; and

Whereas the import quotas of raw sugar as set at the present time have brought the farmers, the workers in the beet-sugar factories, and the laborers in the beet fields in direct competition with the poorly paid labor in the sugar-producing territories outside of continental United States, such competition has the direct result of lowering the standard of living of these farmers and laborers to a level incompatible with the American way of life; and

Whereas sugar beets can be effectively grown at a reasonable profit in this State and there is no food more valuable to the consumer in nutritive worth even at a much higher price than at present; and

Whereas the production of sugar beets provides employment at good wages for many times as many workers as the same acreage of other crops adapted to this latitude and any control of the expansion of sugar-beet acreage means more unemployment and more relief clients who could otherwise make a living in this industry; and

Whereas there is grave danger that the present policy, if continued, will result in many now employed in this country losing their means of livelihood, thereby further increasing the already tremendous burden of unemployment; and

Whereas our beet growers, if permitted to make a reasonable amount of money, are, due to their higher standard of living, many times better customers for eastern industry as are foreign sugar laborers and planters; and

Whereas an orderly and sound expansion of beet plantings in accordance with the development of suitable land and the building of new factories to take care of the increased production is a reasonable and necessary process to the building up of this State and should be encouraged; and

Whereas the expansion of the domestic production of sugar should be encouraged as a problem of national economy and defense; the acute shortage of sugar during the World War demonstrated our need for a much higher domestic sugar production in time of emergency; and

Whereas because of the high altitude of this region there are practically no substitute crops for sugar beets and the restriction of the beet industry means the throttling of our agriculture by eliminating the best cultivated crop in a proper rotation for maintaining soil fertility and weed control; and

Whereas the development of profitable agricultural operations is so vital to the business of all of Montana as well as of the entire United States, and should be given most serious consideration by all individuals and law-making bodies; and

Whereas the Beet Growers' Association of Montana, supported by the Montana Federation of Labor and Montanans, Inc. (the State chamber of commerce), have given serious and careful consideration to the present sugar quotas and the above facts have been definitely established: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the prayer of your memorialists, the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, that the Congress of the United States should, by proper legislation, right the wrong suffered by the farmers, processors, and wage earners engaged in the growing and manufacturing of beet sugar, by immediately raising the domestic sugar quota to permit the unrestricted production of sugar within the continental limits of the United States, and to maintain the protective market by quota reductions and adequate tariffs on foreign sugar; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated, be sent by the secretary of state to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives of Montana in Congress.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. COSTELLO, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4218, making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to insert in connection therewith certain excerpts from the proceedings of the American Federation of Labor, and also certain excerpts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein a communication I received with respect to the Gilbertsville Dam.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I introduced a bill in regard to promotion in the Navy, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill and a short explanation be printed in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the Record my remarks and to include therein both a letter and a sworn statement addressed to me by David Lasser, president of the Workers' Alliance of America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, just what is this material about the Workers' Alliance?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The president of the Workers' Alliance was attacked in a transcript of an alleged conversation placed in the Record by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN]. I submit that Mr. Lasser's version should go in the Record. It is only fair play to permit it to be inserted.

Mr. FADDIS. Owing to the fact that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] is not present, I will object at present, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks which I made in Committee of the Whole this afternoon and include therein certain brief excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, in recognition of the exceptional ability of the Right Reverend Joseph M. Corrigan, rector of the Catholic University of America, Washington, D. C., I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a very able eulogy on His Holiness, Pope Pius XI, delivered by him on Wednesday last.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an address by myself at the Lincoln Day dinner at Charleston, W. Va.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a Lincoln Day address made by the Honorable FOREST A. HARNES on February 14, 1939, at Kokomo, Ind.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a memorial received from the Senate of Montana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks which I made in Committee of the Whole and include therein a letter of which I read a portion at that time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an address given by myself on Abraham Lincoln, February 13.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BUCK, from February 17 to 21, inclusive, on account of attendance at opening of Golden Gate International Exposition, San Francisco, Calif.

To Mr. HAVENNER, for 1 week, on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, February 17, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Public hearings will continue Friday, February 17, 1939, at 10 a. m., on social-security legislation, in the Ways and Means Committee room in the New House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m. Friday, February 17, 1939. Business to be considered: Continuation of hearing on H. R. 2531—transportation bill.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives on Friday, February 17, 1939, at 2 p. m., for the purpose of continuing the consideration of H. R. 2880, "To authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes," carrying out partially the recommendations of the Hepburn report.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors will meet Friday, February 17, 1939, at 10:30 a. m., to hold hearings on the report on Calumet-Sag Channel, Ill., and Indian Harbor and Canal, Ind.

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation at 10:30 a. m. Tuesday, February 21, 1939.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m., Tuesday, February 21, 1939, on the bill (H. R. 3576) to make effective the provisions of the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936.

It is contemplated that the hearing on Tuesday, February 21, 1939, on H. R. 3576 will deal particularly with legislation necessary to make effective the provisions of the treaty and problems arising in connection with the provisions of the treaty.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m., on the bills and dates listed below:

Tuesday, March 14, 1939:

H. R. 180, H. R. 202, construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201, additional facilities for Panama Canal; H. R. 2667, construction of a Mexican Canal.

In listing the bills to be heard on March 14, 1939, House Joint Resolution 112 (TINKHAM), to create a commission to study and report on the feasibility of constructing the Mexican Canal, was inadvertently omitted from the notice.

This is to advise all interested parties that House Joint Resolution 112 will be considered at that time with the following bills: H. R. 180 (IZAC), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 202 (BLAND), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201 (BLAND), need for additional lock facilities at Panama; H. R. 2667 (TINKHAM), relative to the construction of a Mexican Canal.

Tuesday, March 21, 1939:

H. R. 137, H. R. 980, H. R. 1674, relating to annuities for Panama Canal construction force.

Thursday, March 23, 1939:

H. R. 139, H. R. 141, H. R. 142, H. R. 1819, miscellaneous Panama Canal bills.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

424. A letter from the president, Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia, transmitting a report on H. R. 2261, a bill to restore two former policemen to duty and to set aside the decision of the trial board; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

425. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the production of designs, plans, and specifications for public works in the interest of national defense; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

426. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting one copy of legislation passed by the Assembly of the Virgin Islands; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

427. A letter from the president of the Capital Transit Co., transmitting a correction in the annual report of the Capital Transit Co. for 1938; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

428. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize necessary facilities for the Coast Guard in the interest of national defense and the performance of its maritime police functions; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

429. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting three supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Navy Department for the fiscal year 1939 aggregating $321,700 and a legislative proviso affecting existing appropriations (H. Doc. No. 157); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

430. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the amount of $1,125,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to remain available until expended, for the War Department, for development of rotary wing and other aircraft authorized by the act approved June 30, 1938 (H. Doc. No. 156); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

431. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations amounting to $155,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to remain available until expended, for the Panama Canal, for completion, within the Canal Zone, of a memorial to Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals (H. Doc. No. 158); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

432. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Maritime Labor Board for the fiscal year 1939, amounting to $30,000 (H. Doc. No. 159); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

433. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1933 in the sum of $91.67, and supplemental estimates of appropriations for the fiscal years 1939 and 1940 in the sum of $57,067, amounting in all to $57,158.67, and two drafts of proposed provisions pertaining to existing appropriations for the Department of State (H. Doc. No. 161); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

434. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting proposed provision effecting the appropriation for the War Department for Army transportation (H. Doc. No. 162); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

435. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1939, amounting to $985,000, together with two drafts of proposed provisions pertaining to existing appropriations (H. Doc. No. 163); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

436. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of a provision of legislation pertaining to an existing appropriation for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1939 (H. Doc. No. 164); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

437. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a proposed provision pertaining to existing appropriations for the Post Office Department to provide funds required under certain appropriations to meet deficiencies or additional requirements for the fiscal years 1937, 1938, and 1939, aggregating $951,000 (H. Doc. No. 166); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

438. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1938 in the sum of $46,500, and supplemental estimates of appropriations for the fiscal years 1939 and 1940 in the sum of $2,151,000, amounting in all to $2,197,500, for the Department of Justice (H. Doc. No. 167); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

439. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a proposed provision affecting an existing appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1939, under the heading "International Production Control Committee" (H. Doc. No. 168); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

440. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Board of Tax Appeals for the fiscal year 1939 in the sum of $12,000 (H. Doc. No. 169); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

441. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Railroad Retirement Board for the fiscal year 1939 amounting to $325,000 (H. Doc. No. 170); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

442. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1939 amounting to $5,381,950 (H. Doc. No. 171); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

443. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Securities and Exchange Commission for the fiscal year 1939 amounting to $365,000 (H. Doc. No. 172); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

444. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 14, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on reexamination of Connecticut River between Hartford, Conn., and Springfield and Holyoke, Mass., requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted August 23, 1935 (H. Doc. No. 165); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. RABAUT: Committee on Appropriations. H. R. 4218. A bill making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 43). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLOOM: Committee on Foreign Affairs. H. R. 3655. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor," approved February 23, 1931; with amendment (Rept. No. 69). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LANHAM: Committee on Patents. H. R. 153. A bill to transfer jurisdiction over commercial prints and labels, for the purpose of copyright registration, to the Register of Copyrights; without amendment (Rept. No. 70). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. O'LEARY: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 2382. A bill to amend section 704 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, and to amend section 706 (a) of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936; with amendment (Rept. No. 71). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. S. 323. An act for the relief of E. C. Beaver, who suffered loss on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917; with amendment (Rept. No. 44). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 309. A bill for the relief of the estate of Dr. David O. Clements, deceased; without amendment (Rept. No. 45). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 312. A bill for the relief of Roland P. Winstead; with amendment (Rept. No. 46). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 329. A bill for the relief of R. L. Scott; without amendment (Rept. No. 47). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 727. A bill for the relief of Charles Dancause and Virginia P. Rogers; without amendment (Rept. No. 48). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 728. A bill for the relief of Catherine Ward; without amendment (Rept. No. 49). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 743. A bill for the relief of Eva C. Netzey, William G. Stuff, Lois Stuff, and Harry E. Ridley; and the estates of Clyde C. Netzey and Sarah C. Stuff; without amendment (Rept. No. 50). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 767. A bill for the relief of Benjamin Weisenberg; with amendment (Rept. No. 51). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 838. A bill for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Ray E. Nies; with amendment (Rept. No. 52). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1076. A bill for the relief of Floyd Gattton; with amendment (Rept. No. 53). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1183. A bill for the relief of Ben L. Kessinger and M. Carlisle Minor; with amendment (Rept. No. 54). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1229. A bill for the relief of Edwin L. Wade; with amendment (Rept. No. 55). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1279. A bill to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the Italian Star Line, Inc., against the United States; with amendment (Rept. No. 56). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1363. A bill for the relief of George Houston; with amendment (Rept. No. 57). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1429. A bill for the relief of William C. Reese; without amendment (Rept. No. 58). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1430. A bill for the relief of Hyman Ginsberg; with amendment (Rept. No. 59). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1836. A bill for the relief of Jack Nelson; with amendment (Rept. No. 60). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1857. A bill for the relief of Nell Mullen; with amendment (Rept. No. 61). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1907. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Lawrence Chlebeck; without amendment (Rept. No. 62). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 2086. A bill for the relief of Joseph Sciortino; with amendment (Rept. No. 63). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 2098. A bill for the relief of Katherine Patterson; without amendment (Rept. No. 64). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 2160. A bill for the relief of S. Uttal; with amendment (Rept. No. 65). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 2251. A bill for the relief of Russell Anderegg, a minor, and George W. Anderegg; with amendment (Rept. No. 66). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 2356. A bill for the relief of the International Grain Co., Inc.; without amendment (Rept. No. 67). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 3082. A bill for the relief of Frank Gedney; without amendment (Rept. No. 68). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 704) granting a pension to John B. Ellis; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2486) granting a pension to George Austin; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2500) granting a pension to Colonel L. Stacy; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2502) granting a pension to Arvil Roberts; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2503) granting a pension to Harrison Lykins; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2506) granting a pension to Perry Osborne; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2507) granting a pension to Stephen Hays; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2579) granting a pension to Thomas G. Solosky; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARRY:

H. R. 4219. A bill to reclassify salaries of employees in the custodial service of the Post Office Department and in the custodial service of the Treasury Department and the custodial service of the Department of the Interior of the United States, including all positions therein, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. BLAND:

H. R. 4220. A bill to amend the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1492), entitled "An act to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. COFFEE of Washington:

H. R. 4221. A bill to provide that the benefits of the naturalization laws shall not be denied any person because of his having received relief from a governmental agency; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. DINGELL:

H. R. 4222. A bill authorizing special-delivery messengers to be covered into the classified civil service as substitute clerks and carriers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

H. R. 4223. A bill extending the classified civil service to include special-delivery messengers; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. LEA:

H. R. 4224. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PIERCE of Oregon:

H. R. 4225. A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, with respect to orders and marketing agreements for hops; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RANDOLPH:

H. R. 4226. A bill to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States in establishing and developing demonstration centers in adult civic education during a 3-year period; to the Committee on Education.

H. R. 4227. A bill extending the classified executive civil service of the United States; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. SMITH of West Virginia:

H. R. 4228 (by departmental request). A bill to authorize the Director of the Geological Survey, under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, to acquire certain collections for the United States; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. SMITH of Virginia:

H. R. 4229. A bill authorizing the conveyance to the Commonwealth of Virginia a portion of the naval reservation known as Quantico in Prince William County, Va.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 4230. A bill authorizing the conveyance to the Commonwealth of Virginia of certain parcels of property in Fairfax, Warwick, Princess Anne, Prince George, and Roanoke Counties, Va., which are now portions of certain military reservations used for highway purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THORKELSON:

H. R. 4231. A bill for the construction of a fish hatchery at Lima, in Beaverhead County, Mont.; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. VOORHIS of California:

H. R. 4232. A bill to limit the traffic in war munitions, to promote peace, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE of Idaho:

H. R. 4233. A bill relating to certain entries for stock-raising homesteads; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

H. R. 4234. A bill to authorize the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Adams and Valley Counties, Idaho; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CELLER:

H. R. 4235. A bill to establish a United States Court of Appeals for Administration to receive, decide, and expedite appeals from Federal commissions, administrative authorities, and tribunals, in which the United States is a party or has an interest, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 4236. A bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McREYNOLDS:

H. R. 4237. A bill authorizing payment of the burial expenses and expenses in connection with last illness and death of native employees dying while serving in offices abroad of executive departments of the United States Government; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. MAHON:

H. R. 4238. A bill for the purpose of encouraging and fostering the development of civil aeronautics and air commerce in the United States by providing for a student-pilot training program and authorizing an appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FLAHERTY:

H. R. 4239. A bill to provide automobile liability for postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. RICHARDS:

H. R. 4240. A bill to provide for the relief of the Catawba Indians in South Carolina; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SCHULTE:

H. R. 4241. A bill to amend the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FLAHERTY:

H. R. 4242. A bill to amend the World War Veterans' Act, as amended; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. HARNESS:

H. R. 4243. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State of Indiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Wabash River at or near Peru, Ind.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HILL:

H. R. 4244. A bill to amend the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MILLER:

H. R. 4245. A bill to authorize a modification of the project for local flood protection at East Hartford, Conn.; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. BLAND:

H. R. 4246. A bill to authorize necessary facilities for the Coast Guard in the interest of national defense and the performance of its maritime police functions; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS:

H. R. 4247. A bill for the relief of Frank J. Hamann; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BALL:

H. R. 4248. A bill granting an increase of pension to Clara Prentiss Billard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARTON:

H. R. 4249. A bill for the relief of Stephen Kelen; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. BLOOM:

H. R. 4250. A bill for the relief of Emma H. Ridley; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4251. A bill for the relief of Chazkiel (or Charles) Lewkowski; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. D'ALESSANDRO:

H. R. 4252. A bill for the relief of J. George Bense Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DICKSTEIN:

H. R. 4253. A bill for the relief of Arthur Weiss; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DINGELL:

H. R. 4254. A bill granting a pension to Henry M. Tunis; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. DONDERO:

H. R. 4255. A bill granting a pension to Mary A. Beemer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EATON of New Jersey:

H. R. 4256. A bill for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FISH:

H. R. 4257. A bill for the relief of the estate of Bartholomew Lawler; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOFFMAN:

H. R. 4258. A bill granting a pension to Ella F. Lane; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JENSEN:

H. R. 4259. A bill granting a pension to Elizabeth Cooper; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

H. R. 4260. A bill for the relief of J. Milton Sweney; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON:

H. R. 4261. A bill for the relief of Maude Smith; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KEOGH:

H. R. 4262. A bill for the relief of Santo Giannetto; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4263. A bill for the relief of Domenico Spinelli; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LANDIS:

H. R. 4264. A bill for the relief of Corabell Wuensch, Jackie Lee Wuensch, and Mary Rainbolt; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MACIEJEWSKI:

H. R. 4265. A bill for the relief of Rachel or Rochel Bursk; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. MICHENER:

H. R. 4266. A bill granting a pension to Matilda Roach; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PIERCE of Oregon:

H. R. 4267. A bill for the relief of the Lamm Lumber Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4268. A bill for the relief of the Algoma Lumber Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4269. A bill for the relief of the Forest Lumber Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SCHIFFLER:

H. R. 4270. A bill for the relief of Cecilia Niland; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

H. R. 4271. A bill granting a pension to Mary Elizabeth Gutting; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TERRY:

H. R. 4272. A bill for the relief of Jessica J. Armour; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THORKELOSON:

H. R. 4273. A bill for the relief of Lu Knowles Maxey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TINKHAM:

H. R. 4274. A bill for the relief of Nick Marsoobian; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 4275. A bill for the relief of Harry Vrontas; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WARREN:

H. R. 4276. A bill granting an increase of pension to Estelle Rose Simmons; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. WELCH:

H. R. 4277. A bill for the relief of Paul Little; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1131. By Mr. CHIPERFIELD: Petition of Oneida (Ill.) Townsend Club, No. 1, urging the committee to report out House bill 2; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1132. By Mr. CURLEY: Resolution of the New York State Council of Parks, opposing claims of the Government to the ownership of lands under tidal waters of the State of New York or any other State; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

1133. By Mr. EATON of New Jersey: Resolution adopted by the mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield, opposing enactment of proposed legislation to make municipal bonds subject to Federal tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1134. By Mr. GILLIE: Petition of Gerald Schooley, of New Haven, Ind., and 100 residents of Fort Wayne, Ind., stating that they are not in favor of changing the Wagner Act; to the Committee on Labor.

1135. By Mr. HALLECK: Petition of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, Logansport, Ind., favoring legislation for control of the motion-picture industry, and urging that hearings be held thereon; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1136. Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the King's Daughters of Christian Church, Brook, Ind., favoring legislation for control of the motion-picture industry, and urging that hearings be held thereon; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1137. By Mr. HART: Petition of St. Patrick's Holy Name Society of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church of Jersey

City, N. J., expressing opposition to the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1138. Also, petition of the 64 priests of St. Michael's Monastery, Union City, N. J., expressing a protest against the lifting of the Spanish embargo; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1139. Also, petition of the New Jersey Catholic Daughters of America, numbering 15,000, Jersey City, N. J., expressing their desire to keep the Spanish embargo; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1140. Also, petition of St. Michael's High School Alumni of St. Michael's Roman Catholic Church, Jersey City, N. J., expressing their opposition to the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1141. Also, petition of Rev. Fr. Dominic J. Del Monte and the members of the Catholic War Veterans of Our Lady of Libera Post, No. 150, West New York, N. J., opposing the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1142. Also, petition of Rev. Walter A. Hennessey, pastor, and parishioners of the Immaculate Conception Roman Catholic Church, Secaucus, N. J., opposing the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1143. Also, petition of the members of St. Joseph's Benevolent Society, St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, Union City, N. J., opposing the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1144. Also, petition of the Keep the Spanish Embargo Committee, opposing the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1145. Also, petition of the Young Men's Independent Club of West New York, N. J., opposing the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1146. Also, petition of the members of the Guild of Catholic Lawyers of the Archdiocese of Newark, N. J., opposing the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1147. Also, petition of Rev. Thomas F. Burke, pastor, and parishioners of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, Jersey City, N. J., expressing their opposition to the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1148. Also, petition of the Federation of Holy Name Societies, Essex Division, Newark, N. J., expressing their opposition to the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1149. Also, petition of the Hudson County, N. J., board of directors, Ancient Order of Hibernians of America, Jersey City, N. J., expressing their opposition to the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1150. Also, petition of Rev. LeRoy E. McWilliams and the members of St. Michael's Holy Name Society of St. Michael's Roman Catholic Church of Jersey City, N. J., opposing the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1151. Also, petition of Rev. James A. Mackinson and parishioners of St. John's Roman Catholic Church, Jersey City, N. J., expressing their opposition to the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1152. Also, petition of Rev. Walter P. Artioli, pastor, and parishioners of Our Lady of Mount Carmel Roman Catholic Church, Jersey City, N. J., expressing their opposition to the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1153. Also, petition of Rev. William J. Carlin, pastor, and 4,000 parishioners of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, Jersey City, N. J., expressing their opposition to the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1154. Also, petition of Rev. A. Auth, pastor, and the parishioners of St. Nicholas' Roman Catholic Church, Jersey City, N. J., expressing their opposition to repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1155. Also, petition of Right Rev. R. J. Byer, rector, and parishioners of St. Augustine Roman Catholic Church, Union City, N. J., expressing their opposition to the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1156. Also, petition of the Holy Name Society of St. Nicholas' Church, Jersey City, N. J., expressing their opposition to the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1157. Also, petition of Rev. A. V. Dunn and parishioners of St. Anne's Roman Catholic Church, Jersey City, N. J., expressing their opposition to the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1158. Also, petition of the members of Hoboken Council, No. 159, Knights of Columbus, Hoboken, N. J., opposing the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1159. Also, petition of the members of the New Jersey State Council, Knights of Columbus, and Thomas C. Madigan, State advocate, Belmar, N. J., opposing the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1160. Also, petition of the instructresses of St. Nicholas' School, St. Nicholas' Roman Catholic Church, Jersey City, N. J., opposing the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1161. Also, petition of the members of Paulus Hook Council, No. 475, Knights of Columbus, Jersey City, N. J., opposing the repeal of the joint resolution imposing an embargo on the shipment of war materials to either party of the Spanish civil war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1162. By Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON: Petition of Sadie Hammett, secretary, Local No. 730, National Federation of Post Office Clerks, Corsicana, Tex., favoring House bill 3812; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1163. Also, petition of Rev. J. M. Youree, Hillsboro, Tex., opposing amending Social Security Act so as to include disabled and retired ministers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1164. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of the State Council of Parks, New York City, concerning any claim of the Government of the United States to the ownership of the lands under tidal waters of the State of New York or any other State; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

1165. By Mr. KRAMER: Resolution of the Woodcrest Democratic Club of Los Angeles, relative to the preservation of the Redwood Mountain area of big trees under national-park status; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

1166. Also, resolution of the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, relative to the enactment of legislation to secure all aged citizens against want or poverty by means of a system of Federal old-age pensions; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1167. By Mr. REED of Illinois: Petition of Marie E. Mock, Joliet, Ill., and 17 interested persons, recommending the adherence to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in the acts of August 31, 1935, and May 1, 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1168. By Mr. SHAFER of Michigan: Petition of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies of Kalamazoo and Vicksburg, Mich., protesting against exportation of war materials; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1169. By Mr. THORKE: Petition of the Legislature of the State of Montana, memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of the legislation for the creation and establishment of the Townsend recovery plan, and for benefits to be paid to all persons over the age of 60 years; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1170. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Rev. E. V. Headen, Pinellas Park, Fla., and others, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to churches of America under the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, who art the fountain of wisdom, whose statutes are good and gracious, and whose law of beauty in the universe reveals by night and day, in rhythmic folds, the streaming robe of an eternal glory: Descend to meet us on our upward way that we may learn the law that is Thy kingdom here on earth, our way of freedom, and our path to Thee.

Guide and direct the thoughts and aspirations of Thy servants here, that in the deliberations of this day they may ordain for the governance of our Nation only such things as shall please Thee, to the glory of Thy name and the safety, honor, and welfare of our people; that justice and truth being established among us we may lead the nations of the world into that enduring peace which alone is the fruit of righteousness. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 16, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	King	Russell
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Austin	Frazier	Logan	Sheppard
Bailey	George	Lucas	Shipstead
Bankhead	Gerry	Lundeen	Smathers
Barbour	Gibson	McKellar	Smith
Barkley	Gillette	McNary	Stewart
Bone	Glass	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Green	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Guffey	Miller	Tobey
Bulow	Gurney	Minton	Townsend
Burke	Hale	Murray	Truman
Byrd	Harrison	Neely	Tydings
Byrnes	Hatch	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Hayden	Nye	Van Nuys
Caraway	Herring	Overton	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Hill	Pepper	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Holman	Pittman	Wheeler
Connally	Hughes	Radcliffe	White
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	Wiley
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is unavoidably detained.

Mr. NORRIS. I announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on important business. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Hess, one of his secretaries.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE—AMENDED PETITION OF CONTEST

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amended petition of John Randolph Neal, Esq., of Knoxville, Tenn., contesting the election of the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] and making sundry charges and allegations relative thereto, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

RELIEF OF F. E. PERKINS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of F. E. Perkins, on account of a shortage in his accounts due to the peculations of a former employee in the governmental service, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

CHANGES IN TITLE V OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Labor suggesting certain changes in title V of the Social Security Act relating to the three parts of the title administered by the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Utah, favoring the enactment of the so-called Harrison-Thomas-Larrabee bill, providing Federal aid to education in the States, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

(See memorial printed in full when presented today by Mr. THOMAS of Utah.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Polish section, International Workers Order, of Hamtramck, Mich., praying that adequate funds be allotted to the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor to continue investigation of violations of civil liberties, etc., which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by officers and members of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Pinellas Park, Fla., protesting against any attempt to place the churches of America under the operation of the Social Security Act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Washington (D. C.) Branch of the American League for Peace and Democracy, protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, with specific reference to the so-called Walsh and Burke amendments, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAPPER presented a letter in the nature of a petition from officers of Farmers Union Local No. 606, of Ellis, Kans., praying for the enactment of the so-called Frazier-Lemke farm refinancing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of Wichita, Kans., praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in existing law and extend the law to include civil as well as international conflicts, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of members of Mary Rugles Local Union of the W. C. T. U., of Syracuse, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GERRY presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, protesting against the enactment of the so-called Neely bill, being the bill (S. 286) to impose taxes on fuel oil, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. GREEN on the 16th instant, p. 1453, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. THOMAS of Utah presented the following concurrent memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Memorializing Congress of the United States to approve the Harrison-Thomas-Larrabee bill

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah (the Governor concurring therein):

Whereas there is now pending before Congress a proposed measure known as the Harrison-Thomas-Larrabee bill which provides Federal support to the public schools of the several States for the purpose of aiding the States in the support of education; and

Whereas the sovereignty of the several States in matters pertaining to the administration and general control of the schools is in no wise jeopardized by the provision of said bill; and

Whereas the principle of equalization of educational opportunity has been recognized as sound in State and local administration and is believed to be equally as sound nationally: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah (the Governor concurring): That we urge the Congress of the United States to give approval to the Harrison-Thomas-Larrabee bill; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state forward copies of this memorial to the Congress of the United States and to the Utah delegation in Congress requesting the Utah delegation to present this resolution to the congressional committees studying said bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of California presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Assembly joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and Congress to enact legislation to secure all aged citizens against want or poverty by means of a system of Federal old-age pensions

Whereas the subject of adequate support for aged persons is a matter of deep concern and vital interest to the people of this State and of the United States; and

Whereas the present system of Federal and State aid to the aged results in differences and inequalities among the States in respect to amount of aid and conditions under which aid is obtainable by aged persons and thereby causes unrest among the people, many of whom migrate to those States in which the aid is most nearly adequate and most easily obtainable; and

Whereas such migration brings about an unbalanced population and increases the problem of unemployment and the burden of relief in those States to which migration occurs; and

Whereas efforts are being made in many States to solve the very urgent question of security for the aged by State law; and

Whereas the question of aid to the aged is Nation-wide in scope and can best be solved by Federal legislation dealing equally and on the same terms with all the people: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorialize the President and the Congress of the United States to enact such Federal legislation as will secure each aged citizen within the United States against want or poverty by an adequate, uniform, and liberal system of Federal pensions; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that such Senators and Members from California are respectfully urged to support such legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, favoring the making of provision for Kern River flood control, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(See joint resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 9th instant, p. 1268, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. JOHNSON of California also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, favoring the continuation of the W. P. A. Federal art project, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

(See joint resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 9th instant, p. 1268, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. JOHNSON of California also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California relative to Federal aid to State or Territorial veterans' homes, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(See joint resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 9th instant, p. 1268, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

PROHIBITION OF ADVERTISING OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate, and ask to have printed in the RECORD, the recommendations for legislation, made for the third consecutive year, by W. S. Alexander, Administrator of the Federal Alcohol Administration of the Treasury Department, in his annual report to Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The recommendations are as follows:

Radio advertising of alcoholic beverages; advertising in Sunday newspapers; advertising portraying women, children, and religious objects and insignia; and advertising referring to the tonic, food, or medicinal qualities of alcoholic beverages should be prohibited.

I bring again to the attention of the Congress the fact that the present law does not prohibit radio advertising of alcoholic beverages. Although for a number of years there has been little or no advertising of distilled spirits over the radio, beer and wine are being so advertised. Unless radio advertising of alcoholic beverages is prohibited by law, it is not unlikely that the distilled-spirits industry will desire to make use of this medium. I am convinced that radio advertising of alcoholic beverages is against good public policy and should be prohibited.

Mr. CAPPER. I have introduced a bill—S. 575—which would prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages in newspapers and over the radio, in interstate commerce, and express the hope that the Committee on Interstate Commerce will report it favorably to the Senate at an early date. The dry States are entitled to this assistance from the Federal Government.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 70) thereon.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia for the immediate consideration of the bill reported by him?

Mr. KING. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 78, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 78) submitted by Mr. BYRNES on the 13th instant was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures hereby is authorized to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,000 per annum until the end of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PITTMAN:

S. 1464. A bill to extend the facilities of the United States Public Health Service to active officers of the Foreign Service of the United States; and

S. 1465. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor," approved February 23, 1931; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(Mr. REYNOLDS introduced Senate bill 1466, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. LOGAN:

S. 1467. A bill for the relief of the Standard Oil Co., Inc., in Kentucky; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEELY:

S. 1468. A bill granting a pension to Josie Sebrell Rayburn; and

S. 1469. A bill granting a pension to Roy Wilcox; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

S. 1470. A bill to provide for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

S. 1471. A bill for the relief of Elmira Margaret Vanatta; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1472. A bill granting a pension to Roy C. Thompson, who served in the Navy under the name of Robert Fuller; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 1473. A bill to extend the time for filing claims for refunds of amounts collected under the Agricultural Adjustment Act; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 1474. A bill for the relief of Thomas G. Abbitt; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 1475. A bill granting a pension to Nancy Cornwell Williams (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1476. A bill to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 1477 (by request). A bill to repeal section 9 of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L. 450), as amended; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. GIBSON:

S. 1478. A bill for the relief of Haim Genishier, alias Haim Satyr; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 1479. A bill for the relief of J. H. Bowling; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1480. A bill granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Hugh Lenox Scott; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMATHERS:

S. 1481. A bill to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the district of New Jersey; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 1482. A bill to provide for the insurance by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of loans made by banks to business enterprises for the purpose of enabling such enterprises to increase their productions, extend their operations, and modernize their plants, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(Mr. SHEPPARD introduced Senate Joint Resolution 74, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and appears under a separate heading.)

AVIATION FACILITIES IN ALASKA

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, at the present time the Committee on Military Affairs is giving consideration to the question of providing for the United States of America an adequate national defense. This morning I am desirous of introducing a bill which will interest itself exclusively with the installation of aviation facilities in the far north, as a matter of fact, in the Arctic Ocean at a point located between the Lena Delta and the northern mainland of the territory of the United States which may be designated as that of Alaska.

I am thoroughly of the opinion that the fortifications and developments in which we should initially interest ourselves are those in contemplation by the Navy and the War Departments of the far north, particularly in the coastal regions of Alaska, in the Pacific Ocean, and in the Bering Sea.

Mr. President, before introducing this bill I desire to state that in my opinion we should improve our developments at the old capital of Alaska—Sitka—and in addition thereto at Seward; and then, proceeding farther into the Pacific, we should make greater developments—which have been agreed upon, I may add—at Unalaska and at Dutch Harbor.

In speaking of Dutch Harbor, I desire to bring to the attention of the Members of the Senate an island which lies approximately 1,008 miles north of Dutch Harbor, and which is designated as Wrangell Island. About the year 1867, according to my best recollection, this island was discovered, it is said by some historians, as a result of the Jeannette having been lost in Arctic waters. Among the members of that expedition endeavoring to make their way to the mainland of Siberia, Melville, the chief engineer of the Jeannette, in company with a number of the men of that ship, planted the first American flag upon Wrangell Island. It is said by those who are familiar with the history of the island that later, about 1881, it was rediscovered by those of the United States of America who were at that time in the Arctic upon some sort of an expedition in which they were interested and upon which they had been sent.

Mr. President, I claim that today the United States is the owner and the possessor of Wrangell Island. I am desirous of solidifying, if I may thus express it, America's possession of that island by way of bringing about the establishment of a naval base at Wrangell Island. Without reflecting upon the intelligence and the knowledge of the Members of this body, I dare say that very few of them have ever heard of Wrangell Island; yet I want to say to you, Mr. President, that the day will come when Wrangell Island will be for the United States of America one of the most important spots anywhere in the Western Hemisphere, not only from a defense standpoint but from the standpoint of the development of aviation, which is proceeding so phenomenally and rapidly at the present time.

In this connection I desire to take advantage of this opportunity of informing the Members of this body who are not thoroughly familiar with the location of Wrangell Island that Wrangell Island is on a direct line between the city of New York and Manila, the capital of the Philippine Commonwealth. In addition to that, I desire to inform the Members of the Senate who are interested in national defense and world-wide airplane communication that Wrangell Island is almost on a direct line—attributable to the contour of the earth—between the capital of the United States of America and the capital of the empire of the Orient, that is to say, Japan; in other words, Tokyo, the city to which I now refer.

Wrangell Island is said to be about 150 miles long by approximately 60 miles in width. It is accessible by boat approximately 3 months out of the year. It is accessible by airplane certainly every month of the year; but, of course, we understand that planes landing there would have to be equipped with skids.

Wrangell Island is the world's principal breeding ground of the polar bear. It is one of the principal breeding grounds of the walrus. It is the world's greatest breeding ground for the white fox. In addition thereto it is said by those who are familiar with that section of the world that Wrangell Island is a very important breeding ground, not of the hair seal—for we find many breeding grounds of that mammal in Labrador and regions farther north—but of the fur seal. Experts in geology have told us that there are large deposits of coal and iron ore on Wrangell Island.

I say that the United States today should provide itself in some manner with the opportunity of acquiring, without delay, peaceful possession of Wrangell Island. As a matter of fact, in 1924 Mr. Carl Lomen—one of the Lomen brothers, the reindeer owners of Alaska, who reside at Nome, Alaska, and are the owners of Lomen & Co., Inc.—made an arrangement with an expedition to the effect that he and those under his supervision would take charge of Wrangell Island. As a result thereof, according to the information I have, about 12 Eskimos and 1 white man were sent to Wrangell Island, where they remained for several months. Shortly after they arrived there, say after a period of several months, I am informed that those who were representing the Soviet Union sent a ship there and took from the island the Eskimos and the white man, and carried them southward to a point near Vladivostok in the Pacific. The white man died, and I am informed that a couple of the Eskimos died. Several years later the Russians decided that they wanted to provide themselves with the possession of this all-important island. As a result thereof they sent to Wrangell Island some 25 or 30 Tchuktches—that is to say, some 25 or 30 Siberian Eskimos—with several members of the Siberian army; and they are today in possession of that post, and are now maintaining there a sort of weather bureau.

I desire to impress upon the Members of this body who are interested in national defense that we have certainly been somewhat negligent—and I am not laying the blame to anybody—in not having heretofore acquired rightful and peaceful possession of Wrangell Island, because in truth and in fact by right of discovery we are the owners of Wrangell Island.

Only yesterday in the committee room of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, where was present our Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Louis Johnson, of West Virginia, mention was made of the newly-to-be-established aviation posts in the far North; and I inquired of him whether or not an airplane base was to be established at Fairbanks. He then told me that such was the plan, but that it remained for us to acquire a few hundred acres of land, so that we could proceed with the establishment of this very important base at Fairbanks. In that connection I recall that last summer I was in virtually every section of Alaska. I not only went to the capital of Alaska, which is visited annually by many thousand American tourists, but, in addition, I went on the Pacific to Seward, and to Dutch Harbor, and to Unalaska, and other points in the Aleutian group, which, I may mention in repetition at this time, extend to the island of Attu, hundreds upon hundreds of miles into the Pacific Ocean. It may be interesting for the Members of this body to learn that the island of Attu is many miles west of the Hawaiian group.

In mentioning the Hawaiian group I may say, for the information of the Members of the Senate who are interested in the national-defense program, some of whom are asking that we spend about $5,000,000 for the fortification of Guam, in oriental waters, that, in my opinion, if we fortify Attu, the most western of the Aleutian group, we shall have gone sufficiently far into the Pacific Ocean. I say that because, if we go farther, we shall be getting out of the sphere of influence of the United States of America; and if we fortify Guam, we shall be getting into that territory merely for the purpose of pulling Great Britain's chestnuts out of the fire at Hong Kong, at Canton, and in China. We shall be seated there at Guam merely for the purpose of pulling out of the fire the chestnuts of the French Republic in Indochina, a section in which the French are vitally interested at the present time as a result of the Japanese having forcibly occupied the island of Hainan, which is only a few steps from Hong Kong and only a few miles from Saigon, the capital of Indochina.

So at this time I avail myself of the opportunity of saying that when the national-defense bill shall come to the Senate I, for one, even if the only one in this body, will do my utmost to defeat any move to expend a single American dollar on the fortification of Guam, because in making expenditures of money there we would be getting into troubled waters, and so surely as that we sit and stand here today we will live to see the day when we will regret that we ever expended any money there.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am astonished to hear the Senator's statement. Is not the Senator in favor of saving the world? We have people who want to save the world all over again.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am in favor of saving the 130,000,000 people of the United States. I am in favor of taking care of the men, women, and children who are inhabitants of the United States, and I am in favor of letting every other country in the world take care of its people. That is my answer to the question.

I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I rose merely to ask the Senator to yield to me for the purpose of suggesting that all this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. There has grown up in the Senate in the last few weeks a habit of Senators introducing bills during the morning hour and making speeches with respect to those bills. I have not objected to that, and I do not object now; but as the matter now being referred to will come up in connection with the national-defense bill when it arrives in the Senate from the committee, it strikes me, when Senators are waiting to introduce bills and offer resolutions, that the morning hour should not be interrupted by a discussion of the sort which is now under way.

If the Senator would forego the discussion for the present, I would appreciate it, because the morning hour is set apart for the introduction of bills, the offering of resolutions, and other routine business, and it is not customary for Senators to address themselves to bills they introduce when they introduce them, which can be done only by unanimous consent. If the Senator will keep that in mind and not embark upon a long discussion, I should appreciate it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly; and I am about to conclude. My reason for introducing myself upon this hour was, first, that I am leaving Washington at 1 o'clock for Norfolk, Va.

Mr. BARKLEY. I regret that very much. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. I regret it myself, because I shall be very lonesome away from the mellow and sunny smiles of my colleagues in the Senate. I am to deliver an address in Norfolk tonight as the result of an invitation extended to me by people of Virginia, North Carolina's sister State.

Secondly, I took this opportunity because I knew that the Members of this body were greatly interested in the national-defense program, and I knew that they would be glad to hear something about Wrangell Island, because very few people ever heard of Wrangell Island.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield, I am sure we have all enjoyed the Senator's discussion of Wrangell Island, but what I was trying to avoid was getting into a wrangle over Guam. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, I was merely putting the Senate on guard, in view of the fact, so thoroughly am I interested in protecting Uncle Sam, that I expect to speak for several days with reference to Guam when the matter comes up for consideration. Now that we have the old fellow back home, I want to keep him here, and I want to keep his nose out of the business of other nations. We have the old man here. We love him, and we are going to keep him here at our fireside.

Mr. McKELLAR rose.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to the senior Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator very much. I merely wanted to introduce a bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is perfectly all right. I am glad to provide the Senator with time sufficient for that purpose.

In conclusion, I wish to send to the desk the bill to which

I have referred, which I am introducing, and I take this opportunity of reading the opening paragraph:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to establish and develop naval aviation facilities, with which shall be included the authority to purchase or otherwise acquire land and to construct buildings and accessories at Wrangell Island.

Which is the island I have just described.

I thank the Members of the Senate for having indulged me for these few minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill introduced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 1466) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has referred to national defense, and, inspired by his statement, it is my purpose to introduce a bill providing for the establishment of a Department of National Defense, and for other purposes. I had expected to introduce the bill this morning, but will wait until the next session of the Senate to do so.

There is confusion growing out of the lack of coordination upon the part of the various arms having to do with national defense. Many governments have consolidated their various military agencies and now have but one department in charge of national defense. They found that having three independent agencies or departments handling this one activity resulted in overlapping and more or less confusion, and they have therefore consolidated the Army, Navy, and aviation activities and placed them under one head.

The bill which I propose to introduce provides for the creation of a Department of National Defense, with assistant secretaries, one dealing with what we denominate military matters, one dealing with naval affairs, and a third dealing with aviation activities. In my opinion, one department of the character I have indicated would make for economy, and certainly for efficiency. I shall present a bill to accomplish that result, and I hope that it will receive favorable consideration.

CENTENARY OF THE BIRTH OF FRANCES E. WILLARD

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this is the year in which occurs the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Frances E. Willard. Throughout the year her birth is being celebrated in this country and abroad. A movement is on foot to have a special stamp issued and sold throughout the year, and I am introducing a joint resolution providing for this action, which I ask to have set out in the Record at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Texas will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, will be printed in the Record.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 74) authorizing the issuance of a special postage stamp in honor of Frances E. Willard was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to issue a special series of postage stamps of the denomination of 3 cents, of such design and for such period as he may determine, commemorative of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Frances E. Willard, one of our greatest pioneer leaders for advancement of women and protection of the home. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the resolution.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, exactly 34 years ago today the United States Senate and also the United States House of Representatives suspended ordinary business to pay tribute to the memory of a great woman. On that day the Congress of the United States accepted from the Commonwealth of Illinois a statue of Frances E. Willard to be placed in Statuary Hall in the Nation's Capitol. By law each State is permitted to present statues of two distinguished citizens. The statue of Frances E. Willard is the only one of a woman to be found in this Hall. But as we study the life and work of this eminent woman we no longer wonder why the great Commonwealth of Illinois should choose a woman as one of its two representatives in so distinguished a setting.

Born in New York State, of New England ancestry, reared on a farm near Janesville in Wisconsin, Frances Willard spent most of her adult life in Illinois. Even as a child she exhibited those principles and philosophies which were to make her known throughout the world as the "uncrowned queen of purity and temperance." She attended college at Evanston, Ill., and was graduated with honors. She rounded out her education by travel and study in Europe and then returned to Evanston and became president of the Evanston College for Ladies, the first female college entirely under the control and direction of women. This college was later to become the woman's department of Northwestern University, and Frances Willard became its dean and professor of aesthetics.

It was in 1874 that Miss Willard resigned her connection with Northwestern University, and the same year marked her active entry into the work which claimed the major portion of the rest of her life—temperance. She became president of the Illinois Woman's Christian Temperance Union and her executive ability and faculty for organization permitted her to organize thousands of women throughout the United States in a Nation-wide crusade. Her influence and the fame of her deeds spread like magic and during her active life she probably addressed a larger number of public audiences than any woman or man of her time.

Miss Willard's work in the cause of temperance seems to overshadow, in the public mind, her history-making accomplishments in other fields. She was not only an advocate and untiring worker in behalf of temperance, but she was an ardent campaigner for purity in politics, equal rights for women, and, as a means to secure political reform, woman suffrage.

It was in 1888 that Frances Willard realized the need for a clearing house of women's activities in the United States and the world. She brought 5,000 women together in Washington, D. C., where the National Council of Women was formed, with Miss Willard as president.

One of Miss Willard's preeminent faculties was her ability to anticipate the future. Think of it! Sixty years ago hers was a lone voice in the wilderness pleading for an 8-hour day, for courts of conciliation and arbitration, and for justice as opposed to oppression and greed. While with the Evanston College for Ladies she initiated the honor system in the school government, thus anticipating by an entire generation the self-government now popular in all leading American educational institutions.

This year the Nation and the world join in celebrating the centenary of Frances Willard's birth. And it is most fitting and proper that we should pause in our everyday endeavors at this time and try to take stock of the good which Miss Willard's life and career brought to this world.

We consider her life as a woman of culture, a woman suffragist, an educator, and the fountainhead of one of the greatest movements in all history, we realize that there really is no method by which we can measure all the good Miss Willard did. The hundreds of thousands of women organized in the cause of temperance are but a suggestion of the real results of her activities. Probably the highest benefits of her life must remain intangible. No one dares argue but that she made purer the moral atmosphere of the United States and the world. She made people cleaner minded and saner; millions of wives and children bless her name, and as long as this world shall exist the name of Frances E. Willard will shine with an ever-increasing brightness.

In a day when a woman's place was narrowly circumscribed she dared to preach and lead womankind into the paths of emancipation now enjoyed. She became truly "the mother of all mothers, the sister of all wives, to every child a lover in her sacrifice of her life to the happiness of others."

It is not so strange, after all, that the people of the State of Illinois should choose a woman of her character to honor before the entire world. Her life and work were dedicated not only to Americans but to all humanity. And Illinois, in which State she spent 40 years of her life, in so honoring Frances Willard has honored all womankind.

Womankind has never had a more staunch supporter than Frances Willard. She was the first to organize women into a united front. It was her poet friend, John Greenleaf Whittier, who wrote of her:

She knew the power of banded ill,
But felt that love was stronger still,
And organized for doing good
The world's united womanhood.

The next time you pass the statue of Frances E. Willard, stop and ponder the inscription upon its base. There you will find these hallowed words:

Ah! it is women who have given the costliest hostages to fortune. Out into the battle of life they have sent their best beloved, with fearful odds against them.

Oh, by the dangers they have dared; by the hours of patient watching over beds where helpless children lay; by the incense of 10,000 prayers wafted from their gentle lips to Heaven, I charge you give them power to protect along life's treacherous highway those whom they have so loved.

Frances E. Willard wrote those words many years ago. They have been the inspiration and the call to action of women ever since her time.

Thirty-four years ago today, Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, joining, as a Member of Congress, in the acceptance of Miss Willard's statue in Statuary Hall, declared:

The home is the basic unit of our Christian civilization. It is the foundation upon which our free institutions rest. Upon its integrity, purity, and character the character and quality of our civilization depend. It is a holy shrine. Whatever profanes it pollutes the sacred temple of liberty itself. Whoever defends and ennobles it insures to our children and our children's children the blessings of freedom and the enduring of a "government of the people, for the people, and by the people." A civilization based upon a lecherous and debauched home is rotten to the core.

Statesmen, warriors, and patriots may strive and build and achieve, but all their striving, building, and achieving is in vain, even "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal," if it disregards the eternal moral verities and does not conserve the true happiness and the highest welfare of mankind. This divinely gifted woman bent every energy, shaped every purpose, and devoted every aspiration of a godly life to the consummation of this happiness and welfare. It is fitting that her work should be thus recognized.

When Illinois decided to place another statue in the Capitol Hall of Fame, many outstanding names came to mind. Probably no State in the Union has been more fortunate in this respect than Illinois. There were Lincoln, Douglas, Grant, Logan, and a host of others.

I repeat that it is not surprising that the people of Illinois should choose Frances Willard for a distinction like this. She was a dreamer, but she was also a doer. In every land women rise and call her blessed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement concerning Frances Willard made by former Senator Cullom, of Illinois, and a list of groups which will participate in celebration of the centenary of Frances E. Willard be printed in the RECORD at this point.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

Thirty-four years ago Senator Cullom, of Illinois, said:

"The State of Illinois presents to the United States the statue of a great woman, whose name is familiar wherever the English language is spoken.

"The Senate has frequently suspended its ordinary business to pay tribute to the memory of eminent statesmen who have passed away. * * * For the first time in the history of the Senate a day has been set apart that we may talk of a woman. * * *

"Miss Willard was a worthy representative of her sex, known to the world for her devotion to the cause of temperance and for her efforts in the interest of the human race. * * *

"She was not only an advocate of temperance but of all other beneficial, progressive reforms—purity in politics, equal rights for women, and, as a means to secure political reform, woman suffrage. She believed that there is such a power in the influence of women as, if it were exerted right, would shake the kingdom to the center."

"Frances Willard was recognized as an able public speaker, perhaps the greatest woman speaker in the country. She had a rare gift of eloquence and magnetism which drew thousands into the temperance ranks. During her years of active life she probably addressed a larger number of public audiences than any man or woman of her time. * * *

"I am proud that the State of Illinois was the home of Frances E. Willard * * *."

"Illinois especially mourned the death of Miss Willard. It was in Illinois, in the vicinity of Chicago, that she commenced her great work and had lived for more than 40 years, and it was to Illinois that her remains were brought, and it was there that the most touching tributes of respect were paid to her. Her body lay in state at Willard Hall, in the Women's Temple, in Chicago, where it was viewed by more than 20,000 people * * *."

"The world has been better because Frances E. Willard lived. She devoted her life unselfishly to the cause of humanity, and she brought sobriety into the homes of untold thousands; and at her death she left an organization that has been and will continue to be a potent factor for good in the world."

"The State of Illinois, in presenting the statue to the United States to be placed in Statuary Hall among the figures of the greatest men that have lived in the United States, has honored itself, has justly honored a great woman, and has paid a tribute to all American womanhood."

GROUPS WHICH WILL PARTICIPATE IN CELEBRATION OF CENTENARY OF FRANCES E. WILLARD

Alpha Phi Sorority, American Library Association, Daughters of the American Revolution, General Federation of Business and Professional Women, International Bureau Against Alcoholism, Library of Congress, Methodist Episcopal Church, National Council of Women, National Temperance and Prohibition Council, National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Northwestern University, Women's National Radio Committee, and Willard Sorority.

International: Alpha Phi International Fraternity; The Sorbonne, University of Paris; Ruben Blanc, France; Blue Cross, France; International Council of Women; International Temperance Union; International Bureau Against Alcoholism; World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union (54 countries).

With Susan B. Anthony and May Wright Sewall, Frances Willard was cofounder of the National Council of Women.

She founded the first international organization of women, the World's W. C. T. U., still the largest international organization of women.

She was a charter member of the Daughters of the American Revolution and was a founder of its first local unit, the Chicago Chapter.

She was the second president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, serving for 19 years. She was likewise second president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, serving for 7 years. She was president of the Alpha Phi Sorority (the national organization). Founder of the Illinois Presswomen's Association.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. McKellar, the Committee on Education and Labor was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1254) to extend certain provisions of the National Housing Act, as amended, and it was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

NATIONAL RESOURCES BOARD—AMENDMENT

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1265) to establish a Department of Public Works, to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment and Relief and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. TRUMAN submitted an amendment proposing that two persons employed in the office of each Senator and one person employed in the office of each Member of the House of Representatives, to be designated by the Senator or Member in whose office they are employed, shall be entitled to receive a mileage and per diem allowance for going to and returning from each session of the Congress, etc., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 4218, the legislative appropriation bill, 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULES—AMENDMENT

Mr. BYRNES submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with the provisions of rule 40 of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz: At the proper place, to insert the following:

"Sec. 6. No part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, shall be available for the payment of enlistment allowance to enlisted men for reenlistment within a period of 3 months from date of discharge as to reenlistments made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, notwithstanding the applicable provisions of sections 9 and 10 of the act entitled 'An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service,' approved June 10, 1922 (37 U. S. C. 13, 16)."

Mr. BYRNES also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 3743, the independent offices appropriation bill, 1940, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BYRNES appears above.)

DUTIES OF UNDER SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. ASHURST, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, dated February 8, 1939, requesting the enactment of legislation to give the Under Secretary of Agriculture authority to perform such duties as may be required by law or prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and involving discretion, and the letter, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PRESERVATION OF THE CHARACTER OF THE REPUBLIC—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BAILEY

[Mr. BYRD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator BAILEY on December 10, 1930, at the annual dinner of the Southern Society of New York City, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE ADMINISTRATION'S FOREIGN POLICY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LEE

[Mr. LEE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the foreign policy of the administration delivered by him February 12, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

LINCOLN DAY ADDRESS BY SENATOR BRIDGES

[Mr. GIBSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on Abraham Lincoln delivered by Senator BRIDGES on February 11, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER

[Mr. MEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article on Mr. Justice Frankfurter by Harry H. Schlacht, published in the East Side News, Saturday, January 7, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the next order of business is the calling of the calendar under rule VIII.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD and as a part of the remarks I am now making, a statement made by me concerning Senate bill 1268, proposing to amend the Communications Act of 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Missouri in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR WHITE ON SENATE BILL 1268, PROPOSING TO AMEND THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

This bill, when studied and when its implications are understood, will meet the general condemnation it deserves.

In a letter dated January 23, addressed to the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, the President states that he is thoroughly dissatisfied with the present legal framework and administrative machinery of the Commission; that legislation is necessary to effectuate a satisfactory statutory reorganization; that legislation is also needed to lay down clear congressional policies on the substantive side, so clear that the new administrative body will have no difficulty in administering or in interpreting them; and that he hopes the Interstate Commerce Committee will consider the advisability of such new legislation.

The President does not suggest the changes in organization or the policies he believes to be desirable, but he states that he has asked Chairman McNinch to give Senator WHEELER his (Mr. McNinch's) recommendations.

Now, it should be noted first that the present legal framework and administrative machinery of the Commission with which the President expresses dissatisfaction is in no small part the handiwork of Chairman McNinch and, next, that in the 20 months or thereabouts since Mr. McNinch was confirmed as chairman there have come from the Commission no recommendations as to policies on the substantive side. On the contrary, efforts to undertake a congressional study of principles and of policies by the Congress have been blocked by Commission and executive hostility.

I presume to assert that these recommendations of Mr. McNinch do not reflect the considered judgment of any person informed as to our communication problems and do not make contribution to the communication services of our country.

This McNinch bill discloses two major purposes. It first provides for a three-man Commission. This proposal challenges every previous declaration of the Congress on this subject, and it repudiates the heretofore expressed opinions of Mr. McNinch himself.

The Radio Act of 1927 created a five-man Commission. That number was then considered by the Congress necessary to effectively deal with the problems of radio alone. When the Communications Act of 1934 passed the Senate it provided for five Commissioners. This reflected a second judgment by the Senate that a smaller Commission than five was not desirable. The House amended this Senate bill of 1934 by increasing the number of Commissioners to seven. The legislation in the House was in charge of Mr. RAYBURN, of Texas, then chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of that body and now majority leader. The report to the House was submitted by Mr. RAYBURN. This House judgment as to the minimum number of Commissioners was later accepted by the Senate and made its own judgment. The pending McNinch bill now asserts both Houses of Congress to have been wrong in their judgments and proposes to reduce the number from seven, to which the Congress had increased it from five, to three members. So far as I am advised, neither the Commission as a whole nor the communication interests affected, nor other informed or affected persons, have ever recommended such a reversal of policy.

It is significant that at the very time Chairman McNinch would have the Congress accept his judgment that three men will better understand and more efficiently administer the work of the Commission than seven Commissioners he is urging upon the Appropriations Committee of the House as a vital necessity an increase of 63 in the other personnel of the Commission. He would have us believe that, while the increased work of the Commission demands increased personnel in all other directions, the membership of the Commission should be reduced from seven to three. It is important to recall, too, that in October 1937, in referring to the abolishment of the three divisions of the Commission theretofore set up, Mr. McNinch said "the aggregate wisdom and judgment of seven minds is surely greater than any two or three of the seven."

But Mr. McNinch now urges that the burden of knowledge and of decision in the entire field of communications shall be placed upon three Commissioners. I appeal from Mr. McNinch of 1939 to Mr. McNinch of 1937. I am strongly opposed to a three-man Commission. An increase in the Commission's present numbers is to be preferred to a reduction.

The second major purpose of the bill seems to be the authorization of the appointment of three administrative assistants for three general divisions of communications.

No change in law is necessary to authorize the creation of three divisions or the designation of three administrative assistants. The Communications Act of 1934 specifically authorizes the establishment of divisions, the fixing of their functions, and the appointment of a director for each. It does not, however, place the divisions or the directors thereof "under the administrative supervision of the Chairman" as does this McNinch proposal and this is its offense in the view of those sponsoring the pending bill.

When Mr. McNinch became Chairman, he promptly proposed an order abolishing the three divisions existing under the authority of the 1934 act. His theory, as then expressed by him, was that seven members could not be divided in this way; and that experience had shown that these divisions were really only composed of two Commissioners because of (and I quote Mr. McNinch) "the impracticability of the Chairman keeping himself currently informed and attending meetings has resulted in two members of the Commission carrying an unnecessary load of responsibility and exercising an undesirably large portion of the powers and functions of the Commission" and because "the aggregate wisdom and judgment of seven minds is surely greater than any two or three of the seven." Mr. McNinch, having abolished divisions but a short while back, now proposes to recreate them but as reestablished each division is to be in charge of an administrative assistant to act "under the administrative supervision of the Chairman." Manifestly if this assistant is an employee, the decisions of the Chairman will be his decisions. And what may this assistant pass upon? Anything and everything which the board may assign or refer to him save only "the making of final decisions in contested proceedings involving the taking of testimony at public hearings." In the broadcasting division included in his powers would be the making of rules and regulations, the classification of radio stations, prescribing the nature of the service to be rendered by each class, the allocation of frequencies to stations, the regulation of the kind of apparatus, special regulations for network broadcasting, the granting of construction permits, licenses, renewals, modifications, assignments, and many other authorities. These were as to the powers which might be conferred on this Chairman-dominated assistants in the other divisions.

Who wants one man to have such powers subject to the doubtful remedy of review by the Commission of three of whom one would be the Chairman from whose decision the appeal is filed?

But if it is urged that no such broad powers will be vested in the assistant who is to act under the supervision of the Chairman, then it follows that all these problems, in all the fields of communication, must be determined by the Commission itself. In this event we face the fact that three men who formerly, according to Mr. McNinch, could not do that part of the tasks assigned to a single division, must now assume all the burdens of the communication problem in its vastly increased weight and complexity. This is a burden which three men cannot meet.

In 1937, according to Mr. McNinch, "the aggregate wisdom and judgment of seven minds is surely greater than any two or three of the seven." Can it be that in 1939 this is no longer true? Must we now understand whatever seven minds might have had of knowledge in 1937 that in this good year of 1939 the aggregate wisdom and judgment of three men is greater than that of the seven? The plain truth of the matter is that the aggregate wisdom and judgment of seven men is not now wanted. Mr. McNinch, in the name of cooperation, demands the yielding to his direction of the experience, knowledge, judgment, and conscience of the other Commissioners. And it is because some Commissioners will not thus unconditionally surrender that they are to be legislated out of office. A legislative purge of Commissioners of independence and courage is now demanded.

Stripped of all pretense, this bill, in disregard of all previous congressional purpose and drafted without present congressional study, proposes, through his statutory administrative control of the division assistants and through his influence as Chairman, to vest in one man authority over the vast communication interests of this country and in particular a life-and-death power over broadcasting, one of the two means of reaching the mind and influencing the thought of America. The bill makes contribution only to the political efficiency of the Commission. It does this through the centralized power hereinbefore referred to, and through the provision transferring all officers and employees of the present Commission, other than the members thereof whose offices are abolished, from their present protected civil-service status to a temporary status. It serves no good end whatsoever. The bill is crude in draft, wrong in principle, political in purpose, and carries in its terms and implications a sinister threat to all our communication facilities and to the country itself.

No statutory change is necessary in order to make effective the framework and administrative machinery of the Commission. It does require legislation to abolish the present Commission of seven and to create a Commission of three and to centralize power in the Chairman as is now proposed. It does require legislation to force out of office men who think for themselves and who act independently and courageously. These are the real reasons for the McNinch bill.

It is my purpose to introduce in the near future alternative proposals which will not be subject to the objections found in this McNinch bill but which will contribute to a more effective legal framework and administrative machinery than the Commission now labors under.

COOPERATION BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND BUSINESS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, for months, even for years, the leaders of business and industry have been calling upon the administration for cooperation, an end to name calling, for a breathing spell, and for a general period of fairness and good feeling.

Some prominent officials have been belittled and demeaned for their aggressive attitudes in calling a spade by its proper name in colorful and vigorous language.

Frankly, I have long been one of those who have advocated a closer spirit of cooperation. I have been perfectly willing to, and have on some measures pending in the recent sessions of the Congress made concessions, or what I thought were concessions, in an effort to inspire and bring about a better feeling between the administration and the business interests of the country. It seems to me that the welfare of the country demands better understanding and closer cooperation between Government and business and all other interests to which the welfare of our country is so closely tied. I have sought to help in some way to bring that condition about. I have never indulged in the practice of attributing evil and unworthy motives to anyone in or out of Government. The motives and patriotism of our officials and of the leading businessmen of the Nation have never been questioned by me. In fact, dealing in personalities and bitter invectives seems to me to be unwise and tends to defeat the aims and purposes for which we are all striving.

I have not changed my thinking in the least as to the wisdom and desirability of a better feeling on the part of Government and business generally. I believe in cooperation; I believe in sympathetic understanding of all our problems. I strongly believe that the problems which confront our country today are so great and so grave that they will never be solved and will never be successfully met until we can have that feeling of understanding and the desire for true cooperation which many are seeking. I shall not abate my efforts to do everything I can in a reasonable and proper way to bring about closer and better feeling among all who are in any way concerned in arriving at an honest solution of the vexatious problems of this day.

Mr. President, entertaining these thoughts, which are not new by any means, but have been with me for a long time, it will be understood how I felt a day or two ago when I received a letter from a very good friend of mine in the State of New Mexico enclosing an editorial which I shall presently present to the Senate. He is a man in whom I have every confidence. I appreciate his personal friendship very highly. My remarks today do not refer to the writer of the letter. They refer to the editorial which he had clipped from The Traffic World, a publication which calls itself "an independent national journal of transportation; a working tool for traffic men, rail, water, motor vehicle, air, material handling, and distribution." The issue to which I refer bears date of January 28, 1939, only a few days ago. The editorial is headed "Another Rotten Appointment."

It relates mainly to Mr. Amlie, recently nominated by the President of the United States to a position on the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is not my purpose today to discuss that nomination. I may or I may not vote for confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Amlie. I have not decided how I shall vote on that question. That indecision is based upon the simple fact that I have not as yet obtained the adequate information which I desire before I cast my vote. However, in connection with his appointment, or that of any other man, I certainly shall not proceed upon the premise that the President of the United States has made "another rotten appointment."

Mr. President, I recently asked the Research Bureau of the Library of Congress to assemble for me all the speeches which have been made by Mr. Amlie since he has been a Member of Congress. They are on my desk at this time. I have had them condensed and digested. There is also on my desk a long list of so-called questions and answers, supposed to expound the political philosophy of Mr. Amlie. The committee hearings have not as yet been printed. I have asked for copies of the hearings. When that material is assembled, I expect diligently to study it and arrive at as honest a conclusion as I can as to the fitness of Mr. Amlie for that office; and I shall vote on his nomination exactly as I please.

It is said that Mr. Amlie is opposed to the capitalistic system. I have read that statement in the press. It is also said that he would overthrow our form of government. If that be true, certainly I shall not vote for the confirmation of Mr. Amlie. While he has a perfect right to entertain any views of government he may desire and to expound his theory of government, in my opinion, a person entertaining such views should not occupy an official position in which he is called upon to deal primarily with a great industry which, under our present system, is altogether dependent upon the maintenance of the capitalistic system. Further than that I have not thought as to Mr. Amlie, and I am not discussing at this time his nomination or his confirmation. That question will come up later.

However, I am discussing the editorial entitled "Another Rotten Appointment." No industry has sought the good graces of Government more than has the transportation industry. No industry requires the good graces of Government more than does the transportation industry; and no industry can benefit more from a friendly, sympathetic understanding of its problems, and from an honest effort to solve those problems, than can the transportation industry.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Did I correctly understand the Senator from New Mexico to say that if he should find from his study of the speeches, writings, and other utterances of nominee Amlie that the nominee does not believe in the capitalistic system the Senator would vote against his confirmation?

Mr. HATCH. That was the statement the Senator made. If Mr. Amlie is opposed to the capitalistic system, I said—and I meant it—that I do not believe a man entertaining such opinions should be in the position of having to deal with a system such as the transportation system.

Mr. BURKE. I venture to say that the Senator will have no difficulty in reaching his decision as to how to vote, because the nominee makes it very clear that he does not believe at all in the profit system and would change it just as quickly as it can be done.

Mr. HATCH. That is aside from the question I am discussing at this time. I did not intend to leave any doubt as to what I thought about the point the Senator from Nebraska has raised. I am very firm in my convictions on that subject. However, I am equally firm in my view as to editorials such as the one I am now discussing, which is entitled "Another Rotten Appointment" by the President of the United States.

Continuing my remarks, no industry stands to lose more from an attitude of bitterness, hatred, and antagonism than does the transportation industry of this country. Probably it is true, Mr. President, that the leaders of that great industry earnestly desire a real era of good feeling and understanding, and that they seek cooperation. Yet a journal claiming to be devoted to the welfare of that industry broadcasts throughout the Nation an editorial entitled "Another Rotten Appointment."

What else does the editorial say? I read:

President Roosevelt's record of bad appointments is piling up. To mention only the worst and most important of them, there was Hugo Black, for the Supreme Court—

I happen to be one who believes in the ability and integrity of Mr. Justice Black. However, he is not an issue before the country today. The high office he holds can not be benefited by dragging his name even through the stately and dignified Chamber of the United States Senate, let alone besmirching and publishing that name in such a manner in such an editorial. The very interests which the journal claims to serve may well depend upon the future decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. The name of Mr. Justice Black should not be so branded and so used.

The author continues:

There was Murphy, as Attorney General—another insult to right-thinking people.

Later I shall return to Attorney General Murphy. I continue with the quotation:

Then there was Harry Hopkins, for Secretary of Commerce—a joke, and a reward for political administration of relief.

I shall not quote further from the editorial at this time, but I ask unanimous consent that the entire editorial be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the Chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico? The Chair hears none, and the editorial may be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Traffic World of January 28, 1939]

ANOTHER ROTTEN APPOINTMENT

President Roosevelt's record of bad appointments is piling up. To mention only the worst and most important of them, there was Hugo Black, for the Supreme Court—an insult to the bar and to the whole Nation; there was Murphy, as Attorney General—another insult to right-thinking people; then there was Harry Hopkins, for Secretary of Commerce—a joke, and a reward for political administration of relief. Now, when the country needs, as it never did before, members of the Interstate Commerce Commission who have some conception of the transportation problem and some capacity to deal with it, he sends to the Senate the nomination of a man to be a member of that Commission who is not known, among those identified with transportation, to have any qualification for the position, but who is known as an advocate of Government ownership. The President has often been reported as saying he was against Government ownership of the railroads, except as a last resort, yet he appoints to the body that regulates the railroads a man who does not believe in private ownership. It is impossible to reconcile such things as that.

The nominee, Thomas R. Amlie, is a "lame-duck" Wisconsin Progressive Congressman. He served in the House in the Seventy-second, Seventy-fourth, and Seventy-fifth Congresses and was defeated in the Wisconsin primaries last year for the United States senatorial nomination on the Progressive ticket. He has been active "in the movement for new political alignment" and a movement "to coordinate the liberal groups of the Nation." The quoted phrases are from the former Congressman's approved biography in the Congressional Directory. Perhaps the President felt that, with the need for coordination in the transportation field, a coordinator of "the liberal groups" could do a little coordinating for the railroads!

This nomination should be rejected by the Senate. Protest against its confirmation should be made to every Senator. The President should be informed that he has made the worst sort of appointment. By it he reveals either an utter lack of understanding of the transportation problem or a "don't care" attitude.

Mr. HATCH. Neither shall I discuss the appointment of Mr. Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce, except to say that it happens that at this moment, while this very editorial is being circulated throughout the country, Harry Hopkins is devoting every bit of ability which he possesses to bringing about better feeling and a spirit of cooperation between Government and industry, including even the transportation industry itself.

Of course, Mr. Hopkins was not made Secretary of Commerce because of political administration of relief. I have had something to say about politics in relief. I have tried to make my position on this subject plain and certain. I believe the Members of the Senate understand what I think about politics in relief. Every reading and informed person in the United States knows of the close personal friendship which exists between the President of the United States and Mr. Hopkins. He knows the confidence which the President reposes in the integrity and ability of Mr. Hopkins. He knows that that confidence is not misplaced, for the loyalty of Mr. Hopkins to the President and his administration has been proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Those who ask for fair play, and who seek sympathy and understanding, might play fair themselves. They might at least make some effort to treat others with some sympathy, with some cooperation, and with some understanding. In my opinion, Mr. President, it is "hitting below the belt" to say that Harry Hopkins was appointed Secretary of Commerce because of political administration of relief. To refer to the editorial calling him a joke is altogether unnecessary, for, whatever his enemies have said, no man I have heard speak every called Harry Hopkins a joke. His intelligence and his ability have never been doubted. The statement bears its own condemnation on its face.

Let it not be thought that I am saying that criticism of public officials is not oftentimes warranted, proper, and, perhaps, even necessary. Frequently the right kind of criticism is helpful. Sometimes it is so well phrased that it is instructive, corrective, and also even amusing and entertaining. I am quite sure Mr. Hopkins himself, who has not dodged the barbs of the critics, really enjoyed an editorial which was recently published in the Washington News, as I enjoyed it. It was so good, and such a pertinent thrust, that I feel sure no man could bear resentment, but would appreciate the fineness of the opponent's steel.

Let me read that editorial as an example of what I think is fair criticism:

HARRY LEAKS A SECRET

Harry Hopkins now says that he thinks the Senate made a bad mistake when it voted down the Hatch amendment forbidding politics in relief.

Well do we remember that hot summer night of sweat and oratory when the Senate got down to the final vote on the Hatch amendment, when the "purge committee" was cracking the whip, and a majority of the Senators said "Me, too," to the proposition that W. P. A. should be left free to play politics.

In the cool reflection of January Mr. Hopkins announces he was in favor of the Hatch amendment. But—

"Where, where was Roderick then?
One blast upon his bugle horn
Were worth a thousand men."

I believe Harry Hopkins will say with me that that editorial is the decent kind of criticism to which no man can object.

The difference in the type of criticism between the editorial from which I have been quoting and the one which I have just read is the difference between a master and an amateur.

But let me say a word concerning the statement in the editorial from the Traffic World referring to Attorney General Murphy. I am acquainted with the Attorney General of the United States. I first met him at the Democratic convention in Philadelphia in 1936, when we both served on the platform committee. At that convention I observed him closely throughout the course of our meetings. I heard him expound his views of government. I watched his career as Governor of the great State of Michigan. I was a member of the subcommittee that considered his nomination to the high position which he now holds. I heard him testify before that subcommittee. I heard his statement about his activities as Governor of Michigan in connection with the sit-down strike. Is it necessary for me to say that I was greatly and favorably impressed with him and that, as I watched him testify that day and as I studied his honest, open, frank, earnest, and sincere face and saw the character of the man standing out as it did, I was not only greatly and favorably impressed, but I was utterly convinced that he is a man, able, honest, intelligent, earnest, sincere, patriotic, whose single ambition is unselfishly to serve his country? Yet the editorial says that his appointment is an "insult to all right-thinking people." My further immediate reaction to the testimony of Attorney General Murphy that day was that for the citizens of a great State to defeat a man of his character and ability for Governor meant a loss to the State, but I am sure that loss to the State was a gain to the Republic when he became Attorney General of the United States.

To say that his appointment is "another insult to all right-thinking people" tends, Mr. President, to destroy what I spoke of in the very beginning. It tends to destroy the efforts of all who have tried to bring about real cooperation, understanding, and sympathy. By all means let us have harmony; let us have sympathy, understanding, cooperation, and confidence. I think the country needs all those attributes, but let us remember there are two parties to the bargain, and sympathy, understandings, cooperation, and confidence, to say nothing of fair dealing, are required of each side.

I feel, Mr. President, I have been wholly and totally inadequate to discuss this type of assault in the manner in which it should be discussed. The subject requires the services of an expert. I invite the attention of an expert to this editorial. I refer the editorial to the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harry M. Brennan to be collector of customs at Louisville, Ky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Clinton M. Hester, of Montana, to be Administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harlee Branch, of Georgia, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert H. Hinckley, of Utah, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Oswald Ryan, of Indiana, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of G. Grant Mason, Jr., of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edward J. Noble, of Connecticut, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

AIR SAFETY BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Sumpter Smith, of Alabama, to be a member of the Air Safety Board within the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas O. Hardin, of Texas, to be a member of the Air Safety Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

MARITIME LABOR BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert W. Bruere, of New York, to be a member of the Maritime Labor Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Louis Bloch, of California, to be a member of the Maritime Labor Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Claude E. Seehorn, of Colorado, to be a member of the Maritime Labor Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COAST GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast Guard.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Coast Guard nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Coast Guard nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I make the same request regarding the post-office nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotion in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I also ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Navy nominations are confirmed en bloc.

NOTIFICATION TO PRESIDENT OF CONFIRMATION OF ARMY NOMINATIONS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the Army nominations which were acted upon at the last executive session of the Senate. The War Department desires to make some transfers and would like to have action on the nominations completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified of the confirmation of the Army nominations at the last executive session of the Senate.

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE REPORT AND SIGNING OF BILLS, ETC., DURING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess or adjournment of the Senate following today's session all committees may be permitted to report bills, resolutions, and nominations; that the Vice President may be authorized to sign any bills that may become ready for his signature; and that the Secretary of the Senate may be authorized to receive messages from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 20, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 17, 1939

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The following-named persons for appointment as Foreign Service officers, unclassified, vice consuls of career, and secretaries in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America:

Niles W. Bond, of Massachusetts.
William O. Boswell, of Pennsylvania.
Donald W. Brown, of New York.
Charles R. Burrows, of Ohio.
V. Lansing Collins, 2d, of New York.
Arthur B. Emmons, 3d, of Massachusetts.
Nicholas Feld, of Mississippi.
William N. Fraleigh, of New Jersey.
Fulton Freeman, of California.
John C. Fuess, of Massachusetts.
Ogden H. Hammond, Jr., of New Jersey.
Boies C. Hart, Jr., of Connecticut.
Richard H. Hawkins, Jr., of Pennsylvania.
Martin J. Hillenbrand, of Illinois.
Delano McKelvey, of the District of Columbia.
Robert C. Strong, of Wisconsin.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS

Mabel Gittinger, of Iowa, to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 44, with headquarters at Des Moines, Iowa. (Reappointment.)

Joseph J. Cunningham, of North Providence, R. I., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 5, with headquarters at Providence, R. I. (Reappointment.)

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

MARINE CORPS

The following-named lieutenant colonels to be colonels in the Marine Corps from the 29th day of June 1938:

Harold C. Pierce
James L. Underhill
Keller E. Rockey

Lt. Col. Alphonse De Carre to be a colonel in the Marine Corps from the 5th day of September 1938.

Lt. Col. Samuel L. Howard to be a colonel in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of October 1938.

Lt. Col. Lyle H. Miller to be a colonel in the Marine Corps from the 3d day of January 1939.

Lt. Col. Ralph J. Mitchell to be a colonel in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of February 1939.

Lt. Col. DeWitt Peck to be a colonel in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of February 1939.

The following-named majors to be lieutenant colonels in the Marine Corps from the 29th day of June 1938:

George F. Adams	William P. T. Hill
Shaler Ladd	Ray A. Robinson
Richard H. Jeschke

Marine Gunner Thomas W. P. Murphy to be a chief marine gunner in the Marine Corps to rank with but after second lieutenant, from the 7th day of June 1938.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 17, 1939

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

Harry M. Brennan to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 42, with headquarters at Louisville, Ky.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

TO BE ADMINISTRATOR IN THE CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Clinton M. Hester

TO BE MEMBERS OF THE CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Harlee Branch	G. Grant Mason, Jr.
Robert H. Hinckley	Edward J. Noble
Oswald Ryan

TO BE MEMBERS OF THE AIR SAFETY BOARD WITHIN THE CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Sumpter Smith
Thomas O. Hardin

MARITIME LABOR BOARD

TO BE MEMBERS OF THE MARITIME LABOR BOARD

Robert W. Bruere
Louis Bloch
Claude E. Seehorn

COAST GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

TO BE CHIEF BOATSWAINS

Boatswain Willie Skipper
Boatswain Vladimir Nikolsky
Boatswain William H. Jackson

TO BE GUNNER

Gunner Harold W. Parker

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

Homer B. Hudson to be lieutenant commander.
David L. Nutter to be lieutenant commander.
Harry A. Dunn, Jr., to be lieutenant commander.
John H. Brady to be lieutenant commander.
Henry F. Agnew to be lieutenant commander.
John K. B. Ginder to be lieutenant commander.
Rodger W. Simpson to be lieutenant commander.
Henry Mullins, Jr., to be lieutenant.
Francis D. Walker, Jr., to be lieutenant (junior grade).
Clark A. Hood, Jr., to be lieutenant (junior grade).
Russell Kefauver to be lieutenant (junior grade).
Charles M. Oman to be medical director.
Franklyn C. Hill to be medical inspector.
Victor B. Riden to be medical inspector.
Cyrus C. Brown to be medical inspector.
Edward J. Goodbody to be medical inspector.
Ralph J. Arnold to be paymaster.
Clinton A. Neyman to be chaplain with rank of commander.
William P. Williams to be chaplain with rank of commander.

Archib B. Brown to be chief pharmacist.

LXXXIV—98

POSTMASTERS

ARIZONA

Annie Laura Kent, Parker.

CONNECTICUT

William Liberty, Voluntown.

INDIANA

Ruth A. Shaw, New Augusta.
Peter Holzer, Osgood.

MAINE

James B. Daily, Pittsfield.

MASSACHUSETTS

Viola W. Humphrey, East Wareham.

MICHIGAN

Sidney Reynolds, Howard City.
Daniel I. McBean, Manitou Beach.

PENNSYLVANIA

Michael J. Musilek, Dunlo.
Alice B. Carrick, Loupurex.

TEXAS

Robert W. Klingelhoefer, Fredericksburg.
Janet S. Barron, Iola.
William D. T. Storey, Littlefield.
Helene W. Derda, Los Fresnos.
William N. Roberson, Temple.

WASHINGTON

Grace A. Johnston, Orting.

WISCONSIN

Opal R. Parent, Cable.
Margaret E. Ingham, Lynxville.
Henry Stanke, Marathon.
Gustav A. Prenzlow, Mattoon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, guardian of the night season and the creator of the morning dawn, may we not fail to look eagerly to Thee for our guidance, seeking no other reward than Thine approval. We thank Thee for our daily blessings poured forth from Thine inexhaustible stores of divine love. By Thy mercies may we follow after love, the soul's immortal purpose, life's most blessed attainment, and heaven's most glorious vocation. Oh, let it rise to the highest sphere and become an example, an inspiration, and a compelling witness. Be Thou the deliverer of everyone from care, trouble, and sickness. May they see the rainbow of good health and promise beyond all suffering and falling tears. In good health, in strength of mind, body, and soul do Thou keep our President, our Speaker, and all Members of the Congress. In the holy name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed without amendment to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 8. Concurrent resolution amending the first paragraph of House Concurrent Resolution 4 of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 12. An act for the relief of Dica Perkins;

S. 26. An act to empower the President of the United States to create new national forest units and make additions to existing national forests in the State of Montana;

S. 128. An act for the relief of Fred H. Beauregard;

S. 129. An act for the relief of Howard Arthur Beswick;

S. 142. An act for the relief of Jack Lecler Haas;

S. 186. An act to amend section 798 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to murder in the first degree;

S. 189. An act to provide for the confiscation of firearms in possession of persons convicted of felony and disposition thereof;

S. 494. An act to name the bridge to be erected over the Anacostia River in the District of Columbia after the late "March King," John Philip Sousa, composer of the Stars and Stripes Forever;

S. 513. An act to provide for the promotion on the retired list of the Navy of Fred G. Leith;

S. 545. An act for the relief of George H. Pierce and Evelyn Pierce;

S. 588. An act to provide for an additional midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, and for other purposes;

S. 633. An act for the relief of Ray Wimmer;

S. 746. An act to authorize Maj. Andrew S. Rowan, United States Army, retired, to accept the Order Carlos Manuel de Céspedes tendered him by the Government of Cuba in appreciation of services rendered;

S. 1012. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of Joy Montgomery, a minor;

S. 1102. An act to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes;

S. 1106. An act for the relief of the East Coast Ship & Yacht Corporation, of Noank, Conn.;

S. 1117. An act to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men or former enlisted men of the United States Navy for the value of personal effects lost in the hurricane at the submarine base, New London, Conn., on September 21, 1938;

S. 1119. An act to provide an additional sum for the payment of a claim under the act entitled "An act to provide for the reimbursement of certain officers and enlisted men or former officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps for personal property lost, damaged, or destroyed as a result of the earthquake which occurred at Managua, Nicaragua, on March 31, 1931," approved January 21, 1936 (49 Stat. 2212);

S. 1123. An act to amend paragraph 57 of section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913;

S. 1125. An act to provide for the appointment of research assistants in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

S. 1126. An act to provide alternative methods of enforcement of orders, rules, and regulations of the Joint Board and of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia;

S. 1129. An act to amend paragraphs 31 and 33 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 7 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes,' approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1932;

S. 1130. An act to amend Public Law No. 111, Sixty-sixth Congress, entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia";

S. 1157. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of Roy D. Cook, a minor;

S. 1294. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to regulate the hours during which streets, alleys, etc., shall be lighted; and

S. 1295. An act to amend section 9, article V, of an act known as "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia,' approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short letter from the Automobile Club of Michigan concerning highways.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend certain remarks I expect to make on the pending bill and to include therein certain brief quotations and also an address by certain learned societies extolling the Congressional Library.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio speech delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein letters I have written, together with replies thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by Mr. George E. Stringfellow, vice president of the Edison Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by the rector of Catholic University.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 7, 1939, pages 1183 and 1184, where are printed certain statements made by me in a colloquy with the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

A copy of Mr. WOODRUM's remarks made on the floor of the House, which included the colloquy between the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] and myself, was not sent to me for inspection, and I did not learn of the error in the RECORD until yesterday morning.

As printed, the RECORD shows that I made certain references to the right of employers to appeal from decisions rendered by trial examiners or by the N. L. R. B.

The RECORD is in error, for I made no statement at that time about the right of appeal given by the act to employers. My observations were made as to the failure of the act to give to employees the right to appeal from decisions of the trial examiner and from decisions made by the Board.

The error occurs by reason of the use of the word "employers," when I meant and when I said "employees."

Even the most casual reader of the act knows that the act itself gives the employers the right of appeal under certain circumstances. All who have studied the act know that employees are not given such right by the act, except as an employee might fall under the designation of "any person aggrieved by final order of the Board," in section 10 (f).

Those who have studied the decisions of the Board and the briefs filed in its behalf will recall that it does not admit that a "person aggrieved" and referred to in this subdivision of section 10 includes an employee.

The point which I made on February 6, and which I desire to renew, is that the act is unfair to employees; that it deprives them of the right of collective bargaining through representatives of their own choice; that it denies to them their day in court.

I renew my challenge issued on the 6th day of February to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] to point out that provision of the Labor Act which gives the employee the right to appeal from a decision of the Board in a representation case or in any complaint case where the employer acquiesces in the order of the Board.

Let the gentleman show me any provision in this act which gives the worker, the employee, the right to appeal to the court to protect him in his constitutional right of free speech, freedom of action, or his right to enter into a contract with his employer, all of which have by the decisions of this Board on occasion been denied the worker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the RECORD will be corrected accordingly.

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL—1940

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4218) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and pending this request, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue until 2 o'clock, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4218, the legislative appropriation bill, 1940, with Mr. COSTELLO in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, the House is now taking up the annual appropriation bills. We are confronted with a serious situation because of the fact that as each of these appropriation bills comes before the committee and the House we are asked to increase the amounts carried in previous years. Much of this increase is caused by additional expenditures for new projects and developments of the last 3 or 4 years and their operation. The operating cost of the Government is rapidly becoming so large as to present a formidable task to the American people to determine what their future course shall be. The national debt totals $40,000,000,000. The Government has gone in the red since the 1st of last July to February 13 to the extent of $2,063,000,000. By the 1st of June this year's deficit will have increased until it reaches the staggering sum close to $4,000,000,000. The President has estimated that the deficit for the following year will be about $3,500,000,000. The taxpayers of this country are already burdened to the extent that everybody is asking Members of Congress to relieve him of taxation. Yet in the face of this situation we find the Government embarking upon all kinds of business, forcing private individuals out of business; and practically every governmental enterprise is a tax-free organization. Thus our tax base is becoming narrower and narrower. It will soon break down with the heavy load of taxation.

How long can we continue going the way we have been for the past 6 years? This is a question I ask the membership in all seriousness. No individual could possibly do it, no business in this country could do it. Then why have the Government do something we know will break us down as a Nation?

The ultimate outcome will be financial ruin. I know of no one in this country who is more responsible than the Congress, except the President of the United States, who forced a rubber-stamp Congress. It is your responsibility and you have not been able to meet it in the past 8 years.

There is one thing I think this country ought to do. The men and women back home should try to make the suggestion to the Members of Congress that we economize in the operation of our Government rather than having everybody in the various districts trying to get what they can out of the Federal Government just because "everybody is doing it."

Mr. Chairman, I want to read a statement that appeared in one of the Washington newspapers during the past week.

[From the Washington Post of February 12, 1939]

IT CAN HAPPEN HERE, WHEELER TELLS LAWYERS—WARNS COLLEGE GROUP TO GUARD LIBERTIES—CALLS UNITED STATES RULE BEST

The American people "are fooling themselves if they think what's happened in Germany, Italy, and Russia can't happen here," Senator BURTON K. WHEELER (Democrat), of Montana, warned last night.

"In Germany 70,000,000 people who have always prided themselves on their intelligence fell under the iron heel of a dictator," Wheeler reminded his audience of 500 at the forty-third annual banquet of the Washington College of Law.

Disturbing signs in this country, he said, are the widespread corruption in local government, apparent indifference of many citizens to the duties of citizenship, and the growth of political and economic intolerance, which he described as no less a danger than racial or religious intolerance.

The legislator appealed to young attorneys and law students for active participation in civic life and the "eternal vigilance which is the price of our liberties."

We have heard a great deal in the last week or two about national defense. One of the very necessary requirements for national defense is a good, sound financial structure. Any country that is endeavoring to protect its own shores through the military force should realize that in order to do so, from a military standpoint, its house should be in order financially, because no nation can go ahead with a program such as has been proposed by the present administration without impairing our national credit, both from a military standpoint and economic and social standpoints. It just is not possible for us to continue in that manner.

Mr. Chairman, I had the opportunity to take note of a criticism made by an editor in Canada. If that particular editor had been in this country, he would certainly have been termed by the New Deal an "economic royalist," or some other kind of a fanatic who was not in sympathy with the operation of the Government, just as we have seen in the past 4 or 5 years. Let me read what the editorial states in reference to the New Deal:

It has been the most colossal spendthrift in history, and without results; it has welshed upon its platform promises of retrenchment; it is squandering the money of the people in partisan propaganda; it has elevated many a political accident to high office, including the Supreme Court; it has badgered and impeded business, big and small; it has held up to public ridicule and hate the producers of material wealth, for party purposes; it has built up power by exploitation of the misery of 13,000,000 of unemployed and has accomplished nothing for the latter after 5 years of glib promises and expenditure of twenty billions; it has sapped the morale of the people by inculcating the idea that the Government owes everyone a living; it has adopted the policy of scarcity, paying farmers for that which they did not raise and at the same time spent billions to increase productivity of the soil; it has murdered hundreds of thousands of pigs while human millions cried for sustenance; it has encouraged class hatred by abuse from high place; it has set capital against labor and labor against capital; it has tacitly sanctioned mob expropriation of property, and it has abridged the personal freedom guaranteed by the Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, that is a rather pointed editorial to be published in a foreign newspaper in reference to the people of America. It is hard to believe that a foreign country would publish anything of that kind; and as I stated before, if that had been published in this country by one of our newspapers, the New Deal would criticize it in a manner that would not be consistent with good fellowship nor neighborliness.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman please name the editor who wrote this article?

Mr. RICH. I have the article here, and I am not going to divulge the Canadian newspaper, because I do not want to heap any additional coal on the fire nor have anyone criticized for an editorial such as this, because it is exactly as I believe personally so far as the New Deal administration is concerned.

Mr. KERR. The gentleman has answered that question. Now, will he please answer this question: Is that not an anonymous communication that was circulated to every Congressman in the Congress during the last session?

Mr. RICH. Yes; a great many Members of Congress, as I understand, received a letter similar to this.

Mr. KERR. With no one's name signed to it.

Mr. RICH. If this is not true as being published in a Canadian paper, then I will put it in the RECORD as my own remarks about the New Deal, so that you will not be found wanting so far as anyone in the House of Representatives trying to get this before the country is concerned, for I think of the New Deal just what the article states of it. In my judgment, it is wrecking our Nation morally, spiritually, and financially.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] 5 additional minutes.

Mr. KERR. May I interrupt the gentleman further? I understand he subscribes to what is contained in this anonymous letter which was sent to the Members of Congress?

Mr. RICH. I subscribe to the statements made there. I think it is a true statement of the New Deal. I subscribe to it, so there will not be any question about authenticity or about any one believing what the article states of the New Deal.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a comparison of the receipts and expenditures of the Government for this year and last year. It is a very small item.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask if that statement is taken from another document? If, so, the gentleman will have to secure permission in the House.

Mr. RICH. Then I will have to take the time to read it. There are only about a dozen lines.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to read the statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. The statement is as follows:

UNITED STATES RECEIPTS AND COSTS

Government expenses and receipts for the current fiscal year through February 10, compared with a year ago:

	This year	Last year
Expenses.....	$5,533,061,609.73	$4,533,590,772.02
Receipts.....	3,494,122,338.32	3,709,593,795.99
Gross deficit.....	2,038,939,271.41	823,996,976.03
Net deficit.....	2,013,291,171.41	772,450,326.03
Cash balance.....	3,146,800,937.27	3,010,767,506.18
Working balance.....	2,490,835,277.62	1,228,996,847.26
Public debt.....	39,733,653,568.08	37,576,083,402.60
Gold reserve.....	14,747,047,905.25	12,755,584,764.74
Customs.....	196,693,895.93	248,629,218.82

WHERE ARE YOU GOING TO GET THE "MONEY"?

Can any Member of Congress tell me why we have to carry a cash balance of over $3,000,000,000 in the banks of this country and pay interest on that money? I should like some Member of Congress to get up and say why anyone in this country would want to carry a cash balance of $3,000,000,000. It is just ridiculous. Our deficit this year is almost three times as large as last year. Why?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact—and I do not ask this question of the gentleman in a contentious manner, because I have a high regard for what the gentleman has to say, as he always gives the House valuable information, that as a usual thing the chambers of commerce throughout the United States are opposed to the New Deal? Is not that generally the fact as far as what we call the "knife-and-fork clubs" are concerned?

Mr. RICH. I do not know whether or not the chambers of commerce are opposed to the New Deal, but I believe that any man who is not opposed to the New Deal as it has been operating the last 5 or 6 years has something wrong with his head. I say there is something wrong with such a man. If this New Deal is going to be carried on and if this Congress is going to continue the New Deal, then I say we want a new Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that many of these chambers of commerce are importuning Members of Congress to get everything out of this Congress they can get for their localities, yet they are advising us every chance they have to balance the Budget? How can we balance the Budget and at the same time fill their requirements?

Mr. RICH. There is a lot in what the distinguished gentleman from Montana says. I will say there are too many people in this country coming to the Members of Congress and making requests. I pity the fellows who have weak backbones and try to agree with all these people, and I exclude the distinguished gentleman from Montana from the spineless ones. We ought to stand up here and tell the people back in our districts when they ask for something that is not right, not sensible, not honest, and not just, that we cannot give it to them. This is what I tell the people in my district. However, I have the best people in America in my district, and they do not make unreasonable requests of me.

Let us get some real red blood in our veins and try to get jobs for the people back home. Let us try to do things in an honest and honorable way and get the people of this country to work, give them jobs. If we restore confidence in the people of this country by having a wise administration here, we will get work for the people back home, and we will not have to have the New Deal trying to say to everybody, "Here, we hand you something on a silver platter." We do not want that kind of a government. We want a pay-roll government, and let me give you the definition of a pay roll.

WHAT IS A PAY ROLL?

To the man who shares in its benefits, it is a blessing.

To the man who must meet it, week after week, month after month, year after year, it is at once a tremendous responsibility and a great satisfaction.

To the community, which looks for support in its business, its trade and its industries to those who receive a share of the money distributed through it, the pay roll is an indispensable necessity, without which the whole community suffers.

Meeting pay rolls has been a troublesome problem for many a businessman, many an industrialist, large and small, in recent hard years. Our annals of heroism do not mention, but should, these men who have put up valiant fights to maintain pay rolls in the face of overwhelming odds because of a sense of obligation to those who work for them and depend upon them.

It is commonly agreed that it is preferable that the Nation's wealth should be distributed through the medium of private industrial pay rolls, in an honest exchange of money for honest work, than that it should be distributed, through Government agencies, in relief or in "made work."

Millions of men throughout the Nation are eager to regain a proud position on an industrial pay roll. Let those who will rant about "wage slave"—the proud American citizen desires above all else an opportunity to draw his wage in return for his labor.

That is a pay roll, and that is what we want here in America. It can, must, and will be had if we do our duty in Congress. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of talk lately about this so-called relief bill. I wish to review briefly some of the situations preceding that bill and some of the situations that occurred during its consideration, as well as some of the situations that exist now with reference to that bill, so the Members of Congress and the people may have the benefit of what little information I have been able to gather currently upon the subject.

The Committee on Appropriations began consideration of that bill and found as it approached that consideration that the number of unemployed was at its peak in June of 1938, yet notwithstanding the fact that the number of unemployed has gradually decreased from that day to the present time. As late as the 12th of November the number of people on W. P. A. employment had gradually and steadily increased.

There was some reduction after the middle of November. I believe the reduction totaled 200,000; but of what was the roll made up? I believe that is a matter of great interest to the country and to the people.

Things are different now than they were when you and I were in school. I hold in my hand a clipping from a current paper which reads, "Sports round-up. Florida football players draw checks." It appears that an investigation has just disclosed that 19 members of the 'varsity team of the University of Florida football squad were drawing relief checks from the Government during the 1938 off season. It does not appear that they had any relief status. It also appears that after they went back to school in the middle of September the checks continued to be issued, and the Secretary of the Treasury sicked the F. B. I. onto the situation to try to find out what was being done with the money for which the checks were issued subsequent to the boys' returning to school. It appears the boys did not get the money. It does not appear that the money was being used for relief.

I have here another item that comes from another direction. This roll was loaded with aliens, it appears, aliens who were in this country who were not citizens of the United States. I have here the record of one man up in Escanaba, Mich., who was killed while on W. P. A. employment. There will be a claim for damages from the Government under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act because of this man's death, yet he left an estate large enough so that in his will he named a bank up there as executor, and soon after he died the will was proved and letters were issued, and it appears that he had $2,500 in the bank and owned a double house, that he rented for $20 a month in the clear, and other property.

Down in Queens City there is a fellow who has been on W. P. A. employment. He owned a store block and rented it to tenants. He evicted one tenant who was unable to take care of himself, and that fellow could neither get relief nor get W. P. A. employment, yet the landlord, who owned two stores with apartments above, was on W. P. A. employment during all that time.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes; for a question.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman know whether the landlord was on the roll as a relief employee or a nonrelief employee?

Mr. TABER. I understand that he was on as a relief employee.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman know whether he is still on?

Mr. TABER. I do not.

Mr. COCHRAN. If he is and the gentleman will furnish his name to the W. P. A. officials, he will not be on very long.

Mr. TABER. I am not so sure about that, from my experience.

Mr. COCHRAN. When we have 3,000,000 people on relief, if we have a half dozen or a dozen or 50 or 100 isolated cases, does the gentleman believe that is a reflection upon the W. P. A.?

Mr. TABER. I feel that a cross section of violations of honest governmental operations gives evidence that the whole structure is rotten to the core. This is my experience with it in case after case in my own locality. It is absolutely impossible to have the thing put upon an efficient and honest basis and this has been my experience right along with it. I have no confidence whatever in the whole set-up. During the time that our unemployment situation has been so bad I have procured figures indicating a steady increase in the number of immigrants allowed in here from foreign shores. Immigration has increased in the period July to November 1938, inclusive, as follows:

	1937	1938
July.....	5,311	6,385
August.....	5,952	7,357
September.....	6,094	8,226
October.....	7,543	8,225
November.....	6,452	6,844
	31,352	37,037

Or an average of 20 percent.

Into this country, I am advised, large numbers are coming on visitors' permits, who stay here and get jobs here and throw our own people out of employment. I am going to ask later on to put some of that in the RECORD. It is because of all these things as to the number on the W. P. A. roll who are aliens and the number who have been on ever since the operation started that we are having difficulty. If the Administrator of the W. P. A. would get some kind of efficiency in his set-up and would eliminate those who are on the roll and who have been on ever since it started—and nearly 50 percent throughout the country have been on since it started—we would have no difficulty in taking care of all the relief cases that really need attention.

Now, we are up against a great lot of propaganda all the time. We are up against a lot of propaganda paid for by the Government of the United States to try to influence Members of Congress, by threats or otherwise, to force us to vote for or consider matters that we ought not to consider.

I hold in my hand an envelope addressed to me in which I received a document yesterday sent out by the National Bituminous Coal Commission, Washington, D. C., official business. I do not know how many of you received this. It was sent under a franked envelope; and what is it? "To all employees of the Coal Commission"—printed on paper that evidently was paid for by the Government, printed at Government expense in violation of the rule that says that propaganda shall not be paid for out of Government appropriations or with Government money, and this is what it says:

To all Employees of the Coal Commission:

There will be a regular membership meeting of Local 26, held on Thursday, February 16, 1939, in room 805 of the Walker Building, at 4:30 p. m. You are cordially invited to attend. You have noted in the press that the President has asked the Congress for an additional $150,000,000 for the W. P. A. Listed below are the names of the Appropriations Committee members, and it is suggested that the members of Local 26 who can do so, telegraph members of this committee, as well as your local Congressman and Senators, stressing the desirability of this appropriation. It is not necessary that only telegrams be sent. Letters and post cards are also useful.

There follows a list of the House Appropriations Committee for 1939 with the Democrats in one column and the Republicans in another:

HOUSE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE, 1939

Democrats: Edward T. Taylor, Colorado (chairman); Clarence Cannon, Missouri; Clifton A. Woodrum, Virginia; Louis Ludlow, Indiana; Thomas S. McMillan, South Carolina; Malcolm C. Tarver, Georgia; Jed Johnson, Oklahoma; J. Buell Snyder, Pennsylvania; James McAndrews, Illinois; Emmet O'Neal, Kentucky; George W. Johnson, West Virginia; James G. Scrugham, Nevada; James M. Fitzpatrick, New York; Louis C. Rabaut, Michigan; Joachim O. Fernandez, Louisiana; Millard F. Caldwell, Florida; David D. Terry, Arkansas; John M. Houston, Kansas; J. Burrwood Daly, Pennsylvania; Joe Starnes, Alabama; Ross A. Collins, Mississippi; Charles H. Leavy, Washington; Joseph E. Casey, Massachusetts; John H. Kerr, North Carolina; George H. Mahon, Texas.

Republicans: John Taber, New York; Richard B. Wigglesworth, Massachusetts; William P. Lambertson, Kansas; D. Lane Power, New Jersey; J. William Ditter, Pennsylvania; Albert E. Carter, California; Robert F. Rich, Pennsylvania; Charles A. Plumley, Vermont; Everett M. Dirksen, Illinois; Albert J. Engel, Michigan; Karl Stefan, Nebraska; C. J. McLeod, Michigan; Francis H. Case, South Dakota; Dudley A. White, Ohio; Chester C. Bolton, Ohio.

Now, I call upon the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute not only this violation of the postal law in sending out propaganda of this kind, but also the violation of the law which prohibits the expenditure of Government funds for propaganda purposes. If there was a legitimate case for an increase in appropriations, there would be no occasion whatever for propaganda.

If the Administrator of the W. P. A. will get rid of those who have not any business being upon the W. P. A. rolls, who have no relief status, there will be plenty of room for those who need relief. The relief rolls in the local communities, according to the information that has come into the hearings, have been gradually going down, and yet and in spite of that, and in order to keep the W. P. A. rolls up, orders have gone out right now to different cities to place more and more upon the W. P. A. rolls in order to hold up the number. In cases where the administrative officials of cities have not made a request for more, orders have gone forth to put more and more on in those places. When it gets to be April 1 those in real need will be dropped from the rolls so that they can put pressure on Congress to appropriate needlessly a large sum of money. Would you not think that it would be possible with a situation such as we are in, with the pending application for an increased appropriation, to get an honest administration of that law, designed to do the job and do it right, and not waste the people's money?

I call attention now to some of the things they are spending your money for in this W. P. A. I have here in my hand a copy of the hearings before the House subcommittee. On page 139 there is a list of those who are drawing salaries of over $3,000, and they run up as high as $7,200 on this so-called theater project. There are 24 of them. There are probably 1,000 on this project, who are drawing salaries in excess of the relief allotments. There are upon the so-called writers' project a very large number, probably to the tune of 10,000. There are upon the theater project as many more, and a little more on the art project, where they are paying big prices and wasting the money of the people.

Is it not a fair thing to ask that these administrative officials purge their roll and come before Congress promptly showing they have gotten rid of their aliens, showing they have gotten rid of some of those who have been permanently on that roll? We have projects right here in our Government departments that have been going on ever since this W. P. A. business started. We have one project with approximately 1,000 on it, and upwards of 60 percent of them have been on ever since the thing started who are drawing from $85 to $125 a month—in a department of this Government, and not one of them has ever had a relief status. Maybe it is the right thing to let them juggle you with this sort of thing, but there are probably 100,000 employed on these Federal projects where the people who are so employed have not the least semblance of relief status. I am making this statement so that these things may be in the Record, and so that we may have some idea of what this thing is all about. When they come here and ask us for money, let us tell them to come here with clean hands. I hope that some of these things that I have said will be of interest, and I hope that they will be effective in an attempt to purge this situation and clean it up.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, only a few days ago this House passed a national-defense bill. Only a few days before that this House struck out of the independent offices appropriation bill the appropriation for the building of one of the most necessary things in our national-defense program, and it is in connection with that that I shall address you for a few minutes.

The Tennessee Valley Authority carries on its activities in a region strategically located for purposes of national defense and abounding in many of the raw materials necessary to modern warfare. Its entire peacetime program of developing a navigable waterway on the Tennessee River, providing flood protection for productive areas in the Tennessee and Mississippi River Valleys, development of quantities of electric power, production of fertilizer to build up the land, and its general program of conservation of land, forest, and water resources are a definite and invaluable contribution to the strength of the Nation in the event of war.

The inland location of the region, with protection from attack provided both by distance from the coast and by mountains, is of prime importance.

To appreciate the value to national defense of large blocks of available power and of dependable inland waterways, it is necessary only to recall that limited power supplies and railway congestion seriously handicapped the United States in the World War. It is significant that although eight out of nine locations recommended for wartime nitrate plants were in the Tennessee Valley and the ninth not far away, two World War nitrate plants were built elsewhere because of the lack of power in the Tennessee Valley, the strategic location. T. V. A.'s power developments will help prevent a recurrence of such a situation.

The improvement of the Tennessee River, in connection with other waterways, will add substantially to the transportation facilities of the country, connecting with an inland-waterway system composed of 5,700 miles of 9-foot channel and 3,200 miles of auxiliary channel. Gilbertsville Dam is the vital link in the Tennessee waterway. Likewise, Watts bar and Coulter Shoals dams are necessary to open up the rich area of east Tennessee and the industrial area around Knoxville.

Modern wars are economic wars, and disruption of the economic life of a country is a modern wartime weapon. Navigation prevents the disruption of the transportation systems by taking over the job of the railroads and leaving them free for pressing wartime service. Waterways function with a smaller personnel, and this would leave skilled personnel available in time of war for other purposes.

Steps have been taken to insure that the inland navigation system will contribute its share toward fulfilling wartime transportation needs. Nearly all the railway terminals on the Mississippi River have been developed since the World War and will help to coordinate the two types of transportation. The Federal barge lines have been established with a wartime emergency in mind. Many barge manufacturers are now established along the inland waterways and could go into full-time production on a moment's notice.

The inland waterway system aids in the building up of the interior of the country. A vital need in wartime is to have industry protected from attack. In China, for example, it took only a few thrusts on the part of the Japanese to paralyze Chinese industries, because they were largely concentrated along the seacoast. The geographic position of our waterway system removes it from dangers of disruption to which more easterly railroads might be subject.

The Tennessee Valley Authority, while performing its civic functions, is also perpetually in a state of preparedness. It maintains nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals in stand-by condition, so that it may quickly begin production of chemicals needed in time of national emergency. A part of the plant is devoted to phosphate production, the largest plant in the United States for production of elemental phosphate. Phosphate is an important material used in war for smoke screens and incendiary shells. There never was a sufficient supply of this material during the World War, but the present plant at Muscle Shoals and several plants elsewhere are now equipped to produce a wartime output of phosphorus.

The production of phosphate fertilizer and the spreading of its use through experimentation and example is of definite wartime importance. During the World War a critical problem was whether to use certain elements, such as phosphorus, potash, and nitrates, in the land as fertilizer or in munitions. Vast amounts of these elements are needed for plant foods. If the soils of the Nation can be built up to a stable condition during peacetime they can stand the emergency demands of war much better than they can now, and these elements can be diverted to fill other needs. A productive agriculture is a wartime necessity.

The Authority carries on a continuous research in the chemical field, and the results of this research will be of definite significance in time of emergency.

The natural resources of the valley include a large variety of minerals, some of which are among the 32 strategic minerals necessary to fight a modern war. The Tennessee Valley has some minerals in which the United States generally is deficient. In addition, it has access to other raw materials along routes that can be easily controlled and protected in case of war. With the facilities and power to manufacture these materials into needed wartime goods, and the development of transportation facilities to carry both raw materials and finished goods, the national-defense value of the region is vastly enhanced.

So far as military metals and chemical materials are concerned there are in the Tennessee Valley or nearby large deposits of iron ores and zinc, and lesser amounts of lead and copper. There are also certain possibilities as to aluminum, manganese, and chromium, which are being studied.

The valley is well supplied with coal suitable for coke and byproducts. There are reserves of rock phosphate and of limestone, a specially high-grade deposit of the latter being located at Muscle Shoals. One salt deposit is known to exist in southwest Virginia and another in Mississippi. There are pyrites in western North Carolina and southeastern Tennessee which are large producers of sulphuric acid. When the river is made fully navigable the region will, of course, be in easy transportation range of other supplies, such as the Louisiana sulphur mines. With the upstream dams interconnected and supplying the Muscle Shoals plants, the power necessary for processing these materials for a wartime demand will be available.

The electric furnaces in nitrate plant 2 which are not required for phosphorus production can be adapted to other uses that may be required to prevent bottlenecks in a national war program. They can be used for producing calcium carbide, a step in the making of acetylene, which is required in large quantities in the working and fabricating of steel. Acetylene is also the basis for other chemicals needed in military operations. Other possible uses for these furnaces are in the making of steel and ferro-alloys, abrasives, and refractories, any one of which might at some point develop a critical shortage. In case of necessity some of the furnaces might be converted to the electrolytic manufacture of aluminum or of chlorine—used in war gases—or of various alkalis and alkali metals.

This flexibility of use in a plant directly subject to Government control would be of great value as an instrument for making up whatever deficiencies might appear in the productive capacity of the Nation's industrial plant.

T. V. A. is also making a worth-while contribution to national defense through the restoration of forest resources within the area. In the last war there was considerable substitution of wood for coal as fuel. Walnut was used on a large scale for gunstocks. Locust-tree nails were used in construction of wooden ships. Nitrocellulose products were used in explosives. Forest conservation assures that such materials will be available in abundance, should the need for their wartime use again arise.

The Tennessee Valley area has been recognized for decades as a part of a natural national-defense area of the United States, between the Ohio and Tennessee Rivers and the Great Smoky Mountains. The work of the Authority in developing and conserving the many resources of this region—minerals, forests, land, power possibilities, navigation—inevitably contributes to the strength of the Nation in time of war. [Applause.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to even enter into this debate. You know how in these general debates we kind of talk in general terms, and I was very much impressed when following the splendid address by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON] the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] became immediately inspired and sprang to his feet and waxed eloquent and so sympathetic with the Democrats—the minority sympathizing with the majority. He cried, and wept, and wailed, and gnashed his teeth, and great big tears ran down his face. We became sorry for him, and I want to read to you some of the things that he said:

I do sympathize with your unfortunate lot. It is a pathetic condition. I have read in the newspapers of the futile efforts you have made to try to bring about a degree of harmony—

And that is the way the Republicans get their marvelous opinions and information about the Democrats—to try to find some place where you men can find common ground. I am sorry for every one of you men who have resented the purge. Of all men, I am surprised at the distinguished gentleman from Georgia coming here today and trying to belabor with his words the Republican Party, for it was in Georgia that the purge persisted; it was in Georgia that this one-man party system, against which most of you men are rebelling, had its worst effect. It was in Georgia that you men felt the lash of the Simon Legrees in the past primary campaign, as one of your distinguished sons, one of the valiant men of the Democratic Party, one of those fearless and courageous leaders dared defy the White House and appear as a candidate for another body.

I wish I could quote more, because it is so interesting as he goes along. Those of you who heard and enjoyed the speech of that learned gentleman from Pennsylvania will remember how he belabored the Democratic Party, and how he took to task that eminent Georgian in saying he was suffering from a one-man Government, a one-man party system. What could be more absolute and positive evidence of the strength and solidarity of the Democratic Party than that the leader still enjoys his popularity, as all of the polls show, individually, still showing the strength his character has maintained for him all through wherever he goes. He may attempt his purge, but still the people of the Democratic Party say, "Mr. President, we respect your feelings and your desires, but we vote our convictions and send back whom we please and who pleases us."

The Republicans rail at us. Why, gentlemen, you do not reckon well. Georgia is not going to vote Republican. Neither is Maryland. Did you ever see one of those fellows who had little enough judgment to enter into an argument between a man and his wife? They lay down their argument and pummel the living fire out of him and then go back to arguing again if they want to. That was their business. So, if we want to purge and carry on on the basis of democracy all in the Democratic Party, why, that is the way it is done. That is one of the finest things that a democracy exhibits to the people of the land. You cannot do that on the other side. We are on the pacific side of the Atlantic. We can do what we please in or out of the party and then go back and vote as we please. That is democracy. If the President wants to come down to my State and say, "I would rather you would vote for another man," I would say, "Mr. President, I salute you as the leader of my party and a member of my party, but I do not think I will vote that way." We are Democrats together still. But when it comes to the Democratic campaign, and when it comes to the broad principles, here is the way we are founded. We work out small things and get ready for big ones.

This is a two-party system in America. Do you know what that means? It means there are two parties here: A permanent party, the Democratic Party, and a temporary party, the Republican Party, at this juncture in our national existence, which has been preceded and served by the Whigs, the Federalists, the Constitutional Unionists. There were others. The Republicans have had their day. Mark you, this is a prediction. There will never be another Republican in the White House. [Laughter.] They have really run over their day. [Laughter.] It hurts them. There will never be another Republican there, and I will state why.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I will yield later if I can get some time.

Mr. GIFFORD. It would not fit later on.

Mr. PATRICK. I do not yield until later. I wish I could, but I cannot. As Democrats we cannot yield for the next 2 years. Now, the Republican Party has lived far beyond the time the Lord created it to exist, anyway. The Republican Party was organized on July 6, 1854, according to best authority. The purpose of it was to do a single thing. The Democrats, for once in their life, had quit rolling. Slavery was in the land, and the Republicans got together and organized a party. They were made up of a bunch of Federalists and Know-nothings and Whigs—some holdover Whigs. They still put up a great deal of that doctrine. They got together up here in Jackson, Mich., on that date—

Mr. RABAUT. That is a controversial subject.

Mr. PATRICK. Yes; that is a controversial subject. It is a little uncertain whether it was there. Jackson, Mich., claims it, but some others say that will not do. Anyway they got together to overthrow slavery. It delights me when I hear the Republicans come forth as defenders of the faith and saviors of the Constitution. Their watchword when they organized was that "There is a law higher than the Constitution." They said the Constitution was a covenant with death and an agreement with hell. That is the way the Republican Party had its birth and that is the way its first campaign was waged. Of course, it was waged against slavery. Now, the Republicans can embody, embrace, and love the Constitution when they feel like it saves their representative forces, special forces, that they have represented through the years. But the Federalists came on, and the Whigs and the Republicans. Now, the Republicans have had their day. There will never be another Republican. They have outlived their usefulness.

Now, they forget all these things. A two-party system is always like that. Somebody will rise up in the course of time and smack the Democrats down, no doubt; but the Republican Party cannot do it. It has got to be somebody that can look forward. What do the Republicans say? You know, it is a funny thing. That is why these crocodile tears were flowing so freely yesterday. Mr. Republican is not trying to say, "Let us grab the ball and make a touchdown." He is saying, "The Democrats have dropped the ball. We are sorry for them. We will get it and run through." That is a negative situation. It reminds me of the fellow who says, "I am going to marry that beautiful Mrs. Haymarket." "Why?" "Why, I am so sorry for her poor husband. He has to work out in the rain. He is going to take cold. It will run into pneumonia and it will kill him. I will borrow a lot of money from Uncle Satterfield and I will have my face lifted, and she will fall in love with me and we will get married." [Laughter.] They have not thought how far they must go. You know, at the caucus we discussed general principles. They would have you believe there was lack of harmony here. The Democratic Party is great.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. Let me get this chart off of my chest and then I will yield.

To show you what happened, the Republicans cannot get control in 1940 and sweep into office in the United States, you should know, and I have the statistical chart here to prove it. From 1900 on this little 1938 upswing, in which at the last election they elected a small bunch of Republicans to the Congress, is not an unusual thing at all. It always happens. It always scares the other party half to death, and the party that is in always comes out better because of the scare. You can go down from 1902, 1906, 1908, and on down, and on the off years you will find what has happened. The Republicans are getting drunk on mighty cheap "likker" and are getting "hopped up" on a very inferior grade of stimuli. They forget to finger the pages of history and review how people react to party principles. These little upswings have always occurred. Throughout the history of the last 40 years there is scarcely a single exception. Sometimes it may be more, sometimes less, but the interesting thing is how it approaches the general election. There are still 30,000,000 votes to be had one way or the other—30,000,000 who could vote and are still non-voters. Here is how the Democrats and Republicans got that vote all through the years. Let me show you first what the Republicans did. In 1900 the Republicans got 7,000,000; in 1904, 7,000,000; in 1908, 7,000,000; in 1912, 7,000,000; in 1916, 8,000,000. Then comes the woman-suffrage amendment general vote swell—Harding, 16,000,000; Coolidge, 15,000,000; Hoover, 21,000,000, when 5,000,000 voters went hay wire or voted against Al Smith, but came right back to their party again—Hoover got 15,000,000; Landon, 16,000,000, and all like that. But what happened with the Democrats running all down those years—that is, in 1904, 1908, and so on, to this last midterm election? The Democrats throughout those same years got 6,000,000, 5,000,000, 6,000,000, 6,000,000, 9,000,000, 9,000,000, 8,000,000, 15,000,000, 23,000,000, and 27,000,000. Where did those additional Democratic votes come from? We see they did not come off the G. O. P. elephant's back.

Now, I think the Republican elephant is dead enough that we can at last talk out in meeting. Oh, listen to what happened! We had not been winning voters from the Republicans and they had not been winning them from us to any enhancing degree through those years, so there was just one thing that could be done, and the Democrats went out and did it in those years, claimed the unclaimed voters; got men to register and vote who had never registered or voted before in their lives; and I tell you there are 30,000,000 still floating around, who do not belong to any party. You cannot get them by merely pointing to party iniquities of opposing parties. We could certainly have done that were it possible when the oil scandals and all the like touched so dangerously close to the very White House. We learned one thing, that no matter how deep these iniquities may run, no matter how far removed from you, if you expect to smack your opponents down simply on their own faults, you cannot do it. Not in America. But the Democrats went to town. We got out the unregenerate, we remembered the forgotten folks. We hailed the needy workmen, the nonvoter. We called to them and they came in, registered, and voted Democratic; and now, how you would like to get them from us! You cannot do it to save your lives.

Mr. KNUTSON and Mr. HOFFMAN rose.

Mr. PATRICK. I cannot yield. As soon as I can I will yield.

We have done a great injustice to Government through the years in this Nation by fighting this man and that man and by fighting against parties merely as parties. If we will, instead, do what the Democrats have done this time, go out and win the unregenerates and nonvoting populace and bring into the party those who are not in any party, and can swell our ranks from those who have never voted before—having once done that, having once been baptized in the gospel of that political faith, the percentage to the right or to the left through the years has not, except on one occasion, and then for a special reason, varied more than 1,000,000 votes. We have done this this time, and we are coming back, because you will never get them away from us.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes; I yield to the splendid and agreeable gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. It has been said, you know, that he who fights and runs away may live to fight another day. I have noticed so frequently recently that gentlemen on the other side do not remain on the floor after they make their speeches. Two words were used yesterday. Somebody on the Democratic side of the aisle referred to the Republican Party as deceased.

Mr. PATRICK. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would like to say that the gentleman's party is diseased—badly diseased.

Did not the gentleman when he spoke of getting the unregenerate get that confused with degenerate?

Mr. PATRICK. I may have—yes; it is very probable I did. But not in the light of his interpretation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that only twice in the history of our country has a minority party gained the White House when it did not capture the House in the preceding off Presidential year. I also call to the gentleman's attention the fact that giving credit where credit is due—because the Republicans did make certain gains in the House—the gains came about mostly because of local issues. [Laughter.] The fact still remains that the Democratic Party still has either the fifth or sixth largest majority that any major party has had in the political history of our country.

Mr. PATRICK. I thank the gentleman for his hearty contribution. Let me ask you something: Where would the Republicans go today for leadership? Where are there any among them worthy and capable to lead? By contrast the Democrats have almost too much leadership, real leaders too.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We would go to Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. Thank you; we do have it. The Republicans have no one to turn to, no one in their ranks who can gather their scattered remnants together. There was never such a deplorable dearth of leadership as that which faces them. They never experienced anything like it in their lives since Lincoln's day.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. Let me state this—hold your point, Mr. HOFFMAN.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; if I can.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman is likely to lose it?

He is liable to lose it.

Here is an interesting thing in reference to those figures: The Democratic gains during the last 15 years have been 15 times as great as the increase in population, taking it on a percentage basis. I repeat, 15 times as great. The figures show the gains for the Democrats and for the Republicans. It is a most amazing thing. Of course, it is heartbreaking to the Republicans, but a mighty blessed thing to the Democrats. The Democratic gain has been 300 percent, whereas the Republican gain during the last 16 years has only been 17 percent. The population of the country through those years is only 21 percent. These are the folks who have come on and have been added to the polls and who have voted for their first time in the United States.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield? I wonder if the Democratic deficit has followed the same percentage.

Mr. PATRICK. Please do not try to get my mind off onto something else.

The gentleman cannot stay by the issue. That is not important nor complimentary. He wants to talk about something else. Where is the gentleman from Pennsylvania who usually hollers, "Where are we going to get the money?"

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman waited until he went home.

Mr. PATRICK. We will now take the key States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, California, and Illinois. In New York the Republicans went from 1,600,000 to 2,100,000, while the Democrats jumped up from 731,000 to 3,181,000. You could not get five more representative States than these.

In Pennsylvania in 1920 the Republicans were 1,218,000 and in 1936, 690,000. Now, let us look at the Democrats. In Pennsylvania in 1920 the Democrats only had 503,000. In 1936 they had 2,353,000.

In Ohio in 1920 the Republicans had 1,182,000, and in 1923, 1,127,000, and the Democrats went from 780,000 in Ohio in 1920 to 1,747,000 in 1936.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I have two more States I want to cover and these do not include Maine and Vermont either.

In California in 1920 the Republicans had 624,000 and in 1936 they had 836,000, while the Democrats had 229,000 in 1920 and 1,766,000 in 1936.

In Illinois the Republicans in 1920 had 1,420,000, and in 1936, 1,570,000. The Democrats had 534,000 in 1920, and 2,282,000 in 1936.

Mr. Chairman, that is not a bunch of Republican votes. That is a bunch of votes that the Democrats have added of folks who never voted before. So if we will keep from grabbing one another by the seat of the pants and trying to throw each other around, and if we try to keep from getting somewhere at the expense of one another and get down to creating faith and confidence in our Nation and building ourselves up, we will not only get better government, but we will get nearer to that place where people of this country have been trying to get all the time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I noticed the gentleman based his figures on 1936 so far as Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Michigan are concerned and he talked about all these people who never voted before. May I ask, does the gentleman intend to let the colored folks in the South vote in the next election?

Mr. PATRICK. I will take care of that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Answer that question.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman asked the question. Let me answer it in my own way, though it has nothing to do with it. My point is we must win votes by party merit rather than to rail at the other party; but if you want a picture, here it is:

The Republicans under Hoover promised us plenty. They promised us prosperity. Whereas, when we hove up on their program we had idle smokestacks standing everywhere like tombstones at the head of business. Everybody, men and boys, was at dusty road crossings trying to hitchhike. We had the biggest failures by the smallest banks and the most complete flops by the biggest banks. We could not get jobs nor pay for jobs we already had; and when we got a pay day it was not enough to take home. The fires of industry were extinguished. Everything they promised we did not get. We had more misery and failures during this time than we had ever had before, and all under a promise of prosperity, while the wolf stood at the front door and the stork came down the chimney. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the only purpose I had in mind in taking this time was to repeat the question I asked the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK], and which he did not answer.

Mr. PATRICK. I would not miss this masterpiece.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman again the question I asked him when he was speaking a few minutes ago. The gentleman was talking about voters who had never cast a ballot prior to 1932 or 1936, and you intimated, if you did not state, that they won the elections for you in those years. I wished to know and I now ask whether you intend at the next election to let the colored folks in the South vote, and more especially in the gentleman's district in Alabama, does he intend to see that they vote? The gentleman said that he would answer the question but he did not answer it.

Mr. PATRICK. I have one or two boxes in my county where there is a majority of Negro voters, but we are safe in the South and had to pick up most of our votes in the East, where there were so many Republicans.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You have control of registration and the ballot boxes down there, so you did not need the Negro vote?

Mr. PATRICK. Of course, we recruited voters as much as we could where they had not had their eyes opened and had voted Republican.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do you intend to let them vote in the South?

Mr. PATRICK. The Republicans?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do you intend to let the colored folks vote?

Mr. PATRICK. There was a certain incident a few years ago and we have not had many Republicans since.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, far be it from a youngster to participate in this political discussion. It is best he sit back and familiarize himself with the tactics of both parties to prepare for the future.

Some few moments ago my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] consumed some time speaking about the inland waterways, Muscle Shoals, T. V. A., and other Government-subsidized industries affecting in many ways the railroads of this country. Since most of my life has been devoted to railroading I feel it my duty to answer the gentleman at this time.

May I preface my remarks by informing my colleagues that my father spent some 40 years behind the throttle of a locomotive, and for 24 years prior to my coming to Congress I was myself employed by a great railroad of this country.

This has given me a sympathetic understanding of many railroad problems—from the standpoint of the employee, the management, the public, the investor, and the Government—all of the factors which must be considered in any solution of the American railroad problem. However, I shall not undertake to give you a complete answer—not in 10 minutes, anyway. But I am glad to have this opportunity to discuss the railroad situation, which is nearing a crisis and should command public consideration.

Let me say at the outset there is no substitute for rail transportation. There is no panacea, no cure-all for the difficulties besetting the railroads. No man, or set of men, can wave a magic wand and say "Presto" and change the conditions confronting the railroads.

Some gentlemen with a limited knowledge of the multitude of problems which go to make up "the" railroad problem, advocate Government ownership and management as the only solution. Instead of being a solution, however, that change in ownership and management would only create new and more vexing problems. Those of you who experienced Government operation of the railroads during the World War are the least likely to urge that approach to the problem. In fact, the Government has no desire to take over the railroads. The President and others high in administration circles have expressed their opposition to Government ownership of the railroads within the last year.

Some of the roads, however, are confronted with a desperate situation. Unless action is taken to relieve such roads, there is danger of drifting or forcing the railroads into Government ownership, despite the desires of the carriers, the Government, and the public. It has been suggested that a forthright declaration of policy by Congress on the principle of private ownership and operation of the railroads might go far toward ending uncertainty and bolster the confidence of the investing public and the credit of the railroads.

The railroads may be likened to a patient suffering from a long list of complications. The chief trouble is competition from unregulated transportation facilities, most of them enjoying some sort of subsidy. Gradually, at first, and then rapidly, the railroads have seen their freight and passenger traffic go to coastwise shipping, river transport, inland waterways, busses, trucks, private automobiles, pipe lines, and airplanes.

This has resulted in an unequal and economically wasteful competition for traffic among the various modes of transportation. I say unequal competition because of Government subsidies of some sort to most of the other modes of transportation not enjoyed by the railroads. That governmental favoritism has resulted in the creation of transportation facilities beyond the ability of the traffic to support all; hence it is economically wasteful competition. The railroads certainly have a right to object to favoritism to competitors in matters of regulation, taxation, and subsidies.

Therefore the first step toward solution of the railroad problem is the adoption of a national transportation policy based on the Jeffersonian theory of government—equal rights for all, special privileges for none—in matters of regulation, taxation, and subsidies. Once the policy is declared machinery must be created to enforce it. That policy must provide fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation. It should be administered so as to preserve the special advantages of each mode.

Within the last year the railroad problem has been studied by a dozen public and private organizations. There are some differences, of course, but there is general agreement among them on the major factors of the problem and the steps that must be taken to solve it. It would be impossible to review all of them in the short time allotted me. Since I regard the soundest of all the reports to be the one made by the committee appointed by the President, I shall touch briefly upon the summary of the recommendations made by railroad executives, railroad union officials, and a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The I. C. C., that committee recommended, would administer all regulatory provisions with respect to rates, services, valuation, and accounting of all modes of transportation.

A new rate-making rule would be applied to all modes of transportation.

The controversial long-and-short-haul clause would be repealed.

The I. C. C. would have its powers extended with respect to intrastate rates in connection with a general readjustment of interstate rates.

A fair and reasonable system of tolls for commercial use of inland waterways would be established and the Inland Waterways Corporation would be eliminated and its properties sold.

Railroads would be relieved of certain unjust taxes by State and National legislation, and the Government would bear the expense of eliminating grade crossings.

Railroads would be reimbursed by the Government for all costs in excess of any direct benefits to them resulting from the alteration or reconstruction of bridges and other facilities in connection with the improvement of navigable waters and flood-control projects.

The reduced-rates provisions of the so-called land-grant statutes would be repealed.

As a means of immediate relief the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be enlarged to cover the purchase or guarantee of railroad obligations and to make loans to the roads, receivers, or trustees, and the requirements respecting I. C. C. approval of such matters would be modified.

Among the most important of these recommendations is one for the creation of a new and independent agency. It would be charged with the duty of investigating and reporting to Congress on the relative economy and fitness of all modes of transportation and the extent to which they are being subsidized, with recommendations for further legislation.

After that job was completed this new transportation board would be charged with the responsibility for administering as to all modes of transportation regulatory provisions relating to new construction or operations and abandonment of facilities or operations. It also would approve the issuance of securities, consolidations, mergers, leases, acquisition of control and interlocking directorates, and exercise all functions of a research or promotional nature relating primarily to any mode of transportation now vested in other Federal agencies.

The I. C. C. would be relieved of responsibility for a general plan of railroad consolidation and the initiative restored to the carriers. Approval by the Transportation Board would be based upon the public interest and fair and equitable arrangements made to protect the interest of the employees affected.

The I. C. C. also would be relieved of all responsibility in railroad reorganizations. A single court would be established, vested with exclusive jurisdiction over such matters, and the judges would be selected with especial reference to their experience in and qualifications for this service. The Federal district courts would retain jurisdiction over all matters not connected with reorganization.

From this brief summary it may be seen that the problems of the railroads are many, varied, and highly technical, and even the sponsors of that report did not claim their recommendations would solve all of the problems. They did feel, and I agree with them, that the recommendations, if adopted, would go far toward solving not only the railroad problem but create stability in the entire field of transportation.

Perhaps the strongest argument that can be put forward for prompt action by Congress on the railroad problem is the tremendous loss in railroad revenues, which hits the investors, and the wholesale discharge of employees, as a consequence of those losses. For instance, the gross earnings of the railroads was $5,500,000,000 in 1921. In 1938, it was $3,500,000,000—a loss of $2,000,000,000 annually. In 1921 the railroads employed 1,660,000 persons and in 1938 they employed less than 940,000. In other words, almost three-quarters of a million railroaders have been put out of work in 17 years.

Those figures, of course, only tell a small part of the story, but they should be sufficient to convince the public that something should be done to maintain the railroads, which provide the Nation with its lowest-cost mass transportation.

Right now Congress is considering and legislating on the national defense. Only yesterday, before the House passed the $367,000,000 Army defense bill, designed to give us 5,500 war planes, bulwark Panama Canal defenses, and place industry on a war preparedness footing, SAM RAYBURN, the Democratic leader, told the House that we might have to defend ourselves this summer.

Nobody denies that the railroads constitute one of the strongest arms of the national defense. What a calamity would befall us if the railroads were inadequate to meet any war emergency. It behooves us to see to it that the railroads are given an opportunity to rehabilitate themselves. Despite the tremendous decrease in earnings, the railroads have maintained their rights-of-way and structure and equipment sufficiently to carry the volume of business offered, but a war would put the railroads to a severe test. When it comes to war, the railroads alone can provide the necessary military transport service.

Let me repeat, that despite the development of new transportation facilities, the railroads are just as essential today as they ever were in war or in peace.

In that connection, let me read the "final word" of the President's committee, which indicates the fairness of its report, made less than 2 months ago. It stated:

It is manifest that the public interest will not be served by attempting to balk economic progress or to restrain any newly developed transportation agency from performing those functions which it has shown a peculiar ability to fulfill. We suggest no such policy of retrogression. To the contrary, we urge the adoption of a progressive policy which will recognize the changing conditions and will shape future legislation accordingly.

In other words, the only sound approach to the American railroad problem is to place all modes of transportation on an equal footing so far as regulation, taxation, and subsidies are concerned. Place no stumbling block in the way of newly developed transportation agencies, but do not unduly penalize the old, time-tested railroads. Go forward and adopt a plan that is fair alike to the American public that pays the transportation bills, the stockholders who furnish the capital, and the railroad workers who furnish the manpower and skill to make the railroad industry outstanding in economy and efficiency. Thus will we solve the railroad problem—a great national problem. [Applause.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, it is most gratifying that the Committee on Appropriations has included in this bill substantial sums for the Library of Congress, one of the really great libraries of the world. As has been said by an eminent historian, this Library "has come straight from the heart of democracy."

This occasion is, I believe, most appropriate to say something of this institution, which is truly "a symbol of what democracy can accomplish on its own behalf," and to review the career of Dr. Herbert Putnam, the great Librarian, who for 40 years has devoted his life to the development of the Library of Congress.

Since the 5th day of April 1899, Dr. Herbert Putnam has served Congress and the people of the United States as their Librarian. Now, upon what may be the eve of his entry on new duties as our Librarian Emeritus, I cannot refrain from paying tribute to a career at once distinguished and devoted.

Circumstances beyond his control may have dictated that his life should be spent among books. He was born in New York City—the family residence was at 107 East Seventeenth Street—on September 20, 1861, the son of George Palmer and Victorine (Haven) Putnam. The father, one-time collector of internal revenue in New York by appointment of Abraham Lincoln, was the founder of a well-known publishing house which bears his name to this day. Prepared for college by James H. Morse, headmaster of a school on upper Broadway, young Putnam was admitted to Harvard in June 1879. Graduating in 1883 with a bachelor of arts degree, he returned to New York, where he spent the following academic year in attendance at the law school of Columbia University. His life work began—though perhaps he did not himself realize it—in the autumn of 1884, when he accepted the appointment of librarian of the Minneapolis Athenaeum. Two years later he was to write of himself:

I have not indulged an appetite for exploration "in this or foreign countries"; what journeys have fallen to my lot have been between Minneapolis and New England, with some deviations to other cities whose libraries deserved investigation.

In the matter of degrees, I have risen no further than an A. B.; like all good Americans, I trust to get as far as "C." one of these days. No books, pamphlets, articles, addresses, or other literary progeny rest upon my conscience.

Nevertheless the literary progeny of others rested very heavily upon his conscience, indeed, and although he had intended establishing a legal practice in Minneapolis—he had been admitted to the Minnesota bar in 1885—he retained his post in the Athenaeum for 4 years. There he modernized antiquated methods, revised the charging records of books on loan, inaugurated a new system of cataloging and classification, opened the alcoves to readers, insisted that "there are two great problems of library management—one to get the books for the readers, the other to get the readers to the books."

In the summer of 1887 he visited the British Isles—the provincial towns as well as the great cities—where he purchased at second hand some 8,000 volumes in behalf of the Athenaeum; and in September 1888 published an article, perhaps his first, in the Unitarian Review, entitled "Simplicity as a Test for Truth," an essay on the ethical teachings of Tolstoi. Chosen to be the first city librarian of Minneapolis in November 1888, a public library building costing nearly $400,000 was erected under his supervision, which was generally regarded as one of the three or four best-equipped structures of its kind in America; for its collections he purchased about 50,000 volumes, both at home and abroad; through his personal enterprise large additions were made to its original endowment; and when he left the institution it had grown to be the fifth in the United States in point of circulation and to occupy a similar rank in the matter of income.

For personal reasons he resigned that position in December 1891, removed to Cambridge, Mass., was admitted to the Suffolk bar, and practiced law in Boston until the 18th of February 1895, when, with no solicitation * * * on his part, but selected by the trustees because of his proved capacity and brilliant executive reputation, he was elected librarian of the Boston Public Library. This old institution had struggled along without a director for 2 years and had fallen into a condition approaching disorganization. The new building on Copley Square, "that superb palace of books, beautified by Puvis de Chavannes, Sargent, Abbey, St. Gaudens, and MacMonnies," had been recently completed, but it was to be Dr. Putnam's task to open it and make it available for public use. This he did with marked success.

The juvenile room, believed to have been the first room wholly devoted to the service of children in any of the larger libraries of the country, was equipped with suitable tables and chairs and books and proved so acceptable an innovation that the service was rapidly extended to the branches. New impetus was given to cooperation with schools. The interlibrary loan system was reorganized and its scope widened. A special libraries department was created. Another hour was added to the evening opening. A separate reading room for newspapers was provided. Of Dr. Putnam's accomplishments while at the head of the Boston Library, a successor, the late Dr. Charles F. D. Belden, has left this record:

When Mr. Putnam assumed charge there were 9 branches and 12 delivery stations. At the end of his 4 years there were 10 branches, 5 minor branches, called "reading rooms," and 56 deposit stations. The direct home circulation increased from 832,113 in 1894 to 1,245,842 in 1898. The library grew from a total of 610,375 volumes at the close of 1894 to 716,050 at the close of 1898.

He was, as the secretary of his Harvard class proudly reported, "a progressive, original, practical, and tactful Commander, with a positive genius for creating enthusiasm and interest among his subordinates."

John Russell Young died in January 1899, and President McKinley found himself faced with the responsibility of appointing a Librarian of Congress who should preside over the affairs of the institution whose building had been completed but 2 years before. The name of Dr. Putnam was presented, but was withdrawn at his own request. The President then selected a former Member of Congress, but, in response to an insistent demand for an able and practical Librarian, of established capacity, the Senate declined confirmation. Once again the President turned to Putnam, who now accepted the office as a call of professional duty. On March 13, 1899, he was nominated, a fortnight later sent in his resignation to the board of the Boston Library, and on April 5—the Congress was then in recess—he entered upon the great and exacting duties of his new office. He was confirmed December 12, 1899.

Spread upon the official records of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library is found the following minute under date of March 24, 1899:

In accepting the resignation of Mr. Herbert Putnam as librarian, the Trustees of the Public Library of the City of Boston desire to put upon their records the following notes:

That they recognize the harmonious and helpful relations between the Librarian and the trustees from the day he accepted the office; the remarkable administrative qualities he has shown—in directing the alterations by which the Library Building has been so well fitted for its purposes—in increasing to so large a degree the interest the public takes in the library until today it has a larger constituency than any other—in instituting so successfully the work of the Public Library in connection with the Public Schools, and in making the public realize that this institution created and supported by it, really belongs to it, and needs its ever-enlarging patronage and generosity.

That they appreciate the feeling which leads Mr. Putnam, at much personal sacrifice, to give up his position here to take charge of the Congressional Library at Washington, and his desire to make it the culmination of the library system of this country, and in time one of the great Libraries of the world.

That their highest regard goes with him in the difficult work he is about to assume and their faith in his gifts to bring it to the most successful issues.

That faith has been admirably justified by the achievement but only a disciplined imagination could have foreseen in the spring of 1899 the development of an institution "universal in scope, national in service," within a span of 40 years. For when first he examined the existing situation "with a responsible eye" it was with the realization that it would take a quarter of a century to "get the house in order." In his own words:

The building stood as planned; the outside quadrangle, the octagonal reading room centered within it, and the three main book stacks radiating from it—north, east, and south—to the quadrangle itself. For the accommodation of material there were those three stacks, providing for about 1,800,000 volumes; for the accommodation of readers the main and the periodical reading rooms; and for the accommodation of the service, besides the Copyright Office, spaces and equipment here and there in the outside quadrangle. The printed books and pamphlets had been shelved in the stacks; the manuscripts were cased in a corner pavilion; but the maps, music, and prints remained still on the floors or on packing cases.

The printed collections lacked (1) a systematic classification, (2) a shelf list, (3) a catalog, save a manuscript author-list on cards as compiled at the Capitol by an inadequate staff, without adequate bibliographic apparatus. There was the beginning of an organization for classification, shelf-listing, and cataloging; but for these three processes and the accession work also, the staff numbered but 27 persons.

With contagious enthusiasm he set about his work, obtained from Congress the important requests which he had formulated for the development of the Library, increased the working force in each division, and secured a doubled appropriation for the purchase of research materials.

By 1924 the first objective had been won with—

- (1) All spaces in the building duly differentiated and equipped for specialized, as well as general, uses.
- (2) The specialized material installed in appropriate cases.
- (3) A scheme of classification, systematic and elastic, with an appropriate nomenclature.
- (4) Adoption of processes of cataloging, including forms of entry, now standardized for American libraries.
- (5) Actual application of the classification and cataloging to a large portion of the collection of printed books.

Concurrently there had been "a development and diversification of the service." The Library had become increasingly the resort of scholars. The service to Congress had been intensified by the creation of a Legislative Reference Division. The community at large had been benefited by the actual loan of books required for serious uses and not locally available; by publication of "select (topical) lists," of special catalogs and calendars in book form, and, in a few cases, of actual texts of historical manuscripts in the possession of the Library; by information furnished through correspondence, and by supplying at cost to other libraries, societies, and individuals, printed cards, a byproduct of the Library's cataloging operations. Parenthetically it may be mentioned that the distribution and sale of printed catalog cards, inaugurated by Dr. Putnam in 1901, has not only proved of inestimable value to the libraries of the United States through economies effected in their own procedures but has accounted for a sum of over $3,000,000 covered into the Treasury of the United States.

By an act of Congress, approved March 3, 1925, "The Library of Congress Trust Fund Board" was created. Of its five members, three are ex officio: The Secretary of the Treasury, the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, and the Librarian; and the other two are appointed for 5-year terms by the President. This legislation not only foresaw authority to accept endowments but also to receive gifts of money for immediate disbursement. In what it had done, and, along the conventional lines intended still to do, the Government had reached about the limit in the forms of outlay feasible from the Public Treasury. The Trust Fund Board made possible an extension and diversification of such forms. As a result Dr. Putnam has written:

The collections have been enhanced by a huge importation of source material of concern to the investigator, and the personnel by the accession to our staff (in the incumbents of our four "chairs," and in our corps of "consultants") of numerous specialists in various fields of learning, who with the equipment of teachers or investigators are here not to teach or pursue research, but to aid in the serious use of the collections by assisting in the interpretation of them.

Today the collections comprise more than 5,500,000 volumes and pamphlets, 1,400,000 maps and views, 1,194,000 pieces and volumes of music, 542,000 prints, 97,000 bound volumes of newspapers, and so many manuscripts that a numerical estimate is not feasible. The Library possesses the largest collection of books on aeronautics in the world, the largest collection of Chinese books outside of China and Japan, and probably the largest collection of Russian books outside of Russia. In the Division of Manuscripts are the papers of nearly all the Presidents and of many statesmen. Through a Rockefeller grant reproductions of European archives relating to the history of the United States have been secured. In the rare-book collection are about 83,000 items; among them are many first editions, rare bindings, some 25,000 early American pamphlets, over 1,500 bound volumes of American eighteenth century newspapers. Of the more than 4,600 fifteenth century books, 3,000—including the St. Blasius-St. Paul copy of the Gutenberg Bible—were purchased by a special act of Congress in 1930. In the northwest courtyard is the auditorium for public concerts of chamber music, presented to the Government by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge in 1925; adjoining it is the pavilion given by Mrs. Matthew John Whittall in 1938, where the quintet of Stradivari stringed instruments and Tourte bows—her previous gift to the Division of Music—will be kept on exhibit when not in actual use. At the expense of an anonymous donor a gallery on the second floor has been recently remodeled as a center for Hispanic studies. At present, endowment funds exceed $2,000,000, and gifts of money received for immediate disbursement have amounted to about $1,415,000. The main building and the annex contain nearly 36 acres of floor space and about 414 miles of steel shelving. But of more impressive dimensions is the spirit of the place, a spirit breathed into it by its director.

Dr. James Truslow Adams, in the epilogue to his Epic of America, gave expression to it when he wrote:

The Library of Congress . . . has come straight from the heart of democracy, as it has been taken to it, and I here use it as a symbol of what democracy can accomplish on its own behalf. Many have made gifts to it, but it was created by ourselves through Congress, which has steadily and increasingly shown itself generous and understanding toward it. Founded and built by the people, it is for the people. Anyone who has used the great collections of Europe, with their restrictions and red tape and difficulty of access, praises God for American democracy when he enters the stacks of the Library of Congress.

But there is more to the Library of Congress for the American dream than merely the wise appropriation of public money. There is the public itself in two of its aspects. The Library of Congress could not have become what it is today, with all the generous aid of Congress, without such a citizen as Dr. Herbert Putnam at the directing head of it. He and his staff have devoted their lives to making the * * * books and pamphlets serve the public to a degree that cannot be approached by any similar great institution in the Old World. Then there is the public that uses these facilities. As one looks down on the general reading room * * * one sees the seats filled with silent readers, old and young, rich and poor, black and white, the executive and the laborer, the general and the private, the noted scholar and the schoolboy, all reading at their own library provided by their own democracy. It has always seemed to me to be a perfect working out in a concrete example of the American dream—the means provided by the accumulated resources of the people themselves, a public intelligent enough to use them, and men of high distinction, themselves a part of the great democracy, devoting themselves to the good of the whole, uncloistered.

Forty useful years. Only once in that long span has his life's work been interrupted. From the autumn of 1917 to the autumn of 1919 he served as director of the American Library Association War Service, devoted to the supply of reading matter to the American troops preparing for or engaged in the war.

The service covered the various cantonments in this country and the training camps abroad, and, following the armistice, continued circulation among the diminishing detachments, the maintenance of collections, and reading rooms at Coblenz, a considerable establishment of the "A. E. F. University" at Beaune, books and magazines for the transports, and even for such outlying posts as Vladivostok. It included numerous library buildings, a large personnel, typical American equipment and methods, over 5,000,000 books, and the expenditure of about $5,000,000. But the direction of it was from the main headquarters in the Library of Congress; and, except for some trips of inspection to the cantonments in this country, Dr. Putnam did not go to France until December 1918, where he supervised the remaining operations which finally reduced themselves to the activities of the American Library at Paris, an institution which still survives not as a mere relic but as a continuing demonstration of American library methods. It was typical of his trait of submerging his own personality in that of the institution he serves that he refused to accept the distinguished service medal awarded him for this work on the ground that credit was due to the entire library organization.

It will be remembered that in 1886 he hoped to add a C. to his A. B. That letter still eludes him, but others compensate, perhaps, for the deficiency. Among the honorary degrees awarded him have been Litt. D. from Bowdoin, 1898, Brown University, 1914, Princeton University, 1933; LL. D., Columbian—now George Washington—University, 1903, the University of Illinois, 1903, the University of Wisconsin, 1904, Yale, 1907, Williams, 1911, Harvard, 1928, and New York University, 1930. From 1902 to 1906 he was an Overseer of Harvard College.

Dr. Putnam is a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Boston; of the National Institute of Arts and Letters; and a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters. He is a member of many other learned societies. Among them are: American Philosophical Society; Massachusetts Historical Society; Colonial Society of Massachusetts; American Antiquarian Society; Hispanic Society of America; honorary member of the Royal Asiatic Society, north China branch; Phi Beta Kappa.

He was United States delegate to the International Library Conference in London, 1897; a member of the administrative board of the Congress of Arts and Sciences at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in St. Louis in 1904; United States delegate to the Congrès International de Bibliographie in Paris, 1900, and to the World Congress of Libraries and Bibliography in Rome in 1929. He was United States representative at the celebration of the five hundredth anniversary of the birth of Johann Gutenberg at Mainz in 1900. He has twice served as president of the American Library Association. In 1928 he was decorated a Knight of the Royal Order of the Pole Star of Sweden, and the following year received the Roosevelt distinguished-service medal.

These honors he has accepted as bestowed upon his office as personified.

"The 'story' of an executive absorbed in his job," he wrote a few years ago, "is in the main the story of the institution which he is administering." It is to be hoped that, though his role be changed, the story shall be for him and for the Library continued.

At the meeting held in Washington, D. C., January 27, 1939, the American Council of Learned Societies presented an address, as follows:

TO HERBERT PUTNAM, LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS, 1899-1939

AN ADDRESS IN APPRECIATION OF HIS SERVICES TO SCHOLARSHIP AND TO THE ADVANCEMENT OF KNOWLEDGE, PRESENTED ON BEHALF OF THE SCHOLARS OF THE UNITED STATES BY THE AMERICAN COUNCIL OF LEARNED SOCIETIES

Great and good friend: The American Council of Learned Societies esteems itself fortunate that the rotation of its meetings brings it to Washington in this year of 1939, which marks for you the conclusion of 40 years of active duty as Librarian of Congress and the inauguration of another term of service, which we hope may be prolonged far into the future as Librarian Emeritus.

This council, composed of delegates from 20 academies, societies, and associations of American scholars devoted to the advancement of those studies that we term collectively the humanities, may appropriately claim the honor of addressing you in the name of American scholarship and on behalf of those fields of study that are concerned with the intellectual experience of mankind.

For the studies that we represent are dependent to an unusual degree upon the collections that find their natural resting places in the great libraries of the world, and it is upon such libraries, as well as upon their custodians, that scholars must chiefly rely for the materials that are essential to the advancement of knowledge.

The dependence of American scholars upon the Library of Congress was recognized by this council when it selected Washington as the principal seat of its activities, and the justification of that selection has been demonstrated in innumerable ways and by daily experience.

For you, and the collaborators and associates whom you have chosen, have made the Library of Congress a national institution, the peer in all respects of its great prototypes, the British Museum and the Bibliothèque Nationale. You have made of it an indispensable instrument on the American continent for the promotion of learning and the increase of knowledge. Under your guidance it has exerted a profound and lasting influence upon libraries throughout the world, and because of that influence scholars of other countries are better served by their own national libraries, and American scholars, to whom the hospitality of foreign libraries is generously accorded, are able to make more effective use of their resources.

You have set an example in planning and creating apparatus which has rendered the greatest service to scholars everywhere. The catalogue of the Library of Congress, printed upon cards and widely distributed, has become a bibliography of first resort; the Union Catalogue, in which you have brought together the resources of the most important American libraries, is a practical move toward realizing the age-long dream of the universal library; you have made the facilities of the Library of Congress available for the preparation of many tools of research, such as the Census of Medieval and Renaissance Manuscripts, the Census of Indic Manuscripts, and the Catalogue of Alchemical Manuscripts, to mention only three such works.

You have led in adapting the most modern photographic processes to the needs of the scholar, and have not only made widely available for purposes of research copies of your own collections, but have enormously increased those collections by adding to them photographs of materials hitherto accessible only in distant depositories. By such means, for example, you have added nearly 2,000,000 pages of unique documents relating to the history of the United States from the archives and libraries of foreign countries; and similarly, you have accumulated collections of paleographic facsimiles and of photographs of literary and historical manuscripts needed by American scholars in the course of their investigations; and you have also inaugurated systematic photographic exchanges with other libraries, thereby enriching their collections as well as your own.

In your development of the resources of the Library of Congress, you have foreseen the needs of future generations of scholars and have taken advantage of opportunities that might never recur to anticipate them. Impressive evidences of such foresight are the great collections in Slavic literature and history, in the history and literature of Spain, Portugal, and Hispanic America, and in the history and civilization of India. You have also built up a vast collection of American historical manuscripts, including the papers of many Presidents of the United States, and have brought it about that the Division of Manuscripts of the Library of Congress has become the principal center of research in American history.

Perhaps the most striking example of your foresight into future needs is the Division of Orientalia. Here you have brought together what is commonly conceded to be the most important library of works on Chinese history and civilization that exists elsewhere than in the Far East. The tragic events of the last half decade make this collection, with its many rare or unique books, doubly precious, and it constitutes an invaluable resource for that growing school of young American scholars who, undismayed by difficulties of language, their attention fixed upon the farther shores of the Pacific, are devoting their careers to fields of study in which all is yet to be done and the cultivation of which is vital to our understanding of some of the greatest problems that lie before us.

In the domain of the arts you have vastly increased the resources and services of the Library of Congress and have accumulated rich stores of materials for the study of iconography and for the illustration of American life and culture. To the Division of Fine Arts have come the works of many American artists, such as Joseph Pennell, the records of the Historic American Buildings Survey, and thousands of photographs of the domestic and public architecture of the United States.

In the realm of music, you have created the Archive of American Folk Song, and, through the generosity of private donors, have made of the Division of Music an unique center of musical interests, offering not only what the past has given but opportunity for composers of the present day.

You have been able to communicate your vision to others and to fire their imaginations so that many persons of public spirit have found in the Library of Congress a worthy object of their benefactions, and in this way its activities have been extended and its collections have been enriched.

Notable among these benefactions has been that of the Congress of the United States itself, which, on its own initiative, secured for the Library of Congress the greatest single collection of examples of early European printing, including the great Bible from the press of Johann Gutenberg, that is now to be found on the American continent. Nor are these incunabula merely objects of interest to collectors and amateurs, for they embody the intellectual experience of western civilization as it passed through a great transitional period of history and emerged into the Renaissance.

In all these developments you have always held to your conception of the Library of Congress as a community of scholars unselfishly serving the public and taking part in the advancement of knowledge; to fulfill this conception you have secured foundations for chairs and provision for consultancies, and thus have been able to call to the service of the Library scholars of reputation whose presence makes it possible to realize more completely the values which the Library's treasures hold, and to interpret more fully those values for the benefit of all who seek them. And over this community of scholars you have presided, as you preside over the round table which you have made a gracious institution of our National Capital, with urbanity and with that sympathetic understanding, born of wisdom, that inspires to ever greater effort and achievement.

Signed for the American Council of Learned Societies in the city of Washington and the District of Columbia, the 27th day of January 1939.

William E. Lingelbach, chairman; Richard P. McKeon, vice chairman; Harry Miller Lydenberg, secretary-treasurer; Waldo Gifford Leland, permanent secretary and executive.

American Philosophical Society, held at Philadelphia for Promoting Useful Knowledge, 1727; American Academy of Arts and Sciences, 1780; American Antiquarian Society, 1812; American Oriental Society, 1842; American Numismatic Society, 1858; American Philological Association, 1869; Archaeological Institute of America, 1879; Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis, 1880; Modern Language Association of America, 1883; American Historical Association, 1884; American Economic Association, 1885; American Philosophical Association, 1900; American Anthropological Association, 1902; American Political Science Association, 1903; Bibliographical Society of America, 1904; American Sociological Society, 1905; American Society of International Law, 1906; History of Science Society, 1924; Linguistic Society of America, 1924; Mediaeval Academy of America, 1925.

Fred N. Robinson, R. W. G. Vail, Franklin Edgerton, Alfred R. Bellinger, G. Lincoln Hendrickson, Benjamin D. Meritt, W. F. Albright, Wm. A. Nitze, W. S. Ferguson, Frank H. Knight, C. J. Ducasse, Franz Boas, Frederic A. Ogg, Henry B. Van Hoesen, F. Stuart Chapin, George Grafton Wilson, Henry R. Viets, E. H. Sturtevant, Samuel H. Cross, Arthur Darby Nock, Roy Wood Sellars, H. Theodor Westbrock, J. S. P. Tatlock, H. E. Sigerist, Mortimer Graves, Jeremiah D. M. Ford, Clarence S. Brigham, James R. Ware, Sydney P. Noe, Campbell Bonner, William Bell Dinsmoor, Henry J. Cadbury, George Sherburn, Wallace Notestein, James Washington Bell, Glenn R. Morrow, F. M. Setzler, Kenneth Colegrove, James H. S. Bossard, Elbert D. Thomas, Gregory D. Walcott, Geo. S. Lane, G. W. Cottrell, Jr., W. Norman Brown, Robert C. Binkley, Edwin Mims, Hans Kurath, Otto Kinkeldey, Harris E. Starr, Charles H. Beeson, Archer Taylor, L. R. Lind, Hugh Borton, Carl H. Kraeling, L. A. Post, John W. Flight, Percy W. Long, Conyers Read, Harold A. Phelps, Roland G. Kent, Robert P. Blake, E. A. Speiser, G. Howland Shaw, Arthur O. Lovejoy, C. H. Haring, L. Carrington Goodrich, Donald Goodchild.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of one-half of the salaries and other expenses of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, as authorized by law, $29,000.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RABAUT: On page 10, line 6, strike out "$29,000" and insert "$27,500."

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I think it should be explained to the Committee that this is merely a corrective amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

SALARIES

For the Librarian, the Librarian Emeritus, Chief Assistant Librarian, Chief Reference Librarian, and other personal services, including special and temporary services and extra special services of regular employees (not exceeding $2,000 at rates to be fixed by the Librarian), $1,066,640.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RABAUT: On page 31, in line 19, strike out "$1,066,640" and insert "$1,073,020."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of books and for legal periodicals for the law library, including payment for legal society publications and for freight, commissions, and all other expenses incidental to the acquisition of law books and all other material for the increase of the law library, $85,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1941.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I gather from the report it is the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations no substantial increase should be made by reason of the fact that the Librarian Emeritus will presently take up the affairs of that office and there will be a new Librarian.

I express my regret that the committee should not have seen fit to recognize fully the needs brought about by the new building known as the Annex of the Library. This beautiful structure, containing a large amount of additional floor space, makes possible the correction of some defects that have come with the growth of the Library. The reasons given by the committee for not attending to them at once is that the new Librarian should have the direction of the appropriation when made. The appropriation then will provide a large increase in the funds available for the Library. While I have no desire to take issue with the committee, I would point out that the service of the Library to Congress—and it is the instrument of Congress—in the next year will be sadly handicapped by the lack of desirable funds.

There are in the Library now tons of material not yet cataloged, not on the shelves and not available for the use of Members of Congress. Certainly, it seems to me, we could be useful to ourselves as well as to the public if we made available everything there, and I fail to understand why any change in the administration of the Library would affect the necessary work which has piled up in the years of the depression. The Librarian has not asked from year to year for sums desirable, being one of our public servants who has desired to keep his expenses within the minimum absolutely necessary. When he comes before us and points out the need of cataloging this material and getting it on the shelves, I am sorry the committee felt it should postpone the matter, and I express the hope that there may yet be added to the bill the funds required to put the Library in complete working order. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

To provide the Public Printer with a working capital for the following purposes for the execution of printing, binding, lithographing, mapping, engraving, and other authorized work of the Government Printing Office for the various branches of the Government: For salaries of Public Printer and Deputy Public Printer; for salaries, compensation, or wages of all necessary officers and employees additional to those herein appropriated for, including employees necessary to handle waste paper and condemned material for sale; to enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of law granting holidays and half holidays and Executive orders granting holidays and half holidays with pay to employees; to enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of law granting leave to employees with pay, said pay to be at the rate for their regular positions at the time the leave is granted; rental of buildings and equipment, fuel, gas, heat, electric current, gas and electric fixtures; bicycles, motor-propelled vehicles for the carriage of printing and printing supplies, and the maintenance, repair, and operation of the same, to be used only for official purposes, including operation, repair, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and the purchase or exchange of two such passenger vehicles (at a cost, including the allowance on any vehicle given in part payment therefor, of not to exceed $1,000 and $750, respectively), for official use of the officers of the Government Printing Office when in writing ordered by the Public Printer; freight, expressage, telegraph and telephone service, furniture, typewriters, and carpets; traveling expenses; stationery, postage, and advertising; directories, technical books, newspapers and magazines, and books of reference (not exceeding $500); adding and numbering machines, time stamps, and other machines of similar character; rubber boots, coats, and gloves; machinery (not exceeding $300,000); equipment, and for repairs to machinery, implements, and buildings, and for minor alterations to buildings; necessary equipment, maintenance, and supplies for the emergency room for the use of all employees in the Government Printing Office who may be taken suddenly ill or receive injury while on duty; other necessary contingent and miscellaneous items authorized by the Public Printer; for expenses authorized in writing by the Joint Committee on Printing for the inspection of printing and binding equipment, material, and supplies and Government printing plants in the District of Columbia or elsewhere (not exceeding $1,000); for salaries and expenses of preparing the semimonthly and session indexes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing (chief indexer at $3,480, one cataloger at $3,180, two catalogers at $2,460 each, and one cataloger at $2,100); for the printing and distribution of the Federal Register in accordance with the provisions of the act approved July 26, 1935; and for all the necessary labor, paper, materials, and equipment needed in the prosecution and delivery and mailing of the work; in all, $3,685,000; to which sum shall be charged the printing and binding authorized to be done for Congress, including supplemental and deficiency estimates of appropriations, the printing, binding, and distribution of the Federal Register (not exceeding $120,000), the printing and binding for use of the Government Printing Office, and printing and binding (not exceeding $2,000) for official use of the Architect of the Capitol upon requisition of the Secretary of the Senate; in all to an amount not exceeding $2,685,000: Provided, That not less than $1,000,000 of such working capital shall be returned to the Treasury as an unexpended balance not later than 6 months after the close of the fiscal year 1940.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this to direct the attention of the Members very briefly to the proposition to reduce the appropriation for the printing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I only want to say that I think that subject is covered very fully in the RECORD this morning. I think the RECORD shows plainly what happened in respect to that situation, and I request the members of the Committee to read the remarks on that subject at their convenience. They will prove, I think, first, that the change in the form of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is undoubtedly a function of the Joint Committee on Printing, and that no economy will result from this proposed change, because of the fact that unless the Joint Committee on Printing acts on this later, a deficiency appropriation must be passed for the $135,000 or the $120,000, whichever it is; that no economy whatever is being effected by this gesture on the part of this subcommittee. I do not propose, however, at this stage of the week, when gentlemen are anxious to go home, and when, as a matter of fact, it is merely a gesture which amounts to nothing one way or the other, since the joint committee will have to act in any event, I do not propose to offer an amendment and cause a roll call, to the discomfort of the members of the Committee.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. Yes; I gladly yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am glad the gentleman is not going to offer an amendment under the circumstances, but I do say this: If this provision has the effect, or is likely to have the effect, of changing the form of the printing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from a two-column page to a three-column page, I hope the Joint Committee on Printing will not yield to it. I think the RECORD is printed in proper form at the present time.

Mr. JARMAN. I sincerely thank the majority leader for that contribution. May I add, since the gentleman was not here when I talked on this subject yesterday, that I read a telegram quoting him and the leaders on both sides of the aisle in both Houses, as being opposed to this proposition, and, further, I read that telegram to the chairman of this subcommittee and later to his subcommittee before they took action. I think no further remarks are necessary in substantiation of my position. I thank the Committee very sincerely for its attention.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. BROOKS. I have been informed that this change will effect an economy. Is it the gentleman's idea that it will make no reduction in the cost?

Mr. JARMAN. That is a moot question. Some say it will and some say it will not.

Mr. BROOKS. What is the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. JARMAN. My opinion is that possibly a slight saving might occur, but my opinion is, further, as the gentleman will see if he reads my remarks of yesterday, that even though the whole $135,000 will be saved, when it is brought to my attention that the elder statesmen of this House, and the other body, on both sides of the aisle, think they would not like the change, that they could not read it as well and that it would provide discomfort for them, I say to the gentleman that so far as I am concerned, with that situation, I do not care to save the $125,000 or the $135,000 at the expense of that discomfort to the leaders on both sides of the aisle in both Houses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COSTELLO, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4218) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken and the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION AND EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 96, Rept. No. 73) for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4011) to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 96

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 4011, a bill to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 97, Rept. No. 74) for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4012, to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 97

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 4012, a bill to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

REPORT FROM COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Naval Affairs may have until midnight tomorrow night to file a report on the naval-defense program, and the same request also if there is a minority report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object, I would simply like to know what the program is going to be for next week.

Mr. RAYBURN. On Monday we intend to call the Consent Calendar. I think it will probably take less than 30 minutes. Immediately on completion of that the rules which have just been reported by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] will be called up, affecting the extension of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its activities. On Tuesday a rule will be brought in to make in order the consideration of the naval-defense bill. When that is completed the Treasury and Post Office Department appropriation bill will follow; and that will complete the program, as far as I know.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This Export-Import Bank extension probably will not be reached next week then?

Mr. SABATH. It is expected it will be reached on Monday. The extension of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will not take very long. There is no opposition to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. SABATH. I have been informed by the minority members of the Rules Committee. They feel there will be no objection to the extension of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We have agreed on 1 hour of debate and we doubt very much that that time will be utilized.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is hoped to dispose of the two matters, which these rules make in order, on Monday if possible.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn until Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the order of the House entered on February 2, 1939, the Chair designates the gentleman from Texas, Mr. LANHAM, to read Washington's Farewell Address on February 22 next.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a brief statement by Major General Rivers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein certain quotations contained in the remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in Committee of the Whole and to include therein a copy of the document to which I referred and the address on the envelope to which I referred, and a table prepared by myself.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by Mr. Ross S. Lockridge, noted Indiana historian at my native city, Fort Wayne, Ind., on the Anthony Wayne Memorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter addressed to me by Mr. David Lasser. I may say in this connection, Mr. Speaker, that I had consulted the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], and have a letter from him in which he says that as for himself he does not object to my extending this letter in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by the Honorable Herbert Hoover at the Lincoln Day banquet in New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. O'BRIEN for 6 days on account of official business.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore made the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

FRANCES WILLARD CENTENARY

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, some 85 years ago when the present legislative Chambers of the Senate and the House of Representatives were added to the Capitol, the old hall of the House became a memorial hall to the country's illustrious dead. Each State was given the privilege of presenting to the Capitol statues of two of its greatest citizens. In 1905 the great, progressive State of Illinois broke all precedents and sent as its tribute the statue of a woman—Frances Willard.

Most of Frances Willard's life was spent in Illinois, her great career as an educator achieved its crowning success there, but we of New York claim her also for she was born in the little village of Churchville in Monroe County, N. Y., a hundred years ago. Her bas relief is one of six adorning the great stairway of our capitol in Albany. With the bust of other great Americans, hers has been placed in the Hall of Fame in New York City, and 22 other memorials do her honor in other towns and villages of the State.

Two or three years after her birth her family migrated to Ohio so that her parents could continue their education together, as Oberlin was at that time the only coeducational college in America.

Later they moved to Wisconsin where her father served in the legislature, but when the time arrived for Frances and her sister to finish their education the family moved to Evanston because there had been established a Northwestern Female College. According to its prospectus it furnished a "curriculum equivalent to that of Yale and Harvard Colleges." "Equivalent" you notice, not "identical." Higher education for women was a novel idea then.

She graduated from that college at the age of 20, and no other profession being open to women in those days, became a teacher, for her active spirit could not tolerate idleness.

Then came 2 years of travel in Europe and study at the Sorbonne and University of Paris. On her return she became president of the Evanston College for Ladies, successor to that college from which she had graduated. It was wholly staffed by women, and she was the first woman college president in the country to give degrees to women. Later it was merged with the great Northwestern University, situated at Evanston. There Miss Willard was given a professorship and was appointed dean of women.

When she resigned from the university it was to become, through conviction, a worker in the temperance movement, which was just beginning, and she soon became its leader.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union began as an organization to combat intemperance, but Miss Willard found it to be "the open door through which she entered into her service for the world." Under her magnificent leadership it became a world-wide power for social justice.

Eloquent, witty, vivid, her charming personality drew to her and to the cause of temperance a vast following.

Her clear statesmanlike mind, her fearlessness, and her spirituality, her warm sympathy for every phase of humanity held that following to her. Her fame spread over the country, and she traveled far and wide through the States on her lecture tours. Canada and England called her, and there ovations greeted her. Her fame penetrated all Europe, and today there are local branches of the W. C. T. U. in almost every civilized country of the world. The branches in the Far East and in the Near East are rendering valuable service to the narcotic division of the League of Nations in combating the evils of the trade in opium and other drugs.

It was Miss Willard who organized the International W. C. T. U., the first organization of world women for any cause whatever, and that led to her organizing, in cooperation with Susan B. Anthony and May Wright Sewall, the National Council of Women of the United States, a clearing house for women's activities here and throughout the world, and it held its first meeting here in Washington before a gathering of 5,000 people.

She became its president, and she was for 19 years president of the national and for 7 years president of the International W. C. T. U.

We of today think of Miss Willard only as a great reformer. She was more than that; she was a woman of vision. She was a crusader, and like all crusaders was years ahead of her time.

She saw the necessity for woman suffrage, and 40 years before it was attained she swung the powerful influence of her organization in its favor while she worked in cooperation with the great women leading that crusade.

A friend of labor, she said to the W. C. T. U. "the labor question is our question," and she incorporated into her declaration of principles in 1874 this paragraph:

We believe in a living wage, in an 8-hour day, in courts of conciliation and arbitration, in justice as opposed to greed of gain, in peace on earth and good will to men.

Writing in protest against inadequate wages, she said:

The triumph of the labor movement will change all that. The unit of value will be a day's work with brains or hand, honestly done and fairly measured. As an offset to that day the one who lives it shall have shelter, food, clothing, what we call the comforts of life.

And again she wrote:

I believe it will come about some day by evolution, not revolution, that the tools of production, transportation, etc., will belong to the people, and that everybody will do some physical work each day in the adequate employment of everyone.

In 1886 she wrote:

We have a million unemployed men in America today. Why not, then, reduce to 8 hours of daily labor and make room for them? This change is sure to come and is no more revolutionary than was the change from 16 hours to 10.

One would almost say Frances Willard was a prophet.

And today, a hundred years after her birth, her centenary is being celebrated by the Library of Congress, the Sorbonne, the University of Paris, Alpha Phi International Fraternity, International Council of Women, and many other institutions and organizations, and by the W. C. T. U. in 54 countries.

The gloom that shrouds our world today is pierced for a moment by the radiant spirit of a woman—an American woman, Frances Willard. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes at the conclusion of the address of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] for 10 minutes.

FRANCES WILLARD CENTENARY

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, this year, 1939, marks the centenary of the birth of Frances Elizabeth Willard at Churchville, N. Y., on September 28, 1839. Today, the 17th of February, marks the anniversary both of her death 41 years ago in New York City on February 17, 1898, and also of the presentation of her statue in this Capitol by the State of Illinois as a tribute to one of its most distinguished citizens. The inscription thereon well bespeaks the esteem in which the whole world holds her:

Ah! it is women who have given the costliest hostages to fortune. Out into the battle of life they have sent their best beloved, with fearful odds against them.

Oh, by the dangers they have dared; by the hours of patient watching over beds where helpless children lay; by the incense of 10,000 prayers wafted from their gentle lips to Heaven, I charge you give them power to protect along life's treacherous highway those whom they have so loved.

Though Frances Willard was born in New York, she spent most of her life in Illinois. In her young girlhood she came to Evanston, my home town, to attend school, and remained to become later the president of the Evanston College for Ladies, the dean of women in the Northwestern University, and the president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with headquarters there.

DEDICATION OF NEW WILLARD HALL IN EVANSTON

On September 28 last the Northwestern University inaugurated the celebrations of the centenary year by dedicating a handsome new Willard Hall to commemorate the fact that women gained admission to the university largely through the influence of this gifted and persistent pioneer for educational advantages for women.

As part of the ceremony, sponsored by the alumnae and the Alpha Phi Sorority, President Walter Dill Scott, in accepting the key to the building, said:

We are meeting here today to carry on the program which Frances Willard started on July 4, 1871. We are merely providing a larger building, a safer building, a more adequate building, and a more beautiful building. But with it all this is still Willard Hall. This key is to symbolize the opening of the new building and the continuation of the work of Frances Willard, and completes a memorial which is even more significant than any other of the hundreds of memorials in her honor.

MISS WILLARD'S INFLUENCE ON THE YOUNG

President Scott, no doubt, thought of Willard Hall as being most significant because of its relation to the advancement of the education for women, but many of the other memorials connected with education of the young stand preeminent—school buildings bearing her name; portraits, busts, and plaques of her in schoolrooms; anniversary-day programs established by law in many States.

Of these programs one of the largest newspapers in Oregon, on September 28 of a certain year, carried the following editorial:

The tribute which State law decrees shall be paid today in every school in Oregon is more than a testimonial to the services of a remarkable woman to the temperance cause. It is a formal recognition also of the achievements of one who, distinguished in other ways, peculiarly united talent for leadership with a fine sense of what constitutes the essentials of character. She was a temperance advocate, but she was more. Her plan embraced every worth-while movement by which the humanities might be advanced in practical ways.

Miss Willard painted on a canvas as large as the world. She saw issues in relation to all people, everywhere, and she comprehended the necessity for laying a solid foundation for the structure to come. Her conceptions were those of an idealist, but she executed them with the pains of one who builds for all time. * * * Withal it was her gift of seeing things straight and her capacity for discarding the nonessentials to which chiefly was due the profound impress of the personality she left on every movement with which her name is associated.

Both temperance and the political advancement of women are deeply indebted to Miss Willard; but so is that still more essential principle that character building comes first of all in the education scheme. The story of her life cannot be read with full understanding except as it includes the social contrasts she witnessed during her lifetime. It will not be gainsaid that the world has been made a better place to live in as a result of her work.

PROGRAM FOR WORLD ORGANIZATION OF WOMEN

Frances Willard's program for the organized women of the world as stated by herself fits in precisely with the editor's conception of her:

To educate the young; to form a better public opinion; to reform as far as possible by religious, ethical, and scientific means the drinking classes; to seek the transforming power of divine grace for ourselves and for all for whom we work; that they and we may willingly transgress no law of pure and wholesome living; and, finally, we pledge ourselves to labor and to pray that all these principles, founded on the gospel of Christ, may be worked out into the customs of society and the laws of the land.

Mrs. Robert Burdette, one of the founders of the Alpha Phi Sorority, of which Frances Willard was once president, sent a testimonial to the dedicatory services of the new Willard Hall. It was a tribute to the influence of Miss Willard on college girls, one paragraph of which I quote:

My memory of Frances Willard—

Mrs. Burdette writes—

is that of my young womanhood of an older woman. She has always been to me a very real and living presence because of a question she asked me. I still seem to feel her gentle touch upon my arm as she said, "Clara, what are you going to do with your life?" That was characteristic of her. She was always using the present opportunity to help build you a better future.

MILITANT ADVOCATE OF RECOGNITION OF WOMEN IN THE CHURCH

Equal if not surpassing her interest in education was her interest in religion and women's participation in church activities. Devoutly loyal, she persisted in talking as well as listening until finally reward came by her election, with four other women, as delegate to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Today her home church in Evanston honors her by a stained-glass window, placed there by a family in appreciation of this very loyalty and persistency.

More than three dozen other churches in the land—Presbyterian and Baptist, as well as Methodist—have similar memorial windows. The most recent and one of the most beautiful has been recently placed in the Heinz Memorial Chapel at the University of Pittsburgh. It was ordered by the will of Henry John Heinz, who throughout his busy life devoted himself to promoting Christian education in the Sunday school.

A CHAMPION OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE

Frances Willard was from her early childhood a patriot and a civic leader. When her brother Oliver went to cast his first vote she is said to have exclaimed to her sister Mary, "Wouldn't you like to vote as well as Oliver? Don't you and I love our country just as well as he does, and doesn't the country need our ballots?"

When she grew up and became the leader of a great band of organized women she argued and urged the necessity of franchise for women, until finally in 1879 the vote was carried and the national convention adopted the suffrage plank. While to others in later years came the realization, it was the dream of Frances Willard come true.

FRANCES WILLARD A WORLD CITIZEN

Many other testimonials could be given on this memorial day, but I should like to include just one other which pictures her influence on the women in many lands other than our own. It is a tribute paid to her by Lady Henry Somerset, of England, in 1892:

To no special cause did Frances Willard belong; her life was the property of humanity; and I believe there was no single cry that could rise from the world, not one "wail of weakness" of any kind, that did not call her to rise and go forth in that chivalric strength and gentleness that have clad her as with a holy panoply in the battle of life. * * * To no other could be given that rare combination of power and perfect gentleness of playful humor and tender pathos, that strange mixture of reserve with an almost childlike confidence, and, above all, that sublime spirituality that always made you feel how near she was to the invisible.

She was welcomed in England as I suppose no philanthropist has ever been welcomed in our time. * * * The vast meeting that was organized to greet her at Exeter Hall (London) was the most representative that has ever assembled in that historic building. * * * On the platform sat members of Parliament, dignitaries of our own church, and temperance leaders from the Roman Catholic Church, leaders of the labor movement and of the Salvation Army, and delegations from the Methodist, Baptist, and Congregational churches and the Society of Friends. * * *

A woman called of God, a woman who preached Christ in politics, Christ in the home, the equality of men and women, the liberation of the oppressed, the destruction of legalized wrong, the upbuilding of all that was great in home, in government, and in the Nation. And she who had gone forth without money and without influence, but with an untarnished name, a clear brain, and indomitable will, and a God-given inspiration, had in her 20 years of work gathered round her not the sympathies of her own land only but the admiration and good will of the whole English-speaking race. The time she spent in England was a triumphal procession, and greetings awaited her in every city of importance throughout the whole of Great Britain and Ireland. * * * Wherever she went her clear, incisive thought, the pathos and power of her words, and perhaps most of all the sweet, gentle woman, won the heart as well as the intellect of all who met to greet her and assembled to hear her.

Achievements of Frances Willard outspan the Nation; her idealism, courage, and power of organization touched for eternal good every corner of the universe. It is therefore with immeasurable pride that Evanston, Ill., claims distinction as the center of her activity, as the chief beneficiary of her life full spent for others. It is therefore with equally signal pride that I, among the humblest of her neighbors, today, on the anniversary of her death, cite Frances Willard to the Congress of the United States as an everliving spirit and force.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] for 10 minutes.

JOSEPHINE BRAWLEY HUGHES

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak extemporaneously at this time, but I think appropriately, following the splendid addresses to which we have just listened, paying tribute to a great and noble character, a leader among American women. About 2 evenings ago on the floor below in this Capitol I witnessed an impressive ceremony in honor of Susan B. Anthony. Following these memorial addresses and ceremonies during the past 2 days both for Susan B. Anthony and Frances E. Willard, I feel I ought to comment on the wonderful achievements of another famous American woman in the far-away southwestern corner of our country, at Tucson, Ariz.—one who actually assisted and was assisted by both of these leading spirits a generation ago.

I refer to Mrs. Josephine Brawley Hughes, Arizona's Susan B. Anthony and Frances E. Willard tied up in one energetic personality. This woman came to Tucson, Ariz., when it was a little frontier town, and she tried out, first in Arizona Territory and later in the State of Arizona, several great sociological ideas advanced by her eastern friends. Great movements often start in some distant corner of the country and become Nation-wide. It was so with prohibition and with woman suffrage. Mrs. Hughes was remarkably successful in the corner where she worked.

Mrs. Josephine Brawley Hughes is one of the most interesting women who came to early Arizona. When she reached Tucson in 1874 she was the third homemaker from the Eastern States to come to the Old Pueblo to make a home for her husband and family, and try to make Tucson and all Arizona fit places in which decent people could live. She had come from Pennsylvania to San Francisco by sea, and thence to San Diego, and by stage from San Diego to Tucson, carrying her little daughter as a babe in arms. The husband, who later became Governor of Arizona Territory, had come a year or two ahead of his wife and baby girl and had established a home at Tucson. It was a hard and dangerous trip for Mrs. Hughes and baby Gertrude across the desert and through Indian country.

The stage was run day and night with no stops except to change horses. The stage coach bounced around on its leather springs until the passengers could scarcely stay in their seats. At one time baby Gertrude was bounced clear out of the arms of her mother, but, fortunately, landed in the soft sand through which at that moment they were passing. Mrs. Hughes carried a loaded rifle, also, to be used in case of Indian attacks, but she was uneasy all the while for fear the jolting of the stage coach might fire the gun.

Tucson in 1874 was not the modern beautiful and pleasant city that it is today. Most of the houses were crude adobe dwellings. Dirt floors were everywhere. Insects of all kinds were numerous, and tarantulas, scorpions, and centipedes, as well as cockroaches and mosquitos were troublesome. Mrs. Hughes got rid of some of this insect life by getting a flock of chickens as soon as possible. She introduced carpets, as well as board floors, and brought the idea of screens for doors and windows, as well as candle molds for tallow candles, from Pennsylvania.

There were no electric lights in Tucson then. Each house was lighted with a burning rag dipped in a saucer of grease. Water was sold for drinking purposes by peddlers at 10 cents a bucket. This had to be brought from springs some miles away. The washing of clothes was done by native women who took them to the nearest stream and dipped them in the water. Then, with home-made soft soap they rubbed them on a flat rock, slopped them up and down in the water again and hung them on mesquite trees to dry.

When Mrs. Hughes first came to Tucson, there was very little fruit to be found there. Pomegranates and quinces were brought from Mexico in wooden-wheeled carts. Sometimes the Mexicans brought sugarcane, which was sold to the inhabitants of the city. The children could not buy candy, so they took short sticks of sugarcane from which they sucked the sweetness. These were the first all-day suckers to be used in Arizona.

Along with her first endeavor to improve the living conditions there, Mrs. Hughes gave herself to those tasks which thoughtful women saw to be paramount. Having been a disciple of both Susan B. Anthony and Frances E. Willard she felt that temperance conditions ought to be improved and that it must be done chiefly by women. Saloons were everywhere. Homes were deprived of what they should have because of the prevailing intemperance. As Mrs. Hughes started out to cure the drink evil she soon found she would be unable to go forward unless the good women of the community had the ballot in their hands. So, as an effective means of attack, she advocated woman suffrage even at that early date.

She had a little son named John. Along about 1890 she attended a great national suffrage convention here in the East and brought her little boy along. At that national convention Susan B. Anthony picked up the little boy John, brought him up on the rostrum before thousands of zealous women, and there she laid her hands upon his head with almost religious ceremony, and dubbed him the Suffrage Knight of Arizona.

This boy grew up. Arizona was admitted into the Union as a State in 1912. John Hughes was one of the two State senators from Pima County, Ariz., in the first State legislature. I may pause long enough at this point to say that in forming the Constitution of the State of Arizona the woman suffrage provision and the prohibition provision were not inserted in the State constitution, although a strenuous attempt was made to do so.

In the first Legislature of the State of Arizona, Senator Hughes introduced amendments covering both propositions and they were incorporated in the Constitution of the State of Arizona almost from the beginning of its statehood. Thus the work of Susan B. Anthony and Frances E. Willard in a Nation-wide effort, faltering in eastern communities where the atmosphere was hostile, found its first fruition in the Southwest where conditions were more favorable and where Josephine Brawley Hughes was on the job.

I may add that Mrs. Hughes, with all of her family cares, started a newspaper in Tucson, Ariz., as a means for carrying on her battle for righteousness, for prohibition, and for woman suffrage. Arizona was one of the very first of the States of the Union to have woman suffrage, and this was years before the nineteenth amendment was added to the Federal Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, in asking your indulgence, I take this brief moment to pay tribute along with my colleagues to the great work of Susan B. Anthony and Frances E. Willard and to point out that much of its fulfillment was due to the efforts of their comrade, Mrs. Josephine Hughes, of Arizona. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of cotton and to include a resolution adopted by the Arkansas Legislature, as well as an editorial taken from the Gazette.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NORRELL]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute on Frances E. Willard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, in this, the centennial year of the birth of Frances Willard, one of America's greatest women and first to be honored with a statue in the American Hall of Fame, we have heard a number of eulogistic speeches. Gentlemen from New York and Illinois have paid tribute to Frances Willard, one because she was born in the State of New York, others because she went to college there and became a resident of Illinois.

But, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, the real life of Frances Willard was not formed in New York, nor in Illinois; the plan and outline of her future greatness was the product of Wisconsin. There into the Rock River Valley, 3 miles from the village of Janesville, came her father, to be like other pioneers—called by the western sun out of Ohio along the trail of homeseekers. Frances Willard was 6 years old—a rhyming, romping, roaming girl seeking adventure among the simplicities of the pioneer world.

Josiah Willard, her father, was a citizen of value. He helped to build. His home, still standing, is a good house now. He was president of the second Wisconsin State Fair held in Janesville. There was no schoolhouse; he helped build one. It was in the successor to that schoolhouse, the first and oldest shrine to Frances, that she taught school. That little white building still stands, preserved with its grove of trees and yard sloping to Rock River's banks by the W. C. T. U. of Rock County, Wis. Recently a caretaker's home has been provided and in the building will be preserved many souvenirs of the life of our great American woman—pioneer and preacher, evangelist of a new life for posterity.

The girlhood life of Frances Willard was a part of this great epic of America written by the men and women who, persecuted, whose horizon was narrowed by incompetent authority, hungry for some mystic bread of life, asked for lands, roads, freedom, open doors to opportunity, release from the clutches that held them to toil and monotony. This epic begins with the explorer. He found America. He mapped its shores. He threaded its rivers and crossed its lakes. The priest, the preacher, and the teacher came; and then the pioneer, with Bible and rifle, with ax and plow. He built villages—they became cities. He laid out patches of garden—they became farms. He cut crooked trails for his cattle and wagons—they became great traveled highways. He made dugouts to carry his products to market—they grew into transportation lines, with canal boats, sailing vessels, steamboats, and steamships. He dammed the little streams and industry began to mark its place with song of wheel, murmur of grinding grain, and clang of iron and steel.

He landed in the warm and inviting Virginia; he came ashore at the bleak rock at Plymouth; he poled his canoe and flatboat up the Hudson and Mohawk; he stood under the great tree at the City of Brotherly Love; he found asylum in Maryland; he cut back the wilderness a few miles from the shores of the ocean that stood both as a barrier against his return to the homeland and as a bulwark against further tyranny. He sang his old French love songs in Wisconsin forests, trapped its beaver, traversed its pathless woods, told his stories of romance and adventure. Then came the settler. The Willard family was a part of this great westward trek.

His patient oxen took him on new trails. He crossed mountains periled by snow and avalanche. He forded rivers, risking death from whirlpool and flood. He dragged on over sodden ground, slowly, painfully, but persistently, chopping new roads, blazing new and hopeful highways that others might follow and be his neighbors. He dared the savage; he challenged Nature; he shook his fist in the face of difficulties; and finally he became the new settler in Wisconsin.

He fought—this Wisconsin settler with his family—the pressing horrors of isolation and starvation. Every farm home in all Wisconsin is built on a battlefield where man contested with resisting Nature, and he won the final victory of success with a home and a family. Thus did Josiah Willard. And lo, where there had been a wilderness, with its maddening and awful silence, where rivers ran eternally unladen to the sea, where savage reigned supreme, where wild forest denizens held high riotous carnival, there arose an empire of the common people within this century.

Of this empire the girl school teacher, Frances Willard, in the Rock River Valley was a part.

Had the commoner in Europe been content this world would still have been a realm of silence. Had the Virginian and the Yankee been content there would have been no Northwest Territory and no Wisconsin, no Rock County, and no village or city there. Had the German, the Irish, the Norwegian been content we should not have had him as a solid citizen of Wisconsin.

This new Wisconsin was no place for the indolent, the coward, or the shirk. This was no place for the white-collared youth, the dilettante, or the effeminate. This was no place for the evanescent shadow of life, the social butterfly, or the drone. This was no place for the parasite or the aesthete. In the Willard household, work was the daily routine.

Beauty was all around the settler in the Rock River Valley. He had come to a place where every prospect pleases. From the hilltops he could see great waving forests of green. Between were silver sheens of lakes and bounded prairies. There flowers lifted blossoms to the sky in a barbaric riot of color, rivaling the sun in its chromatic display. The breath of spring, the sky of summer, the glory of the master paintings of the woods in the fall—there were pictures hung here by Omnipotence for his delectation. The first settler needed no Louvre and no other gallery of art for his cultural side. Unconsciously his soul responded to this great oratorio without words and perhaps without understanding why.

It was of these that Frances Willard often wrote in her diary. These beauties which God had planted for her had a marked influence on her life. Her music was the wind in the forest, the summer rain, the deeper diapason of the threatening storm, the beating of the snow against the windows.

Josiah Willard's farm was a way of living. His home was his castle, his farm his landed domain, his retainers were all members of his own family. Each home was an industrial plant. Each member of the family had a task to perform. He had flour if he raised wheat. The packing house might be far away, but he had his own. His shoes were not made in a great factory. His grist was ground at the mill close by. The streams were harnessed, and the water wheel was a chained slave.

This, Mr. Speaker, was the land in which Frances Willard grew up. Here character was formed; that character which made her truly great. Wisconsin shares deeply and widely and eternally in the life of Frances Willard.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Wednesday, at the conclusion of the special order heretofore made, I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I again call the attention of the country and the Members of the House to the fact that now 10 days have elapsed since the President has asked for the immediate consideration of an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration. Forty-two days remain before the ax will fall on 2,000,000 people. The country demands action.

RECIPROCAL-TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include therein a statement I made before the Senate Committee on Reciprocal Taxation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement made by me on behalf of the State of Maine and the attorney general of the State of Maine, at the hearings before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Finance to consider proposals to levy taxes upon the income from State and municipal bonds:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the attorney general of Maine had been most anxious to appear before your committee on behalf of the State of Maine and join with his brothers, the attorneys general who have appeared here today, in formal protest to this committee against the constitutionality of the proposal under consideration. However, the legislative session in Augusta has made it impossible for him to get away and he has therefore asked me to appear on his behalf today as the spokesman for the State of Maine.

VIEWPOINT OF MAINE

The views here expressed are primarily those of the legal department of the State of Maine although I have personally participated in some of the conferences during the past year in Washington among the legal representatives of the various States and the officials of the Federal Government and have indicated my own individual conclusions and convictions in the vote which I cast yesterday in the House against the legislative proposal to institute reciprocal taxation of State and Federal salaries by statute. The question involved is very similar as one involves the question of whether the Federal Government may tax the agents of the State and the other the agencies. Taxation by the Federal Government in either field must equally impair the operations of the State in the exercise of essential governmental functions and this seems clearly to have been prohibited by the Supreme Court as beyond the constitutional power of the Congress by a consistent series of decisions over a long term of years.

The distinction as to nongovernmental functions drawn in the Gerhardt case seems to accentuate rather than to modify the doctrine earlier established.

It may be proper for me also to say that I have also reached the conviction that a constitutional amendment conferring this reciprocal power of taxation upon the Federal and State Governments would now be warranted and wise in view of the very great expansion of governmental activities in recent years and the unwisdom of creating a privileged class exempt from sharing the burdens of the Government.

While it may be argued that the position of these reciprocal taxes will simply be added to the expenses of government in each sphere by the resultant increases in compensation, I do not believe this is likely to be the practical result. I am accordingly quite ready to support a constitutional amendment designed to authorize reciprocal taxation of State and Federal salaries and income from securities.

LEGISLATIVE COUNSEL

I present this, however, as my individual views and not as those of the State of Maine. I am fortified in this opinion by the very recent report under date of February 10, 1939, of the chief of staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, who has arrived at a similar conclusion after a most exhaustive examination of the authorities. It seems to me that the Members of Congress may well pay most respectful heed to the studies of the counsel of this committee concerned solely with the constitutional and statutory questions that are involved.

ONE-WAY RECIPROCITY

I wish now, however, to address myself to certain of the specific arguments presented by the Department of Justice in arguing the case as to the constitutionality of the legislation here proposed.

The Department of Justice has submitted to this committee a study in which we find the startling assertion (p. 10), attributed apocryphally to Marshall, "that the principle of immunity protected the Federal Government against taxation by the States, but did not reciprocally shield the States against the exercise of the delegated and supreme taxing power of the Central Government."

In other words, we are told that so far as the Constitution is concerned, the States themselves are subject to what is labeled by the Department of Justice itself as the supreme taxing power of the Central Government. The Department of Justice did not say that the Federal Government might tax only State bonds. The language I have read claims that the principle of immunity does not shield the States from Federal taxation. Furthermore, it is my understanding that in his presentation before this committee the chief counsel for the Bureau of Internal Revenue referred to the right of the Central Government to tax the instrumentalities of the States.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, we are told now, for the first time in our history, that nothing in the Constitution stops the Federal Government from asking the State of Maine to pay a tax on its own security holdings, or even to file a Federal income-tax return on its revenue receipts. Indeed, the logic of their contention compels them to stand by such an assertion of power, for their whole argument in support of a literal interpretation of the words "from whatever source derived" crumbles to pieces if they are forced to admit that in the course of interpretation that phrase must not, in any way, be qualified.

In Maine we perform many public services for which we make charges. We have toll bridges, municipal utilities, and similar public works. The committee will, therefore, see why we must view with genuine alarm, an assertion of the chief legal officer of the United States, that the State is absolutely subject to Federal taxation of any kind, with the sole qualification that the tax be not discriminatory as between the State and a private person.

We must also take sharp exception to the contention of the Department that the rule of intergovernmental immunity under our Constitution only works one way; that is, that the Federal Government enjoys the full benefit of this necessary rule of constitutional interpretation but that on the other hand it does not shield the States against a direct application of the Federal power to tax. They flatly assert (p. 9) that the rule of immunity is one of "Federal supremacy." They say, of the many cases upholding the equal immunity of the States from the Federal power to tax, that they cannot "confidently be said to be good law today." And finally, they make the perfectly amazing statement that, though the Pollock case is the law of the land today, "this is not a matter of great importance" (p. 61).

HISTORIC POSITION OF SUPREME COURT

It is our position that these sweeping assertions are in complete error. For the past three-quarters of a century the United States Supreme Court has never once deviated from the view that the immunity rule gives the States exactly the same protection as it gives the Federal Government. The Department of Justice has tried to build an argument by patching together a scrap of an argument from one case, a dictum from another, a dissenting opinion from a third, and so on. Their arguments had to be indirect, because every direct expression by the United States Supreme Court, whether in majority or minority opinions, would disprove the Department's case. We do not have to rely on indirect proof to show the equal application of the immunity rule to the States. Even restricting our study to the cases cited by the Department of Justice, we have been able to list no less than 34 clear recognitions by the Court of the reciprocal character of this rule, as between State and Federal Governments. A quotation of the language which the Court used in each of those cases would no doubt be convincing. But the uniformity with which the Court has upheld the reciprocity of the rule would make such a recital unnecessarily repetitious.

Typical of the Court's repeated statements of the reciprocal nature of the rule is the following language used by Mr. Justice Stone in 1936, when he said that the immunity rule "is equally a restriction on taxation by either of the instrumentalities of the other" (United States v. California). Indeed, in many cases the immunity of the States and the reciprocity of the rule were about the only points on which both majority and minority Justices were able to agree.

ONLY EIGHT CASES

Many of these statements by the Court may be dicta. As a matter of fact the Department of Justice says that in "only eight cases has a Federal tax ever been declared invalid by the Court as invading an immunity pertaining to the States." The Department apparently feels that a doctrine isn't well supported if it has only eight United States Supreme Court holdings to back it up. But, few doctrines of constitutional law can boast one-half as many supporting precedents. I suppose that the Wagner Labor Act, for example, is not any the less constitutional because it was upheld in "only" one United States Supreme Court decision.

We may ask, then, on what does the Department of Justice rely when it urges that the States have no immunity whatsoever? Very simply, it is this: That the Federal Government is supreme and only this so-called Federal supremacy justifies immunity. It is my considered judgment that such a contention constitutes a very dangerous attack on the States.

FEDERAL SYSTEM REQUIRES STATES

The States find a consistent philosophy in all these cases on the immunity rule. That is, that governmental immunity has always been insisted upon by the Court to prevent the disruption of the delicate balance of powers between the States and the Federal Government. In other words, the rule is not based on the supremacy of either government. It is designed rather to avoid a one-sided supremacy which might unbalance the Federal system. That reason obviously applies equally to the Federal Government and to the States. When any of the early cases based the immunity of the Federal Government on "Federal supremacy" it is clear that they meant the supremacy of the "Federal system" and not of the Central Government. The preservation of the States is just as important to the preservation of the Federal system as is the National Government.

All the cases make it clear that there is no such thing as the supremacy of the Federal Government, except, of course, in the fields which the States have delegated to it. And the cases are just as unanimous in insisting that the States are equally supreme in their field. In other words, if supremacy is the reason for the immunity rule, there is no difference between the Federal Government and the States whatsoever. The States are as supreme in their field as the Federal Government is in its field.

GERHARDT CASE

The Department of Justice tries to bolster up its argument by certain language in the recent case of Helvering v. Gerhardt. But there is no intention whatsoever in that case to give the impression that the States have lost their immunity from Federal taxation. In the first place, Justice Stone clearly stated that State immunity was an established and sound doctrine of our constitutional law. As a matter of fact, he said that it had been decided—

"That the taxing power of the Federal Government is nevertheless subject to an implied restriction when applied to State instrumentalities * * *"

And the Court also showed its concurrence in our interpretation of the reason for that immunity. Justice Stone said:

"The immunity which it implied was sustained only because it was one deemed necessary to protect the States from destruction by the Federal taxation of those governmental functions which they were exercising when the Constitution was adopted and which were essential to their continued existence."

In the second place, the Court laid down two careful tests for applying State immunity. Can we possibly assume that they would lay down tests for applying the immunity if they meant to reject the doctrine outright?

WHAT IS CONSTITUTION AMONG REPRESENTATIVES?

But the Department of Justice insists that there is a difference between the Federal Government and the States sufficient to make a difference in their immunity. Thus, it is argued that because the States are represented in Congress they may not complain that a tax levied against them by that Congress is unconstitutional.

In reply we express some amazement that the Department should champion a suggestion, even though it may have slipped from the pen of a distinguished jurist, that in effect would nullify the entire reasoning of the doctrine of Marbury v. Madison. Constitutional rights find their ultimate protection in the Supreme Court and are not to be compromised even by the will of Congress. To suggest that a challenge to the constitutionality of a statute can be met with the obvious irrelevancy that the person or the State who challenges the act has no standing because he was represented in Congress would seem to be a complete distortion, both of the powers of Congress and of the duties of the Supreme Court. Since when has it been a valid argument that the Constitution of these United States does not protect an American citizen or a State of the Union because he or it is represented in the Congress? Since when is the Congress free to disregard the constitutional safeguards of the civil and religious rights of minorities because those minorities are represented in Congress?

The Department of Justice's argument seems to say to the States: "What right have you to complain about this act? Your own Representatives in Congress passed it."

MINORITIES EVERYWHERE

But there are always minorities in Congress. They may represent agricultural States, seacoast States, Lake States, cotton States, automobile manufacturing States, oil States, and sometimes, I may add, there are even Democratic or Republican minorities. Suppose the majority of Congress in any such field should take action which prejudices that particular minority in violation of the Constitution. Can the fact that those minority States are represented in Congress possibly be a sufficient answer to them when they seek to prove that the Constitution forbids the action? In the last analysis such a contention would simply substitute the will of a majority of Congress for the interpretative protection of the Supreme Court.

Suppose some Congress decides to levy a discriminatory tax on State bonds at a rate twice as high as that on any other bonds. It would be cold comfort to the States if their own representatives had passed it. It must be plain, Mr. Chairman, that the contention misses the whole point of a written constitution.

STATES NEED PROTECTION

And if it is a question of the need for the immunity rule, may I suggest that the States need immunity from Federal interference much more than the Federal Government needs immunity from State interference. If I may say so, the Federal Government seems strong enough to protect itself these days. On the other hand, the States which happen to be in a minority at any given time have a much more real need for protection against interference by the Federal Government.

The Department of Justice argues, in effect, that Helvering v. Gerhardt has abandoned the constitutional guaranty of equal sovereignty as between State and Federal Governments in their respective fields. Four judges joined in the majority opinion in that case. The record of each one of them makes it impossible to assume that they meant to take any such drastic step. The brief which the States have submitted in opposition to the Department of Justice's study shows convincingly that every one of the judges who took part in the Gerhardt decision had joined in numerous cases, in which he clearly reiterated the doctrine of equal State immunity. Mr. Justice Stone, who wrote the Gerhardt opinion, also wrote the language I quoted above that the immunity rule "is equally a restriction on taxation by either of the instrumentalities of the other."

The opinions of Mr. Justice Stone, affirming the immunity of the States, number at least 20. Chief Justice Hughes has supported State immunity in no less than 18 opinions. Mr. Justice Brandeis has to his credit at least 22 reaffirmations of State immunity. The same story applies to each of the other Justices. Each of them has repeatedly emphasized the very rule of equal State and Federal immunity, which the Department of Justice disputes.

TAXATION WITHOUT CONSENT

I submit, on behalf of the State of Maine, that this attack on our immunity from Federal interference is of grave concern. We ask this committee to repudiate any suggestion that the States which you represent are not the constitutional equals of the Federal Government in the field of intergovernmental taxation. We urge that if any step to tax the States be considered at all, it should be considered only with the States' consent, by constitutional amendment. Taxation without consent is a protest that goes pretty far back into the origins of American history.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 12. An act for the relief of Dica Perkins; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 26. An act to empower the President of the United States to create new national forest units and make additions to existing national forests in the State of Montana; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 128. An act for the relief of Fred H. Beauregard; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 129. An act for the relief of Howard Arthur Beswick; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 142. An act for the relief of Jack Lecel Haas; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 189. An act to provide for the confiscation of firearms in possession of persons convicted of felony and disposition thereof; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 494. An act to name the bridge to be erected over the Anacostia River in the District of Columbia after the late "March King," John Philip Sousa, composer of The Stars and Stripes Forever; to Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 513. An act to provide for the promotion on the retired list of the Navy of Fred G. Leith; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 545. An act for the relief of George H. Pierce and Evelyn Pierce; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 588. An act to provide for an additional midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 633. An act for the relief of Ray Wimmer; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 746. An act to authorize Maj. Andrew S. Rowan, United States Army, retired, to accept the Order Carlos Manuel de Céspedes tendered him by the Government of Cuba in appreciation of services rendered; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1012. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of Joy Montgomery, a minor; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1106. An act for the relief of the East Coast Ship & Yacht Corporation, of Noank, Conn.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1117. An act to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men or former enlisted men of the United States Navy for the value of personal effects lost in the hurricane at the submarine base, New London, Conn., on September 21, 1938; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1119. An act to provide an additional sum for the payment of a claim under the act entitled "An act to provide for the reimbursement of certain officers and enlisted men or former officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps for personal property lost, damaged, or destroyed as a result of the earthquake which occurred at Managua, Nicaragua, on March 31, 1931," approved January 21, 1936 (49 Stat. 2212); to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1123. An act to amend paragraph 57 of section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 1125. An act to provide for the appointment of research assistants in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 1126. An act to provide alternative methods of enforcement of orders, rules, and regulations of the Joint Board and of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 1129. An act to amend paragraphs 31 and 33 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 7 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes,' approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1932; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 1130. An act to amend Public Law No. 111, Sixty-sixth Congress, entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 1157. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of Roy D. Cook, a minor; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1295. An act to amend section 9, article V, of an act known as "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia,' approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes"; to the District of Columbia.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, February 20, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m. Tuesday, February 21, 1939. Business to be considered: Continuation of hearing on H. R. 2531—transportation bill.

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation at 10:30 a. m. Tuesday, February 21, 1939.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m. Tuesday, February 21, 1939, on the bill (H. R. 3576) to make effective the provisions of the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936.

It is contemplated that the hearing on Tuesday, February 21, 1939, on H. R. 3576 will deal particularly with legislation necessary to make effective the provisions of the treaty and problems arising in connection with the provisions of the treaty.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m., on the bills and dates listed below:

Tuesday, March 14, 1939:

H. R. 180, H. R. 202, construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201, additional facilities for Panama Canal; H. R. 2667, construction of a Mexican Canal.

In listing the bills to be heard on March 14, 1939, House Joint Resolution 112 (TINKHAM), to create a commission to study and report on the feasibility of constructing the Mexican Canal, was inadvertently omitted from the notice.

This is to advise all interested parties that House Joint Resolution 112 will be considered at that time with the following bills: H. R. 180 (IZAC), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 202 (BLAND), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201 (BLAND), need for additional lock facilities at Panama; H. R. 2667 (TINKHAM), relative to the construction of a Mexican Canal.

Tuesday, March 23, 1939:

H. R. 137, H. R. 980, H. R. 1674, relating to annuities for Panama Canal construction force.

Thursday, March 23, 1939:

H. R. 139, H. R. 141, H. R. 142, H. R. 1819, miscellaneous Panama Canal bills.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

445. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting deficiency and supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal years 1938 and 1939 in the amount of $408,759.50 (H. Doc. No. 173); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

446. A letter from the President of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission, transmitting the Tenth Annual Report of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission covering operations from May 9 to December 31, 1938, inclusive (H. Doc. No. 22); to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed.

447. A letter from the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, transmitting the Sixth Annual Report of the Farm Credit Administration for the year 1938 (H. Doc. No. 14); to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

448. A letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting a request for certain changes in title V of the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

449. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill for the relief of F. E. Perkins, former superintendent of the Shawnee Indian Agency, Shawnee, Okla.; to the Committee on Claims.

450. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the fiscal year 1939, amounting to $1,600,000 (H. Doc. No. 175); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

451. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1940 in the amount of $1,250,000 (H. Doc. No. 174); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

452. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the legislative establishment, Government Printing Office, for the fiscal year 1939, in the amount of $20,000, and for the fiscal year 1940, in the amount of $70,000, in all $90,000 (H. Doc. No. 176); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. SABATH: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 96. Resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 4011; without amendment (Rept. No. 73). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SABATH: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 97. Resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 4012; without amendment (Rept. No. 74). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LESINSKI: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. R. 805. A bill to extend further time for naturalization to alien veterans of the World War under the act approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165), to extend the same privileges to certain veterans of countries allied with the United States during the World War, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 75). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 4278. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the constructions of certain public works, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 76). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. MASON: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. R. 2846. A bill to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of Kurt Wessely; without amendment (Rept. No. 72). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3276) granting an increase of pension to Lucy Killinger; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 4212) granting a pension to Chanley C. Freeman; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. VINSON of Georgia:

H. R. 4278. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KELLER:

H. R. 4279. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the city of Chester, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Chester, Ill.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania:

H. R. 4280. A bill to provide for the insurance by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of loans made by banks to business enterprises for the purpose of enabling such enterprises to increase their productions, extend their operations, and modernize their plants, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. DEROUEN:

H. R. 4281. A bill to extend the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to grant privileges, leases, and permits to all lands and buildings under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

H. R. 4282. A bill to amend the act of June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2041), providing for the administration and maintenance of the Blue Ridge Parkway, in the States of Virginia and North Carolina, by the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DOWELL:

H. R. 4283. A bill for the relief of the Johnston Consolidated School District, located in the townships of Webster and Jefferson, in the county of Polk and State of Iowa; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JONES of Texas:

H. R. 4284. A bill to amend subsection (4) of subsection (c) of section 101 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938; to the Committee on Agriculture.

H. R. 4285. A bill to define the status of the Under Secretary of Agriculture, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MAAS:

H. R. 4286. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MAY:

H. R. 4287 (by request). A bill amending the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOTT:

H. R. 4288. A bill to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MURDOCK of Utah:

H. R. 4289. A bill to provide for the construction, extension, and improvement of public-school buildings in Uintah County, Utah; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MAAS:

H. R. 4290. A bill to extend certain benefits to members of the Navy and Marine Corps Reserves killed or injured while performing active duty; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SECREST:

H. R. 4291. A bill to place the Muskingum River flood-control project under the general terms of the National Flood Control Act; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. VINSON of Georgia:

H. Res. 98. Resolution to provide for the consideration of H. R. 4278; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. LUDLOW:

H. Res. 99. Resolution authorizing the printing of a letter from the Postmaster General and the Acting Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a report relative to the emergency construction of public-building projects outside of the District of Columbia, as a House document; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts:

H. Res. 100. Resolution prohibiting the transfer, loan, or sale of arms or munitions; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their resolution, Senate Concurrent Memorial No. 1, with reference to providing Federal support to the public schools, known as the Harrison-Thomas-Larabee bill; to the Committee on Education.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON of California:

H. R. 4292. A bill for the relief of Gustav Schmidt; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BELL:

H. R. 4293. A bill for the relief of Margaret Redmond; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BROOKS:

H. R. 4294. A bill for the relief of Dorothy Clair Hester; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CLUETT:

H. R. 4295. A bill granting an increase of pension to Lucy W. Gately; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GILCHRIST:

H. R. 4296. A bill for the relief of Minnie Pittman; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KINZER:

H. R. 4297. A bill granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Kafroth; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LECOMPTE:

H. R. 4298. A bill granting an increase of pension to Anna F. Karr; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCORMACK:

H. R. 4299. A bill for the relief of Joseph Tallisman; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4300. A bill for the relief of Anton Saganey; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4301. A bill for the relief of Frank J. McQuaid; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 4302. A bill for the relief of William John Bouzan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. McGEHEE:

H. R. 4303. A bill for the relief of Mary Ludke; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKEOUGH:

H. R. 4304. A bill for the relief of Isaac B. Jones; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROUTZOHN:

H. R. 4305. A bill for the relief of Robert Stewart; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1171. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of the New York Clothing Cutters Union, A. C. W. of A., New York City, concerning appropriation for National Labor Relations Board; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1172. Also, petition of the Merchants Association of New York, concerning Senate bills 126, 137, 153, and Senate Joint Resolution 27; also, House bills 188 and 3369; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1173. Also, petition of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, Inc., New York City, concerning inclusion of their employees under the Federal old-age security provisions; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1174. By Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY: Resolution adopted by the New York State Waterways Association, New York, urging New York Senators and Congressmen to oppose legislation intended to place control of the rates of water carriers under the jurisdiction of the same body at present vested with the duty of regulating and fostering the business of their competitors; stating that our waterways are public highways upon which no monopoly of transportation is possible, and that it is, therefore, not in the public interest to impose upon carriers by water the type of restrictive regulation which has necessarily been imposed upon other types of interstate carriers in order adequately to protect the shipper; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1175. Also, telegram from the New York Clothing Cutters Union, New York City, urging, in behalf of 3,000 members, full appropriation for National Labor Relations Board as recommended by administration, without attaching legislative riders having the effect of amending act without full hearing, which proposed revisions require; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1176. By Mr. MUNDT: House Concurrent Resolution No. 8, introduced by Mr. Swenning, of the South Dakota House of Representatives (the senate concurring), asking Congress to appropriate adequate funds under the Farm Forestry Acts to continue the reforestation program in South Dakota; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1177. Also, House Concurrent Resolution No. 7, introduced by Mr. Lowe, of the South Dakota House of Representatives (the senate concurring), asking for Federal legislation providing for the cancellation of seed and feed loans in South Dakota; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1178. Also, senate concurrent resolution, introduced by Mr. Berry, of the South Dakota Senate (the house of representatives concurring), asking Congress to continue appropriations contained in the Hayden-Cartwright Act for construction and maintenance of highways within Indian reservations; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1179. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of the Merchants' Association of New York, concerning freight rates from southern territory into official classification territory as provided for in Senate bills 126, 158, and House bill 188; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1180. Also, petition of the State Council of Parks, New York City, opposing any claim of the Federal Government to the ownership of the lands under tidal waters of the State of New York or any other State; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

1181. Also, petition of the Albany Branch, League of Nations Association, Albany, N. Y., concerning our neutrality policy; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1182. Also, petition of the Council of Jewish Federation and Welfare Funds, Inc., New York City, favoring inclusion of their employees under the Federal old-age security provision; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1183. Also, petition of the Marquette Council, No. 288, Knights of Columbus, Brooklyn, N. Y., urging strict adherence to our neutrality policy; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1184. By Mr. PLUMLEY: Resolution of the Vermont Senate and House of Representatives, to prohibit at once sale and shipment of war materials to Japan; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1185. By Mr. BOLLES: Petition of sundry citizens of Kenosha, Wis., requesting that we adhere to the general policy of neutrality contained in the act of August 31, 1935, and in the act of May 1, 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1186. Also, petition of sundry citizens of Racine, Wis., favoring lifting the Spanish embargo; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1187. By Mr. POLK: Petition of C. C. Bothwell, chief engineer of Division 584, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers,

Portsmouth, Ohio, and 52 members, approved by a committee composed of Messrs. Scott, Pyles, Colley, Brooks, and Callihan, opposing any bill which has for its purpose the regulation by the Federal Government of miles and hours worked by railroad and train service employees and giving their reasons therefor; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1188. By Mr. RISK: Resolution passed by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island on February 11, 1939, protesting against the passage of House bill 2196 proposing a tax of 3 cents per gallon on the sale of fuel oil when used for heating and generating purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1189. By Mr. SCHIFFLER: Petition of Addis Clelland, secretary, and 550 members of Local Union No. 4036, United Mine Workers of America, of Farmington, W. Va., urging the passage of the Townsend bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1190. By Mr. TERRY: Memorial of the Fifty-second General Assembly of Arkansas to the Congress of the United States, requesting passage of adequate legislation providing sufficient funds for the complete multiple-use development of the White River Basin in Arkansas and Missouri; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1191. By Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey: Letter from William E. Milner, commander, Epps Post, No. 126, the American Legion, Dunsmuir, Calif., on behalf of Epps Post, conveying message of congratulations and support in Congressman THOMAS' impeachment charges recently preferred against the Secretary of Labor and two principal aides for coddling and protecting from deportation certain aliens illegally within the borders of the United States of America and for the Secretary of Labor's direct violation of the immigration laws and oath of office in refusing to carry out deportation orders of Federal courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1192. Also, letter from Lewis H. Clarke, adjutant, the American Legion, Club Post, No. 373, Los Angeles, Calif., advising Congressman THOMAS that at a regular meeting of that post held on February 7, 1939, a motion was unanimously passed commending him for his efforts in exposing an apparent lack of effort on the part of the Department of Labor to clarify a situation objectionable to every right-thinking American citizen, and the letter further stated "please rest assured that this post, together with hundreds of other posts of the American Legion scattered throughout the United States fervently hopes that other legislators, inspired by your courageous leadership will assist in remedying a branch of our Government that is showing itself to be unhealthy"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1193. By Mr. THORKE: Petition of the Legislature of the State of Montana, asking the Congress of the United States of America to assist the beet-sugar industry in Montana; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1194. By Mr. VAN ZANDT: Petition of Council No. 454, Junior Order United American Mechanics, Clearfield, Pa., favoring Resolutions 26 and 27 as introduced by Congressman DRES and also an appropriation of $150,000 to carry on the investigation; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1195. By the SPEAKER: Petition of certain citizens of the States of New York and New Jersey, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to peace; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious Father, who dost reveal to us the secret mystery of life as Thou holdest our feeble hands in Thine, making us to know ourselves in knowing Thee: Lead us, we beseech Thee, into a more beautifully ordered life, with finer sympathies for every day's most quiet need, with keener insight and compassion for the unobtrusive sorrows of companions on the way, with freer hearts to share and braver hearts to bear the crushing burdens, howsoever laid, upon the hapless shoulders of our fellow men, that love and truth and kindness may through us lead our people to their highest destiny. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 17, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4218) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	King	Russell
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach
Austin	Frazier	Lewis	Sheppard
Bailey	George	Logan	Shipstead
Bankhead	Gerry	Lucas	Smathers
Barbour	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Barkley	Gillette	McKellar	Stewart
Bone	Glass	McNary	Taft
Borah	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Gulley	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Tobey
Burke	Harrison	Minton	Townsend
Byrd	Hatch	Murray	Truman
Byrnes	Hayden	Neely	Tydings
Capper	Herring	Norris	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hill	Nye	Van Nuys
Chavez	Holman	Overton	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Pittman	Walsh
Connally	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	White
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds	Wiley

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] are detained on important public business.

Mr. WALSH. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. LODGE], owing to the death of his grandmother.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

GENERAL ANTHONY WAYNE MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letter of resignation:

UNITED STATES SENATE, February 20.

HON. JOHN N. GARNER,
Vice President of the United States.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: While appreciating your high consideration in your designation of me to be a member of the Anthony Wayne Memorial Commission, I am unable to give this assignment the time and attention it deserves and requires. Therefore, I present my resignation from the Commission.

Respectfully yours,

A. H. VANDENBERG.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] a member of the General Anthony Wayne Memorial Commission, pursuant to Public Resolution 64, approved August 19, 1937, vice the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], resigned.

LANDS ON SISSETON INDIAN RESERVATION, N. DAK. AND S. DAK.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the consolidation of the lands on the Sisseton Indian Reservation, N. Dak. and S. Dak., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REHABILITATION AND SUBSISTENCE HOMESTEADS FOR INDIANS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend title II, section 208, of the act approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 205-206) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust or cancel reimbursable features of said act insofar as they apply to Indians, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Joint Memorial 7

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that:

Whereas there exists within the Pacific Northwest a condition of economic distress which has caused widespread unemployment, creating much suffering and want of necessities of life among a great many of the people of said area; and

Whereas the Pacific Northwest is without proper military protection in that said section is wholly cut off from the East by the Bitter Root Mountains, with only one passage through said range from the Canadian border to Bannock Pass, a distance of some 800 miles; and

Whereas it has become the public policy as well as the urgent need of the United States to take affirmative steps to relieve the conditions aforesaid; and

Whereas the Lewis and Clark Highway follows a low-elevation water grade from Portland, Oreg., across the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, through the Lolo Pass, the lowest pass in the Bitter Root Range, and which is centrally located, to Missoula, Mont., and will provide an adequate military and commercial route which is so badly needed; and

Whereas the Lewis and Clark Highway has been completed, with the exception of only 50 miles which lies wholly within the national forests of Idaho, and appropriations for forest roads in national forests, which in Idaho cover 34,000,000 of its total 53,000,000 acres, are inadequate to provide for completion of said highway from that source; and

Whereas these national forests are of the largest, most beautiful, interesting, and valuable of the national forests, affording unsurpassed recreational opportunities for the people of the entire Nation, and is not accessible either by rail or national highway; and

Whereas this highway would be of great benefit to the States of Idaho, Montana, Washington, and Oregon to facilitate marketing of their products, would provide adequate military protection to the Pacific Northwest, would provide adequate employment to reduce the critical effect of the present economic distress in this area, and would stimulate national trade and commerce; and

Whereas the Lewis and Clark Highway has been designated as eligible for Federal aid: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate concurring) do most respectfully urge on the Congress of the United States that the said Congress pass such legislation and make the necessary appropriations to provide for the complete construction of the unfinished portion of said highway above mentioned, and that the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture and/or the War Department and/or the Department of the Interior of the United States be authorized and directed to begin immediate construction thereon; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be authorized, and is hereby directed, to immediately forward certified copies of this joint memorial to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of War, the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, to Senators and Representatives in Congress from the States of Idaho, Oregon, Washington, and Montana, and to the President, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

House Concurrent Resolution 9

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to provide for the investigation, survey, and development of the manganese resources of South Dakota

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the senate concurring):

Whereas there are extensive deposits of manganese of good quality within the State of South Dakota which have not been thoroughly investigated, surveyed, nor developed; and

Whereas such deposits are believed to be superior to and more extensive than any others which may be found within the United States; and

Whereas an adequate supply of domestic manganese is of prime importance to the industries, commerce, and protection of the United States; and

Whereas the United States Department of Interior, and the Division of Metals and Minerals of the United States Department of Commerce have the facilities and personnel required for a proper survey and investigation of the South Dakota manganese deposits: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress be, and it is hereby, memorialized and petitioned to promptly take such steps as may be necessary to provide for the early investigation, survey, and development of the manganese deposits in South Dakota, by the Federal Government and its appropriate agencies; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be certified and forwarded by the secretary of state of South Dakota to the Secretary of State of the United States at Washington, D. C., and to the Vice President of the United States as presiding officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, favoring the enactment of legislation adopting the principles of the so-called Townsend national recovery plan substantially as set forth in House bill 4199 (Seventy-fifth Congress), a general-welfare bill granting old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See joint memorial printed in full when presented today by Mr. WHEELER.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Lodge No. 1010, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, of Indiana Harbor, and Torrance Lodge, No. 1414, Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers of North America, affiliated with C. I. O., of Torrance, Calif., protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of Honolulu, T. H., protesting against the negotiation of a trade agreement with Cuba supplementary to the trade agreement signed at Washington on August 24, 1934, pertaining to the duty on sugar imported into the United States from Cuba, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Audubon Association of the Pacific, San Francisco, Calif., protesting against the enactment of legislation relating to predatory animals in natural parks, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Berkeley (Calif.) Young Democratic Club, favoring the purchase by the United States of the Redwood Mountain grove of big trees for national-park purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Berkeley (Calif.) Young Democratic Club, favoring the enactment of legislation establishing the Kings River region as the John Muir National Park, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Harbor Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles, Calif., protesting against the enactment of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 24) relative to the establishment of title of the United States to certain submerged lands containing petroleum deposits, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Midwest Local, No. 233, Oil Workers International Union, of Midwest, Wyo., favoring an adequate appropriation for the National Labor Relations Board, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DANAHER presented a petition, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of the so-called Pepper-Boland bill, providing for the education of all types of physically handicapped children, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. ELLENDER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Terrebonne Parish, La., praying that the open season on Wilson or jack snipe in the coastal regions of Louisiana be extended at least until the end of February, which was referred to the Special Committee on Conservation of Wildlife Resources.

Mr. MALONEY presented a resolution of officers and members of Russell Council No. 65, Knights of Columbus, of New Haven, Conn., urging that the United States adhere to the policy of absolute neutrality with respect to the existing conditions in Spain, and that the embargo on the shipment of munitions to Spain be continued, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOLT presented a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Wood County Teachers' Association, Parkersburg, W. Va., favoring the enactment of legislation to prevent the retroactive application of any Federal tax upon employees of the States and their instrumentalities, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Logan Coal Operators' Association of the Logan district in West Virginia, favoring the enactment of legislation increasing the duty on the importation of foreign oil and also amendment of the so-called Gas Act so as to regulate the gas industry and prevent the dumping of natural gas for industrial purposes, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. REED presented petitions of 17 citizens of Stafford County, 21 citizens of Garden City, 45 citizens of Winfield, and 52 citizens of Clay County, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of 31 citizens of Wichita, 57 citizens of Sumner and Sedgwick Counties, and 100 citizens of Herington, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to limit the service of railroad employees to not more than 208 hours in 1 month, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MEAD presented a resolution adopted by the Kensington Taxpayers & Community Association, Buffalo, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation to tax the incomes of Federal and State employees and other persons whose incomes are at present exempt from taxation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the League of Nations Association of New York City, praying that the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate report back to the Senate the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 67) to amend the Neutrality Act, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the executive committee of the Merchant Truckmen's Bureau of New York, N. Y., remonstrating against the ratification of the St. Lawrence deep waterway treaty with the Dominion of Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of officers and members of Marquette Council, No. 283, Knights of Columbus, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring continuation of the policy of absolute neutrality by the United States with respect to the war in Spain, and also that the Spanish embargo be not lifted, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WHEELER presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Joint Memorial 5

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America requesting it to assist the beet-sugar industry in Montana

Whereas only 29.5 percent of domestic sugar sales are allotted to domestic producers at present. Cuba has practically the same amount and our insular possessions 41.5 percent. American producers are rightfully entitled to all of the domestic market that they are able to supply; and

Whereas the import quotas of raw sugar as set at the present time have brought the farmers, the workers in the beet-sugar factories, and the laborers in the beet fields in direct competition with the poorly paid labor in the sugar-producing territories outside of continental United States; such competition has the direct result of lowering the standard of living of these farmers and laborers to the level incompatible with the American way of life; and

Whereas sugar beets can be effectively grown at a reasonable profit in this State and there is no food more valuable to the consumer in nutritive worth even at a much higher price than at present; and

Whereas the production of sugar beets provides employment at good wages for many times as many workers as the same acreage of other crops adapted to this latitude and any control of the expansion of sugar-beet acreage means more unemployment and more relief clients who could otherwise make a living in this industry; and

Whereas there is grave danger that the present policy, if continued, will result in many now employed in this country losing their means of livelihood, thereby further increasing the already tremendous burden of unemployment; and

Whereas our beet growers, if permitted to make a reasonable amount of money are, due to their higher standard of living, many times better customers for eastern industry as are foreign sugar laborers and planters; and

Whereas an orderly and sound expansion of beet plantings in accordance with the development of suitable land and the building of new factories to take care of the increased production is a reasonable and necessary process to the building up of this State and should be encouraged; and

Whereas the expansion of the domestic production of sugar should be encouraged as a problem of national economy and defense; the acute shortage of sugar during the World War demonstrated our need for a much higher domestic sugar production in time of emergency; and

Whereas because of the high altitude of this region there are practically no substitute crops for sugar beets and the restriction of the beet industry means the throttling of our agriculture by eliminating the best cultivated crop in a proper rotation for maintaining soil fertility and weed control; and

Whereas the development of profitable agricultural operations is so vital to the business of all of Montana as well as of the entire United States, and should be given most serious consideration by all individuals and law-making bodies; and

Whereas the beet growers' associations of Montana, supported by the Montana Federation of Labor and Montanans, Inc. (the State chamber of commerce), have given serious and careful consideration to the present sugar quotas and the above facts have been definitely established: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the prayer of your memorialists, the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, that the Congress of the United States should, by proper legislation, right the wrong suffered by the farmers, processors, and wage earners engaged in the growing and manufacturing of beet sugar, by immediately raising the domestic sugar quota to permit the unrestricted production of sugar within the continental limits of the United States, and to maintain the protective market by quota reductions and adequate tariffs on foreign sugar; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated, be sent by the secretary of state to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives of Montana in Congress.

Mr. WHEELER also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Joint Memorial 2

Memorial to the Congress of the United States for the passage of an act incorporating the principles of the Townsend national-recovery plan substantially as set forth in a bill entitled "H. R. 4199," introduced into the House of Representatives in the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States on February 2, 1937

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled in the Seventy-sixth session:

Whereas the problems of unemployment and social security are two of the most vital economic issues now confronting the people of the State of Montana, as well as all other States of the Union; and

Whereas the United States Government has incurred an enormous debt in providing a bare subsistence for several million unemployed persons; and

Whereas it will be impossible to continue such relief appropriations indefinitely without serious injury to the credit of the Nation; and

Whereas the economic problems of unemployment and social security cannot be properly handled by individual States, but are national problems involving the general welfare of the whole Nation; and

Whereas the Townsend national recovery plan, as set forth in the General Welfare Act of 1937 (H. R. 4199), introduced in the last session of Congress, provided for the collection of a 2-percent tax on business transactions and the pro rata monthly distribution of the proceeds to persons over 60 years of age who agree to retire from gainful employment and expend their monthly allotments for the products of American capital and labor; and

Whereas it is the purpose of such plan—

1. To retire from active employment some four or five million persons over 60 years of age and provide jobs for several million persons under 60 years of age.

2. To decrease, if not eliminate, expenditures for relief.

3. To eliminate the necessity of hoarding to provide for needs incident to advancing age.

4. To stimulate trade and industry by increasing the purchasing power of persons of advanced years.

5. To relieve the present stagnation of money and credits by providing a market for products of American capital and labor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana (the house concurring), That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States of America for the enactment of the Townsend national-recovery plan into law, the said plan being deemed just and equitable to all persons in the United States; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of Montana to the President of the United States, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana, and they and each of them be requested to use all honorable means within their power to bring about the enactment of the Townsend recovery plan into law at the earliest possible time.

Mr. BYRNES presented the following joint resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to rehabilitate the Florington National Farm Loan Association of Darlington County, S. C., and other such inactive associations in this State

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina, That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to take the necessary and proper steps to rehabilitate all inactive national farm loan associations in the State of South Carolina, and especially the Florington National Farm Loan Association of Darlington County, S. C.; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives from the State of South Carolina.

Mr. MURRAY presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, favoring the enactment of legislation to assist the beet-sugar industry in Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint memorial printed in full when presented today by Mr. WHEELER.)

Mr. MURRAY also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, favoring the enactment of legislation adopting the principles of the so-called Townsend national recovery plan substantially as set forth in House bill 4199, a general-welfare bill granting old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See joint memorial printed in full when presented today by Mr. WHEELER.)

Mr. GEORGE. I present two memorials from the Legislature of the State of Georgia. I especially direct attention to the first memorial asking for a change in the entire farm program. I ask that the memorials be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorials will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Georgia, and, under the rule, they will be printed in the RECORD:

To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas the State of Georgia is dependent upon farming and the prosperity of our farmers reflects itself in every other vocation, profession, and occupation; and

Whereas for the past 6 years we have tried experimentation and new and untried laws affecting farming generally; and

Whereas after the expenditure of billions of dollars on this experimentation and untried legislation the farmers now find themselves in equally as bad condition as in 1912: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Georgia delegation in Congress be requested to enact and pursue some method of legislation to restore the prosperity of the farmers, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to Georgia's 2 Senators and 10 Members of the House of Congress.

Resolution urging an increased Federal appropriation for forest-fire control

Whereas additional Federal funds are urgently needed in Georgia for forest-fire protection; and

Whereas there has been introduced into Congress a bill, S. 228, providing for an increase in the Federal appropriation for national forest-fire control from $2,500,000 to $9,000,000; and

Whereas Georgia's portion of Federal funds for forest-fire control would be materially increased if the new bill is passed by Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Georgia (the house of representatives concurring), That the Members of the Georgia delegation in Congress be requested to give their full support to this bill: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to each Member of the Georgia delegation in our Congress.

MAINTENANCE OF NEUTRALITY ACT—PETITIONS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I present to the Senate, for reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations, petitions from more than a score of Kansas cities and towns, urging continuance of the present Neutrality Act and protesting specifically against the lifting of any embargo on arms shipments; also several petitions urging nonparticipation in aggression by the United States and the discontinuance of shipments of war supplies to Japan.

These petitions are signed by several thousand citizens of Topeka, Herington, Russell, Manhattan, Stafford, Cheney, Niles, Kinsley, Bellefont, Ashland, Fowler, Princeton, Bloomington, Medicine Lodge, Concordia, Independence, Downs, Alton, Atwood, and Fort Scott, in the State of Kansas.

Mr. President in connection with these petitions I desire to restate my own position in regard to the Neutrality Act. In the present disturbed state of the world, I believe the United States should maintain the strictest possible neutrality in relation to the Old World.

I feel that we should have recognized long ago that war was being waged in China, and should have applied the provisions of the Neutrality Act as prohibiting shipments to both sides. We should refuse to sell scrap iron or other war materials to Japan or any other country engaged in war.

It seems to me that the extent of the agitation for and against the shipment of arms to Spain is a plain sign that the United States would add to domestic turmoil by taking sides in that conflict; in fact, in any foreign conflict.

I am opposed to establishing fortifications at Guam, 6,250 miles from this continent, or any other move that undertakes to make the United States the policeman of the world.

We should do our best to take the profit out of war, mind our own business, and stay out of all foreign wars.

If any changes are made in the Neutrality Act, the amendments should be to strengthen it, not to weaken it by allowing more discretion to the President to decide whether or not its provisions shall be applied.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions presented by the Senator from Kansas will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ADDITIONS TO OLYMPIC NATIONAL PARK, WASH.—TIMBERLANDS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys copy of a letter from Mr. L. T. Thornton, of Aberdeen, Wash., dated February 1, 1939.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS,

307 Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

On June 29, 1938, the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States, during regular session, passed H. R. 10024, an act to establish the Olympic National Park in the State of Washington.

This park, with the present boundaries, is now the greatest timber national park in our Nation and contains an adequate acreage of virgin timber of all species for museum, scenic, and recreational requirements, there being represented large stands of old-growth Douglas fir, spruce, hemlock, cedar, and all other native types, containing approximately 12,000,000,000 to 14,000,000,000 feet of merchantable timber.

Section (5) of H. R. 10024 provides that the President may after 8 months from the approval of this act (act approved June 29, 1938) by proclamation add to the Olympic National Park any lands within the boundaries of the Olympic National Forest and any lands which he may deem advisable to add to such park. Section (5) further provides that the total area of said park shall not exceed 898,292 acres. Section (5) further provides that before issuing any such proclamation the President shall consult with the Governor of the State of Washington, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture, and advise them of the lands which he proposes to add to such park, and shall afford them a reasonable opportunity to consult with and communicate to him their views and recommendations with respect to the addition of such lands to such park.

We believe it would be eminently unfair to take further from the timber lying to the south and west which now remains for the use of our industries and the benefit of our wage earners. We believe any addition made should include such areas as Hurricane Ridge, Deer Park, and Mount Angeles and other areas to the east, these areas being of real park caliber.

TAX EXEMPTION OF GOVERNMENTAL SECURITIES AND SALARIES

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance a letter from Hon. S. Davis Wilson, mayor of Philadelphia, of February 18, 1939, relative to the proposed taxing of municipal bonds and salaries of public employees. Pursuant to the subject I also ask inclusion in the RECORD and the same reference of a resolution of the City Council of McKeesport, Pa.

There being no objection, the letter and resolution were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF PHILADELPHIA,
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
February 18, 1939.

HON. JAMES J. DAVIS,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In connection with the proposal now pending before Congress for the taxing of municipal bonds and salaries of public employees as well, it is my belief that any such proposal, if made effective by legislation, would greatly increase the cost of municipal financing. This is especially so in Philadelphia, which has long enjoyed a favorable position in the financial world. If the bill proposes to tax bond issues already sold, or the income therefrom, the city of Philadelphia will very likely be required to reimburse the taxpayer for the amount of the taxes he will have to pay on the income derived from the city's securities. Our contract with the bond buyer provides that he shall be protected against any taxes assessed upon the bond. A recent supreme court decision of our State has held that a tax on income from securities is a tax on the principal. The city at present has approximately $550,000,000 of outstanding bonds, and the addition of a tax on the income of these bonds in favor of the Federal Government would have to be added to the cost of maintaining the debt service charges and would have to be paid not by the lender but by the taxpayers of the city of Philadelphia. On the other hand, if the bill proposes to tax the income received from future issues of Philadelphia bonds, the debt service charges on such bonds will be increased, because the buyers will demand a rate of interest which will compensate the purchaser of the bond for the Federal taxes he will have to pay.

The proposed reciprocal right to tax Federal securities would be of no benefit to most municipalities for the reason that ordinarily municipalities are not invested with the power to levy taxes on such securities.

In addition it would seem to be a futile thing to have the city of Philadelphia taxing its citizens to pay taxes to the Federal Government, either directly or indirectly, and the Federal Government taxing, inter alia, the citizens of Philadelphia to pay taxes to the city of Philadelphia. It could only result in an increase in the cost of administration of both governments, with the burden being borne not by the lender but by the persons who are responsible as taxpayers for the maintenance of government services in the municipality.

The same reasoning applies to a lesser extent to the proposal to tax the incomes of municipal employees. In this connection it must be remembered that such employees do not have the protection afforded to persons engaged in industry and commerce arising from existing labor laws, and that hours of employment and compensation received by municipal employees is generally on a lower scale than those guaranteed to employees in private industry.

In view of that fact, income taxes chargeable against the salaries of municipal employees would no doubt tend to either increase the cost of rendering municipal government services or reduce the standard of employees below the requirements for such services.

Very truly yours,

S. DAVIS WILSON, Mayor.

Resolution condemning any attempt on the part of the Federal Government to tax the revenues of the States or their municipalities and any attempt to tax State or municipal bonds or the salaries of State and local governmental employees unless and until the consent of the State is first obtained through a proper constitutional amendment

Resolved by the city of McKeesport in council assembled, That we, the City Council of the City of McKeesport, Pa., go on record as condemning any attempt on the part of the Federal Government to tax the revenues of the States or their municipalities and any attempt to tax State or municipal bonds or the salaries of State and local governmental employees unless and until the consent of the State is first obtained through a proper constitutional amendment; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to our United States Senators and our Representative in Congress, urging them to do all in their power to carry out our wishes.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. GILLETTE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 1045) to give effect to the International Agreement for the Regulation of Whaling, signed at London, June 8, 1937, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 71) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 828. A bill to permit the President to acquire and convert, as well as to construct, certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy (Rept. No. 72); and

S. 829. A bill to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 73).

Mr. WALSH also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1115) for the relief of Lt. Malcolm A. Hufty, United States Navy, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 74) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CONNALLY:

S. 1483. A bill to amend sections 3 and 15A of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. CHAVEZ:

S. 1484. A bill to extend the boundaries of the Santa Fe National Forest, N. Mex.; and

S. 1485. A bill to include within the Carson National Forest certain lands owned or in course of acquisition by the United States; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. NYE. I introduce, for reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, a bill to supplement existing laws relating to the maintenance of secrecy with respect to certain military and naval aircraft.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred, as requested by the Senator from North Dakota.

By Mr. NYE:

S. 1486. A bill to supplement existing laws relating to the maintenance of secrecy with respect to certain military and naval aircraft; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 1487. A bill for the relief of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1488. A bill giving clerks in the Railway Mail Service the benefit of holiday known as Armistice Day; and

S. 1489. A bill extending the classified civil service to include assistant postmasters and clerks in third-class post offices, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

S. 1490. A bill for the relief of William H. Kelly; and

S. 1491. A bill granting a pension to Lottie A. Torrance; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

S. 1492. A bill to provide for a 5-year building program for the United States Bureau of Fisheries; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MALONEY:

S. 1493. A bill for the relief of Peter Giancola and Julia Morelli Giancola; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 1494. A bill to preserve from extinction the American eagle, emblem of the sovereignty of the United States of America; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 1495. A bill to increase annual payments to State and Territorial homes for veterans; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1496. A bill to protect producers, manufacturers, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in woven or knitted fabrics and in garments or articles of apparel made therefrom, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

S. 1497. A bill to provide benefits on account of disability or death due to service in the armed forces of the United States in the event of war, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK of Idaho:

S. 1498. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to permit the payment of the costs of repairs, resurfacing, improvement, and enlargement of the Arrowrock Dam in 20 annual installments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. BARBOUR:

S. 1499. A bill to increase the number of National Guard aviation units; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1500. A bill to assure equal protection to all persons under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McNARY:

S. 1501. A bill for the relief of the Industrial Spray Painting Corporation; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. 1502. A bill for the relief of Donna L. I. Carlisle; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GIBSON:

S. 1503. A bill for the relief of Ernest J. Abair; and

S. 1504. A bill for the relief of Joseph A. Pawelczyk; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GUFFEY:

S. 1505. A bill to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1506. A bill granting an increase of pension to Catherine Pennington; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRISON:

S. 1507. A bill granting a pension to Walter Earl Savage; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 1508. A bill to provide additional home-mortgage relief by providing for (1) a moratorium on foreclosures permitting appropriate legislation to provide further emergency relief to home-mortgage indebtedness, (2) to further refinance home mortgages, (3) to reduce the rate of interest and extend payment and amortization of mortgages, (4) to eliminate personal and deficiency judgments in foreclosures, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. DANAHER:

S. 1509. A bill for the relief of Mary Egan; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1510. A bill for the relief of George Louis Artick; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. BONE:

S. 1511. A bill to provide for the acquisition by the United States of lands not in Federal ownership within the Olympic National Park, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. MINTON:

S. 1512. A bill to amend part II of the Interstate Commerce Act, otherwise known as the Motor Carrier Act, 1935, as amended by the act of June 29, 1938; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. CAPPER:

S. 1513. A bill to regulate the election of delegates representing the District of Columbia to national political conventions; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

S. 1514. A bill providing in the interest of the general welfare for an appropriate reduction of the burdensome oversupply of American cotton and for further encouragement of soil conservation and soil improvement by making payments in kind in cotton, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. OVERTON:

S. 1515. A bill for the relief of the Louisiana National Bank of Baton Rouge and the Hibernia Bank & Trust Co. of New Orleans; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BARBOUR:

S. 1516. A bill to amend sections 704, 705, 706, and 707 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended; to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 4218) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. GREEN submitted an amendment making provision for a messenger at special gallery door of the Senate, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 4218, the legislative appropriation bill, 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF CONTRACTS OF INDIGENOUS WORKERS

Mr. CAPPER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 82), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas there is pending before the International Labor Organization at Geneva a proposed convention on Regulation of Contracts of Indigenous Workers, which would impose a lower standard of working conditions on many American workers, and in particular upon many American women workers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate request the United States delegation to the June conference of the International Labor Organization to oppose the adoption of the above convention.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 83), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized during the Seventy-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 84), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs hereby is authorized to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,800 per annum until the end of the present session.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

Mr. BONE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 85), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents is hereby authorized to employ for the duration of the Seventy-sixth Congress an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,800 per annum.

LEGAL ASPECTS OF FLOOD CONTROL (S. DOC. NO. 34)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask to have printed as a Senate document, a memorandum prepared by the Bureau of Law of the Federal Power Commission in regard to various legal aspects of flood control; and also a memorandum on power projects licensed by the Federal Power Commission at Government dams constructed primarily for purposes other than power.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the memoranda will be printed as a Senate document.

AIR POWER FOR PEACE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR REYNOLDS

[Mr. SHEPPARD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of Air Power for Peace, delivered by Senator REYNOLDS on February 18, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

RETURNING MEN TO WORK—ADDRESS BY SENATOR MALONEY

[Mr. WALSH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject Returning Men to Work, delivered by Senator MALONEY on February 14, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

LET'S LOOK AFTER AMERICA FIRST—ADDRESS BY SENATOR HOLT

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by himself on February 16, 1939, on the subject Let's Look After America First, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR WILEY BEFORE WOMEN'S POLITICAL STUDY CLUB

[Mr. McNARY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator WILEY on February 18, 1939, before the Women's Political Study Club of Washington, D. C., which appears in the Appendix.]

LINCOLN DAY ADDRESS BY SENATOR TAFT

[Mr. McNARY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a Lincoln Day address delivered by Senator TAFT at the Netherlands-Plaza Hotel, Cincinnati, Ohio, on February 11, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

APPRAISAL OF WASHINGTON BY JEFFERSON

[Mr. BORAH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD excerpts from a letter written by Thomas Jefferson in 1814 on George Washington, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY GOVERNOR AIKEN AT PITTSBURGH, PA.

[Mr. GIBSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Hon. George D. Aiken, Governor of Vermont, on February 11, 1939, at the Amen Corner Club, Pittsburgh, Pa., which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY WILLIAM O. DOUGLAS BEFORE FORDHAM UNIVERSITY ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

[Mr. MALONEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by William O. Douglas, Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, before the Fordham University Alumni Association on February 9, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

FEDERAL RECLAMATION IN NEBRASKA—ADDRESS BY HON. JOHN C. PAGE

[Mr. NORRIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject Federal Reclamation in Nebraska, delivered by Hon. John C. Page, Commissioner of Reclamation, which appears in the Appendix.]

HON. HARRY HOPKINS, SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

[Mr. BRIDGES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York Herald Tribune of February 20, 1939, relating to Hon. Harry Hopkins, Secretary of Commerce, and the Presidential nomination in 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

FORTIFICATION OF GUAM—EDITORIAL FROM WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Daily News of February 16, 1939, entitled "Congress and Guam," which appears in the Appendix.]

FOREIGN POLICY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR PITTMAN

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to a speech on our foreign policy, delivered in Baltimore, Md., before the real-estate board of Baltimore City, by the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. While using this text for his speech, the Senator from Nevada enlarged to a considerable extent upon other phases of our foreign policy.

I think it would be very fitting to have this address published at length in the RECORD, because it was very well received by those present, and was very forthright in its clarity, dealing as it does with the difficult subject of neutrality and foreign relations in general.

I ask that the speech may be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS BY HON. KEY PITTMAN, OF NEVADA, BEFORE THE TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL BANQUET OF THE REAL-ESTATE BOARD OF BALTIMORE, ON FEBRUARY 11, 1939

Mr. Toastmaster, members of the real-estate board of Baltimore, and distinguished guests, I am happy that my official engagements could be so arranged that I am permitted to be with you tonight. I fully realize the honor conferred upon me in being invited to address this assemblage of distinguished men upon this celebrated occasion of your annual banquet.

Apparently every business and professional man in Baltimore is a member of this association. That is wise. The ownership of land is the foundation of wealth and the strongest incentive to patriotism.

As a college boy in the South I read with rapt interest the thrilling and romantic history of Maryland. The story of the democracy, justice, and tolerance of its founder, Lord Baltimore, after whom your great city is named, left with me a lasting impression. During years that elapsed while I wandered in far places, and participated in the exciting development of my own wonderful State of Nevada, the memory of your State and your metropolis was almost erased from my mind. Then the citizens of Nevada in 1912 did me the honor to elect me to the United States Senate as one of their representatives. I was thrown in intimate association with your distinguished representatives in the Senate—and you have always had distinguished representatives in both branches of Congress. One of the first Senators with whom I became intimately acquainted was your able Senator John Walter Smith. He, with other senior Members, gave me some good advice. He warned me never to answer a letter unless the answer would be pleasing. Senator Mark Smith, of Arizona, advised me that the chief object of a political speech is not to lose votes. While Senator Swanson, of Virginia, urged that I never make a speech on an important subject in the year in which I was running for reelection because somebody would be offended. I took their advice—and I am still in the Senate.

Through your Senators I met and learned to know your State, your city, and their patriotic, progressive, and hospitable citizens. In fact, I became so fascinated by the beautiful scenery of Maryland and the excellent opportunities for recreation and sports on Chesapeake Bay that I helped to organize and became president of Jefferson Island Club. There I learned to know and appreciate the liberty-loving and law-abiding people of the Eastern Shore. They are law abiding—but they make their own laws. They recognize, however, that Baltimore is on the border of the Eastern Shore and is entitled to their sympathy and their confidence—most of the time. At first I marveled at the industry, the activity, and the great prosperity of Baltimore. I soon discovered, however, the cause. Very few cities in the United States have by location and facilities better opportunities for the expansion of industry and commerce than Baltimore, and none excel it in the character and industry of its citizens.

There is a bright future for Baltimore because there is a bright future for the United States. We are guaranteed by our Constitution, builded by our patriotic and inspired forefathers, independence, and liberty to a degree not enjoyed by any other people. We have more natural resources, more wealth, more progressive businessmen, and more intelligent, capable, and democratic people than any other country in the world. We as a people should be proud and happy for these blessings. We should guard against enemies both within and without with every resource and power at our command.

There is little danger from within. The Third International a few years ago, through money and propaganda, attempted to establish and propagate in our country the destructive doctrine of communism. They moved against labor, as they thought that the easiest point of attack. Labor scorned and repulsed them. It is true that there exists in our country a so-called Communist Party. It is puerile and without policy or intelligent leadership or following. There are, of course, a few shrewd, cunning, and anarchistic men in this country who are teaching and practicing the doctrine of unlawful domination through violence and destruction. These men are largely vicious aliens. These aliens should be deported. Those who are citizens should be tried, convicted, and imprisoned. Russia, however, at the present time is too busily engaged at home in preparation against a threatened conquest of her territory to engage in much activity abroad.

Hitler, however, in his mad vanity, fanatical zeal, and unbounded ambition to dominate throughout the world, is openly and secretly striving to organize and bind to him nationals of other countries who are of the German race. I personally do not doubt that Hitler would consider it justifiable to arouse internal dissensions in foreign countries to accomplish his ambitions. He has made little headway, however, in his appeal to our citizens of the German race. They are too intelligent and patriotic to be won over to his scheme by such insincere appeals to their racial pride. They have pride in their race, and well they may have, but they know that Hitler in his ruthless and unrestrained ambition has regimented the German people like slaves, worked them inhuman hours without sufficient proper food, and deprived them of their liberty. They know that Hitler through force and violence is depriving his people of free speech, the right of a free press, and the right to worship their God as they see fit. The people of the German race everywhere long for the advancement of their race, with the aspirations common to every race. But our citizens of the German race will never approve of the inhuman methods adopted by Hitler in Germany. It is true that we have a little Hitler organization in this country called the Bund. It does not amount to much. It is composed of a few vain, flattered, loud-mouthed, light-headed, goose-stepping mountebanks. They are insulting and annoying. They are a disgrace and humiliation to our citizens of the German race. They have no influence.

Those who give the most encouragement to both of these foreign ideologies are some of our prominent citizens. These men and women in their particular hatred for or fear of one of these ideologies seem to praise the other either by comparison or by their attack solely on one. As a matter of fact, they do, as does every patriotic American citizen, detest both communism and nazi-ism. We are not directly concerned with the character of government in any foreign country, nor do we attempt to destroy it, but we resent and will resist any attempt of foreigners or foreign sympathizers to destroy our democratic system. To say the least, such efforts are destructive of harmony and good feelings among nations. Under our Constitution, we cannot deprive any persons of the right of free speech or of peaceful assemblage, but we have the right to refuse to associate or do business with people who speak against our Government and preach the offensive ideology of a foreign government while enjoying the blessings of our country. We should ostracize them.

There is, however, a threat of war from abroad; not immediate, of course. Not so long as the totalitarian powers—sometimes called the dictator powers—that is, Germany, Italy, and Japan—are engaged in war or preparing for war in Europe and Asia. One of the totalitarian powers is now engaged in war and in the conquest of China. If Japan finally conquers China, then Japan will dominate eastern Asia and her Army and Navy will be free to join Hitler and Mussolini in a war for the conquest of Europe and the rest of Asia. If these dictator governments conquer Europe and Asia—and this is possible—then the Latin American Republics will be the next countries involved. In such an event, how can we avoid war? Certainly we do not intend to stand still while the dictators subdue our neighbors and advance to our very door. We will not let any military power reach our shores and make a battleground of our country and carry death and destruction to our noncombatants, men, women, and children, as was and is being done in China. We will stop them at the gate.

We hear over the radio nightly and we read in the press the challenging questions: "Why prepare for defense, as there is no danger of war? Who will bring war to the United States?" Some of these questioners speak from sincere ignorance. Some are actuated by an unpatriotic fear. Possibly some are motivated by sinister motives. Some say: "Do not state the facts. Do not criticize the dictators lest we anger them." They have already expressed their hatred and contempt for our Government. They will not force us into war on account of hatred, nor will they refrain from war on account of a friendly feeling. They are, and will continue to be, actuated solely by ambition for power and the love of conquest. Has any competent observer ever detected any evidence that any of the dictators were ever influenced by justice, religion, morality, or sentiment? Is not their every declaration and act based on the doctrine that might makes right? Do they not worship at the altar of the god of war? Do they recognize any law save the law of force? Is there anything that can stop their march to conquest save fear of force?

Let us not be deceived. These dictator governments are in definite and firm military alliance. They are forcing other governments into the alliance, and no one can safely predict where this will end. They are in alliance against the Comintern, which means Russia. They were in alliance against Czechoslovakia. They are in alliance against Great Britain and France, and their alliance will hold against any country that opposes or interferes with the consummation of their ambitions and greed. Their acts in the Latin American republics are proof of their determination to dominate these vast countries so rich in undeveloped natural resources.

The President, in his message to Congress on January 4 of this year, in part, said:

"All about us rage undeclared wars—military and economic. All about us grow more deadly armaments—military and economic. All about us are threats of new aggression—military and economic."

"There comes a time in the affairs of men when they must prepare to defend not their homes alone but the tenets of faith and humanity on which their churches, their governments, and their very civilization are founded. The defense of religion, of democracy, and of good faith among nations is all the same fight. To save one we must now make up our minds to save all."

"We know what might happen to us of the United States if the new philosophies of force were to encompass the other continents and invade our own. We, no more than other nations, can afford to be surrounded by the enemies of our faith and our humanity. Fortunate it is, therefore, that in this Western Hemisphere we have, under a common ideal of democratic government, a rich diversity of resources and of peoples functioning together in mutual respect and peace."

"That hemisphere, that peace, and that ideal we propose to do our share in protecting against storms from any quarter. Our people and our resources are pledged to secure that protection. From that determination no American flinches."

"We as one of the republics reiterate our willingness to help the cause of world peace. We stand on our historic offer to take counsel with all other nations of the world to the end that aggresssion among them be terminated, that the race of armaments cease, and that commerce be renewed.

"We have learned that God-fearing democracies of the world which observe the sanctity of treaties and good faith in their dealings with other nations cannot safely be indifferent to international lawlessness anywhere. They cannot forever let pass, without effective protests, acts of aggression against sister nations—acts which automatically undermine all of us.

"Obviously they must proceed along practical, peaceful lines. But the mere fact that we rightly decline to intervene with arms to prevent acts of aggression does not mean that we must act as if there were no aggression at all.

"At the very least, we can and should avoid any action, or any lack of action, which will encourage, assist, or build up an aggressor."

I do not interpret this to mean that we intend to join with other nations in determining an aggressor. We will not do this in concert with other nations. We will determine this question for our own selves when such aggression directly threatens our own safety or indirectly threatens us through threats of safety to our neighbors on this hemisphere. Let us remember that the President declared in his message that we "rightly decline to intervene with arms." Evidently this expression was not considered by those who charged that his message indicated a desire to lead our country into an alliance with foreign countries. If there was any such doubt existing in the minds of anyone, that doubt should be removed by the President's statement made at his press conference on February 3 of this year when in his first declaration of the fundamental principles of our foreign policy he said: "We are against any entangling alliances, obviously."

His assertion in his message that "At the very least, we can and should avoid any action, or any lack of action, which will encourage, assist, or build up an aggressor" was looked upon in some quarters, Nazi and elsewhere, with a grave suspicion. The publicity of the fact that the agents of France were inspecting and purchasing airplanes from private manufacturers in this country with the approval of the President was grasped as a cause for attack upon the President. Some of these attacks were sincere. Others were by political partisans for political purposes. It is deplorable that anyone should inject politics into the foreign relations of our country at any time, and especially in so grave a world situation.

What was all the hullabaloo about? There is no law against any government, not declared by the President to be in a state of war, inspecting and purchasing airplanes from private manufacturers in the United States. France instead of the United States is paying for the testing of planes manufactured in the United States. France at her own expense is paying for the expansion of our private plants and furnishing experience to our manufacturers in this country to our great advantage. We do not need these airplanes now. Later we will require greatly enlarged plant capacity.

Is there anything wrong in permitting France to purchase airplanes in this country? France and Great Britain were the only military powers who sincerely joined with the United States in the many efforts to limit naval armaments. The United States, Great Britain, and France, relying on peace treaties and the limitation of armaments, failed to build up military forces, military equipment, or to provide capacity for essential production, while the dictator powers not only enlarged their military forces to their utmost ability, but provided capacity for enlargement and renewal of arms, ammunition, and implements of war far beyond the capacity of Great Britain and France. To deny Great Britain and France, in the circumstances, the right to purchase arms, ammunition, and implements of war in this country would be giving aid to the dictator powers and would be unneutral, unjust, and contrary to the best interests of our country.

Apparently the only thing that can prevent war in Europe, with the ever-threatening danger of spreading to this hemisphere, is such a balance of military power by the opposing groups of countries in Europe and Asia that both will refrain from attack for fear of defeat. It is devoutly to be hoped in the interests of peace that such balance of power in Europe and Asia will be established and maintained as a preventive of war, at least until some peaceful deterrent can be devised, established, and maintained.

Our people hate war. They have not forgotten its death and destruction. It is constantly asserted that we are about to be dragged into another European war as we were in the last. The conditions are not the same; they are entirely different. Then the President and Congress held firmly to the doctrine of the freedom of the seas. We went to war by reason of the continued and brutal violation of our rights on the high seas. The Neutrality Act has prohibited our citizens many of their rights upon the high seas, the violation of which prior to the World War was the chief cause for our being forced into that war. But, whether you believe that we were right or wrong in entering the World War, do not forget that Congress—and not the President—declared war, and that we will not enter another foreign war unless it is the will of Congress. I have absolute confidence in our Congress.

Let us be cautious but firm. Let us be governed by intelligence, not sentiment. Let us be actuated by patriotism, not fear. Let us remember that no people who were afraid to fight for liberty ever retained liberty. Let us be prepared to defend our country. If we do these things, we will not have war forced upon us, nor will we be dragged into it, and our rights will be respected throughout the world and our liberties preserved.

DEATH OF POPE PIUS XI

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, in the passing of Pope Pius XI the world sustained a grievous loss. Religion benefited by the force of his profound spiritual leadership. The temporal world found in him an influential advocate of human rights. An apostle of peace, a vigorous defender of the truth, a firm believer in the inherent rights of mankind, his death is mourned by the God-fearing peoples of every race and creed.

A saddened world pays its respects to the memory of this frail and devout figure, who time and again resisted death that he might continue his ministry on earth. In an age when peace and tolerance have left the hearts of many men, Pope Pius XI exemplified the virtues of hope, faith, and charity. His wisdom, vision, and patience attested to his godliness, and burned themselves deeply into the hearts and consciences of those in the world who are oppressed, persecuted, or threatened with violence to their liberties.

In attempting to mark the accomplishments of this distinguished student of human and spiritual problems, I take occasion to quote the comments of leaders of our day from the press of my State.

The New York Times carries President Roosevelt's statement, issued by Secretary of State Cordell Hull. The President, in expressing his condolences to the Papal Secretary of State, said of the Pope:

His great spiritual qualities and his zeal for peace and tolerance won him a place in the hearts of all races and creeds. Word of his passing has been received with deep sorrow throughout the United States.

The Most Reverend Amleto Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States:

It is difficult to bring ourselves to realize our great loss. He lives and will continue to live in the hearts of his loyal and grateful subjects, and in the administration of those who sincerely wish the good of humanity.

The Most Reverend Stephen L. Donahue, auxiliary bishop and administrator of the Archdiocese of New York, quoted in the Times, declared:

He was not only an outstanding Pontiff who ruled the church of God with Christlike clarity and fatherly solicitude but also he will be remembered by generations to come as an eminent statesman and scholar endowed with those rare gifts of wisdom and courage which he used for the betterment of mankind.

Among many other comments reported by the Times, are: Robert P. Goldman, president, the Union of American Hebrew Congregations:

The Pope was a lover of peace and humanity, and upheld the ideals of spirituality with courage and wisdom. He has clarified the thinking of the world by his firm declaration that the law of God must mold the standards of society. His life was an inspiration and his passing is a loss to the people of all religious faiths.

Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, of Detroit:

He reflected from their snow-capped pinnacles the light of God's guiding truth to those of us who dwell in the valley of darkness.

Postmaster General James A. Farley, of New York:

The world has lost a leader whose spiritual influence will exist long after most of us are forgotten. The earnest efforts of His Holiness to promote world peace and his energy in advocating social justice made him respected by men of all political and religious faiths.

Alfred E. Smith, former Governor of New York:

He will go down in history as one of the world's truly great men. We are losing him at a time when we need him most.

Rev. Robert I. Gannon, S. J., president of Fordham University:

His Holiness was a martyr to the cause of liberty.

The Long Island Star quotes Rabbi Joshua Goldberg, of Astoria, national secretary of the American Jewish Congress:

The Jews of the country at large share with their Catholic brothers a sense of grief over the passing of this kindly and courageous leader of men, whose courage, sympathies, and utterances combined to form a leadership that the world today can ill afford to miss.

The Star likewise reports a statement by Rabbi Abraham Dubin, of Flushing, who said:

We Jews are particularly mindful of his friendliness toward our people and of his sympathetic expressions for the Jews suffering in many places of the world today. Wherever men labor for freedom and truth and justice and peace, there the passing of Pope Pius XI will be mourned. The world is bereft of a great humanitarian whose efforts in behalf of peace and understanding have won the heart of all denominations. His memory will be held in everlasting benediction.

The Buffalo Evening News, the Buffalo Times, and the Buffalo Courier-Express all contain expressions of the grief of prominent Buffalonians over the Pope's death. Among the comments appearing in the Buffalo papers are:

Mayor Thomas L. Holling:

His was an inspiring presence; his death particularly unfortunate at this time, because His Holiness was a tremendous influence in furthering world peace. He contributed much to the betterment of man spiritually, socially, and economically. May his noble soul rest in peace.

The Most Reverend John A. Duffy, bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Buffalo:

The Pope of the workingman is dead and the tollers of the world will mourn the loss of a truly sincere and devoted friend. A scholar internationally known, a diplomat of world renown, yet this and future generations will revere Pope Pius XI as the supreme exponent in our day of social justice.

Rabbi Joseph L. Fink, of Buffalo:

He was a great, vigorous, and extraordinary personality. His influence on the world has been enormous. His leadership will be missed by the millions outside of his own faith as well as by the millions in his faith. He was a great man and we deeply mourn his passing.

The Right Reverend Cameron J. Davis, Episcopal bishop of western New York:

The whole world is grieved at the death of the Pope. He stands as one of the greatest spiritual leaders that has been known in many, many years. His devotion to God and to man has been marked particularly in three of his great encyclicals and particularly in that one which dealt with the problems of our present social order.

Monsignor Alexander Pitass, of Buffalo:

The Pope's death is a great loss to the world. Even though we were warned of the impending danger, nevertheless it was a great shock. His death means much to Poland and the Polish-Americans of Buffalo, since he was very much attached to the Polish people. It was a Polish cardinal who consecrated him bishop.

The Utica Observer Record carries the words of Hon. Fiorenzo H. LaGuardia, mayor of New York City, who said of the Pope:

He was exercising all his strength for peace in his world. I know that I and all the people in the world will miss forces which he was trying to express. I feel confident that what he had in mind will be carried on.

The Utica Observer Dispatch quotes Rev. Jerome F. McCarthy, of Utica:

Our Catholic people deeply regret his passing and know that they will miss his guiding hand.

The Observer Dispatch likewise includes a statement by Rev. Michael Dzialuk, of Utica, in which Reverend Dzialuk says:

Pope Pius XI was the greatest Pope since Gregory VII, and I feel, as all men do today, deeply grieved at the loss of such a leader.

The Utica Daily Press reports a statement by the Most Reverend Walter A. Foery, bishop of the Catholic diocese of Syracuse, who says:

He loved mankind, even as his Master, Christ, loved all men, and offered himself as sacrifice for the salvation of all. He was the champion of the workers, defending them and demanding for them justice and working conditions worthy of human dignity. He was the guide of the educators; he was the patron of youth, vindicating their individual rights above the demands of the state.

The Binghamton Press prints eulogies of the Pope from the lips of a score of pastors in that city. Among them are the words of the Reverend Joseph P. Toomey, head of the Catholic Charities, who states:

The Pope was truly a spiritual father, seeking always to protect for his children their God-given rights, guiding them in the way of godliness and providing them with a spiritual heritage which might survive every attack of worldly materialism.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS. I submit the conference report on House bill 2868, the first deficiency appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 14, 15, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment before the period insert the following: "Provided, That the amounts claimed and allowed, respectively, in item numbered 95, page 12 of such document, are hereby changed to $7, and that the amount allowed in item numbered 5, page 25 of such document, is hereby changed to $16.15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 10, 13, 16, 17, 18, and 23.

ALVA B. ADAMS,
CARTER GLASS,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
CARL HAYDEN,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
FREDERICK HALE,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, JR.,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
C. A. WOODBRUM,
CLARENCE CANNON,
LOUIS LUDLOW,
THOS. S. MCMILLAN,
J. BUELL SNYDER,
EMMET O'NEAL,
JOHN TABER,
R. B. WIGGLESWORTH,
W. P. LAMBERTSON,

Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado for the immediate consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Colorado concerning the status of the amendment which was added to the bill in the Senate, providing for grasshopper eradication.

Mr. ADAMS. The two Houses are in disagreement on that amendment. In fact, I may say they are in disagreement on all the major items but one.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there was so much commotion in the Chamber that I could not understand what was said when the report was first taken up. This is only a partial report, as I understand.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct. It is only a partial report. It reports three major items and one rather minor item in disagreement.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the status of the amendment which was put on the bill by the Senate in regard to the eradication of pests, including grasshoppers?

Mr. ADAMS. The House declined to recede from its position, and the Senate declined to recede from its position. As I recollect, the House provided $2,000,000 for the purpose. The Senate increased the amount to $5,417,000; and we are in disagreement as to that item.

Mr. NORRIS. It is contemplated, then, is it, that a separate vote shall be taken on that amendment in each House?

Mr. ADAMS. I propose to request the Senate to insist on its amendments, to reappoint the same conferees, and to ask for a further conference. I think in the House it is planned to have separate votes on the separate items.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator probably will want a yea-and-nay vote on the matter here, as well as in the House. Is that correct?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I had not planned to have a yea-and-nay vote at this stage of the conference report.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think it would be wise to have such a vote, if the Senate desires to back up the conferees.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me the conferees would be in a better position to meet the conferees of the House if they were backed up by a yea-and-nay vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments in disagreement, request a further conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded. The consideration of bills on the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

The first business on the calendar was the bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States in claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico.

Mr. ADAMS. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3743, the independent offices appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state to the Senator from Virginia that this is Monday morning, and under the rule the calendar must be called for the consideration of bills under rule VIII unless unanimous consent is given to dispense with it. Of course, the Senator from Kentucky or other Senators may ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that the calendar be called. The calendar is short, and it will not take long to dispose of it.

Mr. GLASS. Very well.

BILL AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1093) for the relief of Mike Chetkovich was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 58) providing that a calendar day's notice shall suffice in connection with suspension of a rule was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

CLAIMS FOR COMPENSATION—RECOMMITTAL OF BILL

The bill (S. 197) to amend the Judicial Code in respect to claims against the United States for just compensation was announced as next in order.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILL AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 74) providing for a Committee on Civil Aviation was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 884) for the relief of disbursing officers and other officers and employees of the United States for disallowance and charges on account of airplane travel was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PACIFIC TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.

The bill (S. 745) for the relief of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., of San Francisco, Calif., the sum of $51,325.85, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for reimbursement of expenses incurred in repairing and restoring a submarine cable in the San Francisco Bay between San Francisco and Fort Baker, Calif., which was cut by the U. S. S. Quail on November 27, 1937, while engaged in recovering an anchor of the U. S. S. Whippoorwill: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with such claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with such claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

THE CORBITT CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1315) for the relief of the Corbitt Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "is" and insert "be, and he is hereby"; in line 6, after "$6,659.80", to strike out "such sum representing the amount of" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for"; and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Corbitt Co., of Henderson, N. C., the sum of $6,659.80 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for liquidated damages for delinquency in making deliveries charged against such company in the settlement of a certain contract (No. W-ord-226) entered into by such company with the War Department for furnishing 20 T 9 scout cars and a quantity of spare parts: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE OCILLA STAR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 303) for the relief of The Ocilla Star, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "December," to strike out "1936, such claim having been disallowed by the General Accounting Office," and insert "1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to The Ocilla Star, of Ocilla, Ga., the sum of $96 in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for the publication of six foreclosure advertisements in four consecutive issues at the request of a county rural rehabilitation supervisor, Resettlement Administration, in December 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE FITZGERALD LEADER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 463) for the relief of the Fitzgerald Leader, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "December", to strike out "1936, such claim having been disallowed by the General Accounting Office", and insert: "1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Fitzgerald Leader, of Fitzgerald, Ga., the sum of $32 in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for the publishing of two foreclosure advertisements in four consecutive issues at the request of a county rural rehabilitation supervisor, Resettlement Administration, in December 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISASTER LOAN CORPORATION

The bill (S. 1367) to extend the time for making loans by the Disaster Loan Corporation and increasing its capital stock was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is the passage of this bill unanimously recommended by the committee? [A pause.] Let it go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the law which this bill proposes to amend was passed 2 years ago. It authorized the making of loans, and the Disaster Loan Corporation was created, with a capital stock of $20,000,000, furnished by the R. F. C. Not more than half of the money has been used, and the law will soon expire. Because of disasters, not only in the same region as heretofore but in other regions of the country, it is desirable that the time be extended.

I will say to the Senator from Utah that the Disaster Loan Corporation set up in the R. F. C. has been very conservative in making loans, and in view of the expiration of the time, and the fact that practically half of the capital stock is still unused, I think the time ought to be extended. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. KING. For how long is it desired that it shall be extended?

Mr. BARKLEY. My recollection is that it is a year, but I am not certain. I shall have to examine the bill to ascertain that.

Mr. KING. If it is more than one year, I shall object. I suggest that the bill be passed over temporarily.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is a year.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether the extension was recommended by the R. F. C.?

Mr. BARKLEY. My recollection is that it was recommended. Certainly it is not opposed by the R. F. C.; and the unanimous report of the committee asks that the time be extended.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill merely provides:

That the act approved February 11, 1937 (50 Stat. 19), as amended, is amended by striking from the first sentence "$20,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$40,000,000", and by striking from the second paragraph "or 1938" and inserting in lieu thereof "1938, 1939, or 1940."

Mr. KING. I shall object if the amount is increased from twenty to forty million dollars. No reason has been shown for the extension.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DAVID R. THOMPSON AND RALPH S. WARNER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 316) to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to set aside the trial-board conviction of Policemen David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner and their resultant dismissal, and to reinstate David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner to their former positions as members of the Metropolitan Police Department, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the words "directed to", to strike out "set aside the trial-board conviction of Policemen David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner and their resultant dismissal, and to reinstate David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner to their former positions as members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia" and insert "reappoint David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner as members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia; compensation to commence from the date of such reappointment only, and no pay or compensation to be paid them from the date of their dismissal from the Metropolitan Police Department to the date of such reappointment", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to reappoint David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner as members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia; compensation to commence from the date of such reappointment only, and no pay or compensation to be paid them from the date of their dismissal from the Metropolitan Police Department to the date of such reappointment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to reappoint David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner as members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia."

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will proceed to state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "American Battle Monuments Commission," on page 4, line 17, after the word "work", to insert a comma and "supplies, materials, and equipment," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That notwithstanding the requirements of existing laws or regulations, and under such terms and conditions as the Commission may in its discretion deem necessary and proper, the Commission may contract for work, supplies, materials, and equipment in Europe and engage, by contract or otherwise, the services of architects, firms of architects, and other technical and professional personnel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Civil Aeronautics Authority", on page 8, line 3, after the figures "$13,738,000", to insert a comma and "of which $1,000,000 shall be available for the Technical Development Division", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For salaries and expenses of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, including the expenses of operation, maintenance, and upkeep of air navigation facilities, in carrying out the duties, powers, and functions devolving upon it pursuant to the authority contained in the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 973), including traveling expenses and expenses of employees detailed by the Chairman of the Authority or the Administrator to attend meetings of associations, organizations, or other properly constituted bodies concerned with the civil aeronautics industry or the art of aeronautics, in the United States or in foreign countries; personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; contract stenographic reporting services; examination of estimates of appropriations in the field, including actual expenses of subsistence or per diem allowance in lieu thereof; expenses of packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household effects and other personal property (not exceeding in any one case 5,000 pounds) of employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty, upon specific authorization by the Chairman of the Authority or the Administrator; purchase and exchange of professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, atlases and maps, periodicals and newspapers; purchase and exchange (not to exceed $400,000), operation, maintenance, repair, and overhaul of aircraft, aircraft power plants, propellers and equipment, and spare parts therefor; purchase and exchange (not to exceed $45,000), hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles, including two automobiles for use in the District of Columbia; and purchase of special clothing, wearing apparel, and suitable equipment for aviation purposes (including rubber boots, snowshoes, and skis), $13,738,000, of which $1,000,000 shall be available for the Technical Development Division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 19, after the numerals "1938", to strike out "$250,000, of which $75,000 shall be immediately available" and insert "$175,000, together with the unobligated balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1939", so as to read:

Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission: For completion of the work, except the inscription, authorized by the provisions of the Mount Rushmore Memorial Act of 1938, $175,000, together with the unobligated balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1939.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Social Security Board", on page 44, line 23, after the figures "$49,000,000", to strike out the comma and "of which sum such amount as may be necessary shall be available for the grants under this title III for any period in the fiscal year 1939 subsequent to March 31, 1939", so as to read:

Grants to States for unemployment compensation administration: For grants to States for unemployment compensation administration, as authorized in title III of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, including rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $49,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia whether there is anything in the present appropriation for the Social Security Board which covers the reserve fund under title II, or will we reach that in the consideration of some other bill?

Mr. GLASS. The reserve fund of the Social Security Board?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. I do not think that is involved in this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with respect to social security, I should like to make an inquiry. I have received many communications from church organizations, as doubtless other Senators have, objecting to bringing their organizations, so far as social security is concerned, under the terms of the Social Security Act. Is there anything in the pending bill that will accomplish that result?

Mr. GLASS. I do not think this bill deals with that question at all. That is a legislative matter.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Utah that the intention is to amend the Social Security Act, and the House Committee on Appropriations is now engaged in hearings with that object in view.

Mr. KING. This bill does not touch that matter?

Mr. GEORGE. This bill does not touch that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 44, line 23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Tennessee Valley Authority", on page 48, line 5, after the name "Hiwassee Dam", to insert "Gilbertsville Dam, and for construction of a dam at or near Watts bar on the Tennessee River, Tenn., and for preliminary investigations of a site for a dam at or near Coulter Shoals on the Tennessee River, Tenn.", and in line 20, after the numerals "1940", to strike out "$21,797,000" and insert "$39,003,000", so as to read:

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "The Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933," approved May 18, 1933, as amended by the act approved August 31, 1935 (16 U. S. C. ch. 12a), including the continued construction of Pickwick Landing Dam, Guntersville Dam, Chickamauga Dam, Hiwassee Dam, Gilbertsville Dam, and for construction of a dam at or near Watts bar on the Tennessee River, Tenn., and for preliminary investigations of a site for a dam at or near Coulter Shoals on the Tennessee River, Tenn., and the acquisition of necessary land, the clearing of such land, relocation of highways, and the construction or purchase of transmission lines and other facilities, and all other necessary works authorized by such acts, and for printing and binding, law books, books of reference, newspapers, periodicals, purchase, maintenance, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles, rents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all necessary salaries and expenses connected with the organization, operation, and investigations of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for examination of estimates of appropriations and activities in the field, fiscal year 1940, $39,003,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment to the amendment, to strike out the words beginning on line 5, after the word "Gilbertsville," down to and including the words "Watts bar" on line 6, the language being "and for the construction of a dam at or near Watts bar."

Mr. President, this represents a point of issue which was discussed at length in the Committee on Appropriations. It represents a very definite issue which I wish to have submitted to the Senate.

When the relief bill was before the Senate those of us who were arguing for a reduction in the amount to be appropriated were told that we should not begin economies with relief, that there were other places. There is now presented what some of us think a very good place, which is not subject to the objections which were made in reference to the relief bill.

The Tennessee Valley Authority now has in the process of construction the dams on the list which appears in the pending bill on lines 3 and 4, page 48, which includes the Pickwick Landing Dam, the Guntersville Dam, the Chickamauga Dam, the Hiwassee Dam, and the Gilbertsville Dam. The item which I have asked to have stricken out is the authorization for the construction of a new dam.

In considering the item the committee divided, 13 to 11, and then only after most persuasive and effective efforts by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] who is sometimes down, but is never out. Twice during the committee's deliberations the Senator from Tennessee lost, but he always came back with another vote. The result was that our efforts to strike out this authorization for a new dam were defeated by a vote of 13 to 11, representing the vote of every Senator on the committee.

The votes of the 11 members of the committee whose views I am seeking to express were in accord with the vote in the House of Representatives. The House eliminated both the Gilbertsville Dam and the Watts bar dam. The motion which I have made is merely to eliminate the authorization for the construction of a new dam upon which work is not now being done, and it does seem that if we authorize the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam in addition to four other dams now being constructed, we are being extremely liberal.

Mr. President, the Tennessee Valley Authority has already spent over $220,000,000. The completion of the plans of the engineers of the Tennessee Valley Authority will involve the expenditure of $560,000,000, and it does seem that at least we might be a little less impatient, that we might wait a little, and not crowd construction of a new dam while we have under construction four great dams involving expenditure of $200,000,000.

The Gilbertsville Dam will involve a cost of $95,000,000 without the installation of power facilities. With the installation of power facilities the cost will run substantially over $100,000,000. Those Senators who have been here during the past few sessions know that the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam was authorized after vigorous battles, and I think I am not exaggerating when I say that it was only the persuasiveness of two great Senators from two great States, and the personal affection of many Senators, that secured the authorization of the Gilbertsville Dam. But we are just starting the Gilbertsville Dam, under the $95,000,000 program, which program has supporting it a great argument based on flood control. It is the dam furthest down the river. It is the dam which would protect Paducah.

The Watts bar dam is above Chattanooga. I do not know how many Senators have followed the Tennessee Valley program, but it covers a stretch of 650 miles, from the mouth of the river to the Norris Dam. It is proposed to build dams at intervals, resulting in the creation of lakes, so that by the use of the lakes it will be possible to pass from one section to another.

The dams now under construction, including the Gilbertsville Dam, will provide navigation facilities to a point above Chattanooga, to a point, I think, within 75 miles of Knoxville. We are not at this time raising directly the issue of the propriety of the construction of the Watts bar dam, but rather the propriety of engaging at this time in a new expenditure as to which there is no occasion for haste. If it is desired to build the Watts bar dam, we can wait a year and still complete it before the Gilbertsville Dam will be completed.

The Gilbertsville Dam will not be completed until 1945. The Watts bar dam, which will involve an additional expenditure of $38,000,000, will be of no value as a flood-control dam unless there is also constructed the dam at Coulter Shoals, which will mean another thirty to thirty-five million dollars, and for the construction of which no request was made at this time of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the Senator mean to indicate, by the statement he just made, that the Gilbertsville Dam had no flood-control value?

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no; I meant to indicate that it was the most important flood-control element in the entire system.

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct. The Senator was probably referring to the Watts bar dam.

Mr. ADAMS. As a matter of fact, in the flood of 1937 the dams already under construction lowered the height of the crest at Cairo four-tenths of a foot, according to the engineers who testified before us. It is said that if the Gilbertsville Dam is built it will result in lowering the height of the river more than 2 feet at Cairo, Ill. In other words, the Gilbertsville Dam will be of great benefit for flood control.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to call attention to what I thought was a mistake made by the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. I am much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. The Gilbertsville Dam, as the Senator says, is the greatest of all the dams in this region so far as flood control is concerned.

Mr. ADAMS. Unquestionably.

Mr. NORRIS. It has greater flood-control value than any other dam anywhere east of the Mississippi River.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Colorado said a moment ago that there was no occasion for haste in the construction of the Watts bar dam. The Senator recalls the testimony to the effect that the power companies, the cities of Tennessee, and the T. V. A., have all come to an agreement by which the power companies have sold their properties to the various cities. He also recalls the testimony of Mr. Klug that it was very essential that the Watts bar dam be begun this year in order to meet the requirements of the T. V. A.

and of the cities in Tennessee in furnishing power for their own needs. The Senator recalls that testimony. Mr. Krug testified that it was very necessary to build the Watts bar dam since the purchase of these companies by the T. V. A. and the associated cities.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, as I understand, the constitutional basis for the T. V. A. construction is twofold, in that it includes navigation and flood control. The courts have sustained the development of power and the sale of power as incident to navigation and flood control. I have very studiously avoided discussion or consideration of the power element, because it opens the way to so much misunderstanding, and I have wanted to discuss the project upon its constitutional basis of flood control and navigation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am interested in the statement just made by the Senator. May I say that I violated the Sabbath Day, and spent nearly all last night as well, in examining the more than 2,048 pages of testimony before the House committee, plus all the testimony taken by the Senate committee. It seems to me that one of the paramount purposes urged for this project—and I am very much opposed to it and think it is wholly unwarranted and may not be defended—is the development of power, and I read that the power which will be developed will cost $214 per kilowatt-hour as against a very small amount, $25, or $30, or $40, or $56 per kilowatt-hour in other sections of the United States. It seems to me that a reading of the record will show that the paramount purpose of the construction is the development of power, and that feature of it is being forgotten, covered up, by the contention that this project is designed primarily for flood-control purposes. It seems to me the primary purpose, as disclosed by the record, is the development of power.

Mr. ADAMS. I have assumed, I may say to the Senator from Utah, that the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Senate were following the constitutional course, and that the power was a beneficial but incidental element.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator that since I interrupted him before I have consulted the official reporter, and I find that I was right in my understanding of what the Senator said. What he said, as the reporter has it, and as I understood the Senator to say, was that the Gilbertsville Dam had no flood control value unless Watts bar dam was also constructed, and of course the Senator did not mean that.

Mr. ADAMS. That would have been an erroneous statement, and I hope the official reporter will correct it. I thank the Senator very much indeed for calling attention to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so I may ask for further information?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator refers to the question of constitutionality. In my judgment, the most vigorous legal battles which were ever waged against any institution in this country—and I think the Senator will agree with me—were with respect to the matters now under discussion. Many suits were brought in many courts; they have all gone to the Supreme Court, and have all been decided in favor of the T. V. A. up to this good hour. Is that not true?

Mr. ADAMS. I should say to the Senator that I have not had any concern with the question of constitutionality. I have merely said that I assumed that the basis of the whole program was the unquestioned constitutional basis of flood control and navigation, recognizing the decision of the Supreme Court that power might be developed and power might be sold as an incident thereto.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator kindly yield again?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Since we have cleared up the question of flood control in regard to Gilbertsville Dam, I wish to state to the Senator that it is my understanding that Watts bar dam—that is the dam the Senator proposes to strike out by his amendment—will have a flood-control value of 340,000 acre-feet of water.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood the Senator to say that there was nothing in it but power.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no; oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. There is controlled power of 340,000 acre-feet in the Watts bar dam.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. There would be that much less control if the Senator's amendment should prevail.

Mr. ADAMS. But the aggregate flood control provided for in all of the T. V. A. area is over 10,000,000 acre-feet, so that the Watts bar dam is a relatively small item.

Mr. NORRIS. Compared with the Gilbertsville Dam, it is small.

Mr. ADAMS. The Gilbertsville Dam has four and one-half million acre-feet.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator if the evidence does not also show with respect to power, that unless Watts bar is commenced now or within the immediate future, the probabilities are that the T. V. A. will not have sufficient power in its other dams to supply the power which soon will be demanded of the T. V. A.? In other words, is it not true that the evidence shows that demand for power in that valley will be so great that there will be a shortage of power before it can be met, unless Watts bar is commenced at the beginning of the next fiscal year?

Mr. ADAMS. I may remind the Senator that power development is not included under the plan for Gilbertsville Dam. Evidently it was not felt that power development is essential, or it would have been included. In the pending bill we are providing for the installation of additional units at Wheeler Dam and at one other dam to provide additional power.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is all true, except the implication that there never would be any power installed at Gilbertsville.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no; it is not felt that there is any emergency.

Mr. NORRIS. But with all the increased generating plants the Senator has mentioned, the T. V. A. estimates that there will be a shortage of power unless the Watts bar dam is commenced in the next fiscal year.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am not willing to have the matter determined on the power question. I want to keep away from it. My own mind has not in any way been determined by the power phase of the question. I have been studying it from the navigation and the flood-control aspects. The Senator from Nebraska is an expert on the power situation. I am not; but I have felt that we ought to consider the construction of the dams first from the standpoint of national financing.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the basis upon which we are talking, and that we should not go into vast expenditures which could be postponed.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator. But at the same time when a power program is commenced it would be folly to complete half of it and stop there. But if we eliminate the power end of it entirely, it is still true that the Watts bar dam will increase the navigability of the Tennessee River for a distance of 72 miles.

I do not think there is any dispute about that. It will provide a flood-control value of 340,000 acre-feet. So that if we confine the matter to navigation and flood control and say nothing about anything else, what I have stated will be the net result of putting in the Watts bar dam. It is conceded that it is going to provide some power. Is it not true from the evidence, I will ask the Senator, that if we omit this item from the pending bill the effect will be to discharge several thousand men from employment at the beginning of the next fiscal year? The Senator from Colorado said that three of the dams are on the point of completion. Is it not contemplated as part of the program to move the machinery and the men and the organizations from the dams when they are completed to Watts bar dam and go on with that work without the discharge of anybody, without laying aside any machinery, and putting the men and the machinery to work there instead of discharging them as would happen if the Watts bar construction were not provided for?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say that I have given some thought to that suggestion. There are three dams which I have in mind. The Guntersville Dam will be completed in March 1940. The Chickamauga Dam will be completed in September 1940. The Hiwassee Dam will be completed in January 1941. So that none of the crews on those dams are now available, but they would be available a year from now. We can wait a year without losing the benefit of those crews and the equipment now employed.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is wrong in his conclusion. While he is right with regard to his statement of the time when the dams will be completed, the great bulk of the machinery and the great body of men that are being employed, at least at one of those dams—Guntersville, for instance—will have to be discharged.

The machinery will lie idle, whereas if the Watts bar dam is built, the men and machinery can be put right to work. The finishing touches on these dams will not require the large number of men or the large amount of machinery which the Senator has probably anticipated in his statement.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, to go back to the initial contention which influences my mind, we have now authorized and are working upon projects involving an expenditure approaching $200,000,000, if we include the Gilbertsville Dam. The figure for Gilbertsville is $95,000,000. The Guntersville, Chickamauga, and Hiwassee Dams account for practically another $100,000,000. It seems to me that in the present state of the Public Treasury, with the growing public debt, and the fact that we are confronting a deficit estimated to be $4,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year, it is time for us to hesitate a little if there is no emergency requiring this work to be done. I cannot see any emergency in connection with the Watts bar dam.

One statement which the Senator from Nebraska made must be qualified. He said the Watts bar dam would provide navigation for some 70 miles. That would be true only if the Coulter Shoals dam were also constructed. That is, the two dams are required to provide a depth of 9 feet of water to Knoxville.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true; but it does not follow that there would be less than 72 miles of increased navigation if the Watts bar dam were completed. If I had a map before me I could show the situation very easily. Coulter Shoals, the only project left on the river to carry out the program of the T. V. A., is farther up the river toward Knoxville than is Watts bar. The lake which would be formed by the Watts bar dam would be at the end of the 72 miles of additional navigation; and while I did not claim that it would complete navigation to Knoxville—the Coulter Shoals dam in addition would be required to do that—72 miles would be added to the navigability of the river, and a 9-foot channel, as required by the law, would be provided for 72 miles.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in my own mind I have a very serious question, which I am not seeking to argue here, as to whether or not Congress is justified in spending $70,000,000 to provide navigation for the last 120 or 130 miles to Knoxville. I doubt whether that expense can be justified by any possible traffic which might originate in or be carried to that part of the river. The navigation will be inconsequential until the Gilbertsville Dam is built. The Gilbertsville Dam is essential if the Tennessee Valley is to be opened up for navigation from the Mississippi and from the Ohio. That is the basis both of flood control and navigation. There would not be sufficient depth for navigation in the 184 miles which would be covered by the lake behind the Gilbertsville Dam. At the present time there is no navigation of any consequence in the area from Knoxville practically to Chattanooga. The two dams, the Watts bar dam and the Coulter Shoals dam, would be necessary to complete the provision for navigation above that point. Under normal conditions the river is not susceptible to navigation at that point. The water levels above Chattanooga drop to not more than 1½ or 2 feet of water. Below that point there is a certain amount of navigation in any event. Much of the river has a depth of from 4½ to 5 or 6 feet.

We are answered by the T. V. A. authorities that the reason why they feel they must build a navigable channel to Knoxville is that Congress so provided. Of course, the direction of Congress is binding upon the T. V. A., but the direction of the Congress in 1935 is not binding upon the Congress in 1939. So, if the Congress in 1939 differs with the Congress of 1935 as to the desirability of the expenditure, it is not an answer to us to be told that in 1935 the Congress said, "You must go ahead and provide a 9-foot channel up to Knoxville." I seriously doubt whether the navigation and flood control to be obtained by these two dams would justify the cost.

Much has been said about the city of Chattanooga and its need for flood control. In the dams already constructed, over 2,000,000 acre-feet of storage is provided above Chattanooga on the Tennessee River and its tributaries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Even that storage capacity would not protect Chattanooga from floods. It can only be properly protected from floods by the building of the Watts bar dam. That is the evidence. That is the testimony of the engineers.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senator will recall that the engineers said that when the Norris Dam was constructed there was substantial protection; but, so far as the maximum imaginable flood is concerned, something additional would be required. What I am saying to the Senator is that over 2,000,000 acre-feet of storage is now provided above the city of Chattanooga, and it seems to me that the United States Government has done fairly well in making that provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. So far so good, but the answer to that is that the engineers testified that that is not sufficient for the protection of Chattanooga.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that there is not a city in the United States upon a river which has absolute and complete protection. I do not think the obligation rests upon the United States to pick out the city of Chattanooga and say that it shall have absolute and complete protection and that other cities may go their way.

In 1921 I came to Congress as a member of a committee. A flood had swept through the city in which I lived, drowning 400 or 500 persons, sweeping out several hundred houses, and almost destroying the business section of the city. I came to Congress asking for Federal help for my stricken community, and I was told that it was not the business of the Federal Government to furnish such help. My community proceeded to build its own flood-control provisions. We burdened ourselves with a debt almost as heavy as the cost of the flood itself. Prior to that time the city of Dayton had suffered from a great flood, and the local community built its own flood protection devices. The same engineer, Mr. Arthur E. Morgan, supervised the construction in Dayton and in my town. I am merely saying that I do not believe that the fact that there is not complete protection for a particular city is a basis for spending unlimited sums of money.

The total assessed valuation of the city of Chattanooga is $111,000,000. The flooded area embraces less than half of that valuation. We have already constructed dams which have cost approximately $100,000,000. We are asked to construct two more, which will cost approximately $80,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not recall when the dam at Pueblo, to which the Senator referred a moment ago, was constructed. However, my recollection is that it was prior to the adoption by Congress of the policy of regarding flood protection as a national obligation.

Mr. ADAMS. That was the point I mentioned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Congress has now embarked on that policy, and at the last session of Congress authorized some $350,000,000 for flood protection throughout the country. We realize that all these protective devices throughout the country cannot be built at one time. By a special act of Congress the Tennessee Valley basin has been treated separately for all the purposes defined to be carried out anywhere—flood protection, navigation, and power. I do not think it is quite accurate to use the situation at Pueblo, which undoubtedly would have been embraced in a national program for flood protection, as an argument against Chattanooga, or any particular point in the Tennessee Valley, or any other valley communities in which Congress now regards it as its duty to help protect against recurring floods.

Mr. ADAMS. I am saying to the Senator that up to this hour no other city in the United States has had as much done for its flood protection as has Chattanooga. That is part of my argument. Here is the Tennessee Valley, a remarkable valley along a great river. However, there are perhaps 10 other rivers in the United States greater than the Tennessee River, having cities along their banks. We are spending $550,000,000 on a program. I dare say that amount is twice what the Panama Canal cost. I believe that the people in other valleys, who are paying the bill, ought not to be crowded. If it were an emergency matter, that would be a different thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. I can agree with the Senator about some of his contentions. I am not partial to any one river as against another. I think, so far as the Federal Government can and has the obligation, it ought to treat all rivers fairly. But it so happens that because of an enormous expenditure during the World War in the Tennessee Valley that valley occupied a peculiar situation, which cannot be said of any other valley in the United States. I do not agree with the Senator when he says that this program is going to cost $550,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. I am merely relying on the estimates of the engineers.

Mr. BARKLEY. My recollection is that the chief engineer of the T. V. A. testified that the entire program in the Tennessee Valley, when completed, would cost about $420,000,000, of which $220,000,000 have already been expended.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me interrupt the Senator right there to say that the last Budget estimate contains figures showing that the Tennessee Valley program would involve an expenditure of $481,000,000, which does not include $80,000,000 of tributary work not covered by the Budget figures. So I am talking by the book.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I merely wish to say that Chattanooga itself is expending and has expended several million dollars in order to secure flood control. While these very dams will be of great service to Chattanooga, and to river navigation also, yet they will not be sufficient absolutely to insure Chattanooga against the kind of floods which occurred in 1867 and on several occasions since. So the city proposes, at its own expense, to spend several million dollars for the building of dikes and bypass channels by which the water may be better controlled.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator think it is an unusually considerate thing for a community to spend some of its own money in order to protect its own people and their property?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Undoubtedly not, but I wanted to give Chattanooga that benefit and credit because it seemed to be assumed that Chattanooga was sitting down with its hands folded and waiting for "George to do it."

Mr. ADAMS. I think they are asking us to add 20 dams to what they are doing. We have already, as I have said to the Senate, provided available controllable storage of 2,000,000 acre-feet above Chattanooga, which has reduced the hazard from flood there very greatly.

It is possible, of course, to imagine floods which will sweep over any protection that may be provided. There was a time some 6,000 years ago when there was nothing above the water.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I think the Senator is in error about that, for, as I remember, there was an ark which was always above the water.

Mr. ADAMS. That was only after the water had receded, when the ark was left; that is, the ark was deposited upon a high point by the waters, which could not have happened if the waters had not been there.

Mr. McKELLAR. The ark was above the water at any rate, and we are happy for that.

If the Senator from Colorado will yield to me further, not only is what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] says about Chattanooga absolutely true but another dam which has been built by private interests there has helped in the flood-control situation to some extent at the same time.

Mr. ADAMS. That dam is below Chattanooga.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true; but it has helped in the flood-control situation just the same.

Mr. ADAMS. And it is a privately owned dam for power purposes with locks.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a privately owned dam.

Mr. ADAMS. While we are talking about navigation, let me say that the city of Knoxville, to which we are asked to provide navigation, is something over 800 feet above sea level. Paducah, the center of the Gilbertsville activities, is in the neighborhood of 300 feet above sea level. So it is proposed, by locks, to lift the traffic 550 feet. That is the height to which traffic going from Paducah to Knoxville must be raised. In other words, it is necessary to have tremendously expensive locks. If it were not for the water that it is necessary to hold for navigation, there would not be any difficulty about flood control. The difficulty is that we have a multipurpose program. We have navigation which requires that water be kept behind dams to fill up locks so as to provide a 9-foot channel. Then, in order to maintain the power, it is necessary to have water over and above that necessary for navigation requirements to run through the sluices and turn the wheels. So it is necessary practically to have a second dam. Then, if it is going to have any flood-control qualities, it is necessary to have, in contemplation, a third dam above the second, the third dam to be empty. In other words, there is certain economy of costs in the multiple use, but if it was merely a question of flood control at Chattanooga the dams which have been constructed would dry the river at Chattanooga.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The evidence shows, as I am quite sure the Senator will recall, that when this project of 10 dams is completed, which was specifically authorized by the act of 1935—

Mr. ADAMS. No; when the Senator says the water-power dams were specifically authorized, will he permit me to differ with him?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator, of course, can differ. They were not specifically authorized by name but were specifically authorized just the same. There are four dams now completed—two at Muscle Shoals, the Wilson Dam and the Wheeler Dam.

Mr. ADAMS. I will give the Senator the names accurately. They are the Wilson Dam, the Norris Dam, the Wheeler Dam, and the Pickwick Dam.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; four dams. From those four dams there will be a return this year of six and a half million dollars, and when the 10 dams are put into operation there will be a return to the Government of upward of $20,000,000 a year. So, even if they do cost $481,000,000, as the experts testify they will cost, $20,000,000 of income from those dams will absolutely justify the cost in every respect. Does the Senator know of any other project undertaken by the Government that pays an income of $20,000,000 by the building of 10 dams at a cost of $481,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Tennessee does not agree with the Tennessee Valley Authority. The Tennessee Valley Authority said that income would go into the treasury of the Tennessee Valley Authority and none of it would come to the United States. There is not one nickel of this revenue that comes into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. It reduces the appropriation exactly that much.

Mr. ADAMS. It has not had that effect.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, that matter is entirely within the hands of Congress. The Congress can have that income paid into the Treasury at any time it so desires. If the Senator from Colorado will offer an amendment to that effect, I do not see any reason why it should not be adopted. Let the money go into the Treasury. The Treasury owns it in any event. The Treasury will have from this project when the 10 dams are completed, if they are completed in accordance with the recommendations of the engineers of the T. V. A., an income from the 10 dams of more than $20,000,000 a year. There is no other project in the entire country, Boulder Dam or any other dam, that will bring such splendid returns to the Government of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish I were converted to that view. It is a picture which I had not obtained from the engineers.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator did not read that part of the testimony carefully.

Mr. ADAMS. I read the testimony, but I did not see that part of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado permit an interruption there?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator from Tennessee is in error. Instead of $20,000,000, when all these dams are completed, the estimate is that the returns from the sale of power will be $25,000,000 a year, and that in 30 years it will pay not only for navigation but for flood control and everything else. It is not fair to assume that the money received does not benefit the Treasury. While it is not being paid into the Treasury of the United States, it goes into the building of the project and makes the appropriation that much less. However, when the plan is carried out it is contemplated that all the money derived from the sale of power will go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I suggest that one of the difficulties that some of us have is that the Tennessee Valley Authority has great powers in and of itself? It is controlled by a triumvirate on which there is very little restraint. It has in mind 10 dams; on the plat which has been filed there are 17 additional dams outlined on tributaries and 2 or 3 large dams on other tributaries. So they would have the money which has been referred to available for these purposes, and there would be a long time before any of it would go into the Treasury of the United States. We have been appropriating, as the Senator knows, practically $40,000,000 a year. This year the committee was willing to go along with the Senator from Tennessee and appropriate $39,000,000 to carry on these activities, but the Senator is insistent that we add a new dam, so that we will be constructing not four dams but five.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point, so that we may clear up the question of income?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will also clear up another question which the Senator has just raised. I read from the testimony of Mr. Krug, chief power engineer of the T. V. A., on page 66 of the hearings:

This study shows that the power revenues from the proposed 10-dam system—

That is, the 10-dam system, all on the main river—will approximate $20,250,000, which will cover all of the direct power costs and the common cost fairly apportionable to power, including 3-percent interest, depreciation, and all other items of operating cost, and leave a margin of more than $3,000,000, which will be available for flood-control and navigation costs. If speculative costs are eliminated from consideration, such as interest and workmen's compensation, power revenues from the 10-dam system will return over $15,000,000 annually to the Federal Government to apply as liquidation of the investment.

It is perfectly clear.

Mr. ADAMS. I presume the Senator has no objection to an amendment which would provide that these revenues should go into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not vote against such an amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ADAMS. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. So that the silence of anyone may not be taken as approving such an amendment, I desire to be recorded as opposed to it at the present time. In the first place, it would be useless. The money that comes from the sale of power goes into building dams, and we would not gain anything by putting it in the Treasury and taking it out again. If that were done, the appropriation would have to be larger, and it would frighten more people than it does now. The result would be that we should be taking the money out of one pocket and putting it in another, with absolutely no change so far as the ultimate results are concerned. Of course, however, when the dams are completed, the money properly will go to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. I am sorry the two Senators do not agree about this matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not disagreeing at all. If the Senator will yield, I think we can clear up the matter in a moment.

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will remember that last year, when all kinds of charges of dishonesty and corruption were hurled against the T. V. A., a committee was appointed to examine into the affairs of the T. V. A. The committee went down there and has examined every item connected with the T. V. A.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator speaks of charges. The charges were hurled by a member of the Tennessee Valley Authority. They were not hurled on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. They were hurled around on the floor of the Senate, too, if the Senator will recall. There were a number of them. I want to say that when a committee of this body went down to the region affected, it found the charges absolutely without foundation in fact; and the committee has given the T. V. A. a clean bill of health. If there had been any question regarding the honesty of the use of these moneys, I should think the Senator's proposed amendment was all right; but as it is now, I do not see any use of adopting such an amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, my amendment has absolutely no relationship at all to the character of the administration of the T. V. A. Not one word has been said by me upon that basis, and no such thought has been in my mind. I have been trying to argue to the committee and to the Senate that this is a time when we should consider costs; that an expenditure is proposed here which is not necessary, which is not emergent; and that we have already been liberal beyond all conception in the appropriations we have made. The Senator from Tennessee was one of those who said to me, when we discussed the relief measure, "Let us find some other place than relief to economize." Now, when we suggest this place, we are told that this is not the place to economize. That is the trouble in trying occasionally to battle for economy: We are all in favor of economy as a matter of principle, but we oppose every single effort to apply the principle.

Mr. President, there are many details in this situation. I do not want to burden those who are here more than I have. The matter has been presented. I think the Senate owes it to itself, and I think it owes it to the country, to concur with the House at least to the extent of eliminating the authorization of new construction which in and of itself involves an additional authorization. Finally, as I endeavored to say in talking about the relief measure the other day, I think the United States ought to be willing at least to experiment with economy. That is all I have asked—that we make some effort to experiment with economy.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. The able Senator from Colorado is a student of public matters, and is thoroughly familiar with this project. Is it his opinion that the construction at Gilbertsville is a flood-control, power, or navigation development?

Mr. ADAMS. The virtuous part of it is flood control. That is the real virtue of it. There is need for flood control to protect the Mississippi River Valley. The Gilbertsville Dam may be excessive in its cost, but it has a genuine function in flood protection. Personally, I do not think much of navigation there. I do not think any substantial traffic will ever be developed on the Tennessee River. As a matter of fact, tables of traffic on the Tennessee River for various years have been furnished us, showing considerable traffic in the past year and the year before; but that traffic consisted in hauling cement, sand, and gravel principally to be used in the construction of these dams. As a matter of fact, up to 83 percent of the traffic on the river consisted of materials of that character, and the traffic on the river in 1937 was less than the traffic on the river 20 years ago.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the judgment of the able Senator that the major use of Gilbertsville Dam would be for flood control?

Mr. ADAMS. That is the reason why I should be willing to give it consideration.

Mr. McNARY. That is the reason why I have given sympathetic consideration to it. What is the head? What power can be developed at Gilbertsville? Did that come out in the testimony?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; it is in the record of hearings. The immediate plan, however, provides for the construction of a dam available for the installation of power, but does not provide for power installation at the time.

Mr. McNARY. What is the head at Gilbertsville? What is the power which can be developed there? I do not want to put the Senator to the necessity of looking up the matter in the hearings.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it is about 100,000 kilowatts.

Mr. McNARY. That is not much of a power plant, as I view it from developments in the West.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it is not so great a power-producing plant as other dams.

Mr. McNARY. Let me ask the very patient Senator from Colorado another question. It pertains to Watts bar. Does that project contemplate the removal of a volume of sand in the center of the stream of the Tennessee River?

Mr. ADAMS. No; that refers to the location. It is the Watts bar dam. Evidently there is a bar in the river there, and that is the location where the dam is to be built.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is the name of the particular place on the Tennessee River in Roane County, Tenn., where the dam will be built.

Mr. ADAMS. I may add a statement, which ought to be made, I will say to the Senator from Oregon. Practically all of these dams involve dredging to maintain the channel; in other words, to clear the channel largely of rocks in order to get the 9-foot depth; that is, in and of itself the dam will not provide all of the depth, but in part a channel must be cut out.

Mr. McNARY. What effect will the structure at Gilbertsville have upon the floodwaters of the lower Mississippi River?

Mr. ADAMS. There is a storage capacity in the Gilbertsville Dam—which is called controlled storage—of 4,500,000 acre-feet. I will say in fairness that Representative May, of the House, wrote me a letter in which he said that if the Gilbertsville Dam had been in existence at the time of the 1937 flood Cairo would have been flooded. The explanation was that the Tennessee Valley Basin furnished a place for the waters of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to back up, and that the building of the dam would have prevented enough water from backing up into that basin to have really flooded Cairo. That is not the understanding we get from the engineers, however.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. Just a minute. In reading the testimony given before the House and Senate committees I drew the inference that the complete construction of Gilbertsville Dam and the other facilities on the Tennessee River would lower the floodwaters of the Mississippi River about three and a half feet—not Gilbertsville, but the completion of the whole project—which, supplemented by the levees, would give complete control of the flood conditions that obtain there from year to year. Is that the inference the able Senator has drawn from reading and the hearing the testimony?

Mr. ADAMS. I think that is the maximum hope. Of course, the Senator from Oregon knows that all these things depend upon the rains. In other words, if the Tennessee watershed were heavily flooded with rains, we should have a different situation than if the rains were in the Ohio watershed and not in the Tennessee watershed. We might have floods as a result of rains in the Ohio and Cumberland watersheds and not as a result of rains in the Tennessee Valley, in which event dams in the Tennessee Valley would not be helpful.

Mr. McNARY. May I make a very brief observation in the time of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. I took a great deal of interest in working out, or assisting in working out, before the Senate Commerce Committee a national plan of flood control which covered a period of a number of years.

I do not want to look with one eye on any section of the country. In the great western region, where there are national forests and public domain and high mountains, flood control is an essential obligation of the Government, in its obligation to save private property from destruction. I have always supported steps toward flood control, wherever they were to be made. I entertain no sectional view whatsoever. Probably plenty of power is developed in the Tennessee Valley for present purposes. If this is purely a flood-control project, as I think it is, in my opinion it is worthy, and should receive support of the Congress. That being the view I entertain, is there anything in the record which should cause me to change my view on that subject?

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is speaking of the Gilbertsville Dam?

Mr. McNARY. I am speaking of the Gilbertsville Dam.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, the Senator knows that the motion I made leaves the Gilbertsville Dam in the bill and seeks to take out the authorization for the construction of a dam 420 miles up the river.

Mr. McNARY. The motion was filed today?

Mr. ADAMS. I have merely made an oral motion.

Mr. McNARY. I did not hear it on account of the confusion. But the item which was defeated in the House contained the Senator's proposal as well as the Gilbertsville Dam proposal?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Is the Senator supporting the Gilbertsville Dam proposal, and directing his opposition to another part of the program?

Mr. ADAMS. I may answer in this way, that if the Watts bar dam is eliminated I shall be very glad to support the Gilbertsville Dam. If there is insistence on tying the Watts bar to the Gilbertsville, I shall probably vote against both.

Mr. McNARY. What is the Watts bar proposal?

Mr. ADAMS. It involves $38,000,000 for the construction of a new dam, of which four and a half million dollars would be included in the appropriation in the pending bill, commitment being made, by the commencement of construction, to continue it, and that being constructed, we would become obligated to construct the Coulter Shoals Dam, which would involve another $30,000,000, to follow immediately.

Mr. McNARY. What reduction would occur in the amount added by the amendment if we accepted the Gilbertsville Dam proposal and omitted the other?

Mr. ADAMS. Four and a half million dollars, as to this immediate appropriation. I do not mean that that is the exact figure, but that is the approximate figure.

Mr. McNARY. It would lessen the appropriation in the pending bill by four and a half million dollars?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes. The House appropriated $21,000,000. Our committee has increased that to $39,000,000. My amendment would result in reducing the $39,000,000 by four and a half million dollars, and would leave an appropriation of thirty-four and a half million.

Mr. McNARY. Is the view of the Senator from Colorado entertained by the minority of the committee?

Mr. ADAMS. It is entertained by 11 members of the committee. Thirteen supported the other view.

Mr. McNARY. All of those who support the amendment of the Senator support the Gilbertsville Dam if we eliminate the Watts bar proposal?

Mr. ADAMS. No; there are some who would be against the Gilbertsville Dam project in either event. Six votes were cast in the committee against the Gilbertsville Dam project.

Mr. McNARY. I should be very happy if my distinguished friend would address himself to his amendment, so that I might be able to differentiate between what he has in mind and what the text of the bill provides.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator a while ago referred to a letter written to him by one of the members of the Kentucky delegation in the House of Representatives, one who has always opposed this entire project, in which letter he stated that if the dam at Gilbertsville had been constructed and had been in existence in 1937, Cairo would have been flooded, for, as it is now, I gather the inference is, instead of the water of the Tennessee River flowing downhill, it flows uphill, because the water in the Ohio River is so high that the Tennessee River water cannot get out in it, and, because of its velocity, the water in the Ohio River forces the Tennessee River to flow upstream. I know that that is not so.

Mr. ADAMS. I have always accepted the judgment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the Senator quoted the opinion of a Member of the House, expressed in a letter to him.

The truth is that in 1937 the rainfall in the Tennessee Valley, for the 4 or 5 weeks prior to flood stage in the Ohio River, was the greatest rainfall that has occurred in many years. I happen to know that the water of the Tennessee did flow out into the Ohio, which meant that the water of the Ohio was not high enough to retard the flow of the Tennessee River.

It was stated by T. V. A. engineers, and concurred in by some of the Army engineers at the time, that even with the incompleteness of the Tennessee River improvements, the stage of the water at Cairo was affected to the extent of between 6 inches and a foot. Of course, 6 inches to a foot more of water at Cairo would have meant that Cairo would have been flooded. The completion of the whole Tennessee River project would affect the flood stage at Cairo by about three and a half feet, and the completion of the Gilbertsville Dam alone, which is the largest dam in the river, and one of the largest in the country, would affect the stage of the water at Cairo by about 2 feet.

I do not desire to enter into an argument over the Gilbertsville Dam, which is not involved in the Senator's motion; but I did not want the Senator to quote someone who is constitutionally and congenitally opposed to the entire Tennessee Valley project in approval of the idea that the water in the Ohio River at flood stage is so high that it forces the Tennessee River to run upstream. It does not happen that way.

Mr. ADAMS. I refrained from quoting some resolutions which have come to me in the last day or two from various bodies in western Kentucky opposing the appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Some of them coal operators' associations, I suppose.

Mr. ADAMS. They were from different county organizations. Some were from the coal area, some from luncheon clubs. I have always been one of the humble and devout followers of the senior Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I always appreciate the Senator's devoutness, and especially his humility.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I am quite interested in the question now being discussed, in view of the fact that Cairo, Ill., is involved. I should like to have the distinguished Senator from Colorado tell the Senate just what the engineers have said with respect to the lowering of the floodwaters at Cairo, Ill., in the event the Gilbertsville Dam is completed.

Mr. ADAMS. My recollection is that it would result in a lowering of from 2 feet to perhaps $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet, at the extreme. That is to say, the present structure on the Tennessee River lowered the flood level four-tenths of a foot. That was their estimate of what happened in 1937, with the existing structure, and that would be increased by the Gilbertsville Dam to probably 2 feet more, and perhaps there would be some addition by the other structures.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator for that information. If I may be pardoned for asking one more question along the same line, with respect to the dam which is now being proposed at Watts bar, is there any testimony in the hearings before the Senator's committee which discloses what effect the construction of that dam may have upon the floodwaters at Cairo, Ill.?

Mr. ADAMS. Necessarily it would have a very small effect. In the first place, it is from 420 to 500 miles above Cairo, and the controlled storage is 340,000 acre-feet at the maximum. That necessarily spreads itself out.

I will give an illustration from the Arkansas River, with which I am familiar. There was a flood in my community in which something over 100,000 second-feet of water were passing. Wichita is perhaps the same distance below us that Cairo is below Watts bar. When the flood reached there, there were only about 7,500 second-feet, on account of friction and retardation. So the storage at that high point does not have a substantial effect.

Mr. LUCAS. As a result of the construction of all these dams there is a natural decrease in the water stage at places along the Ohio or Mississippi Rivers above the dams.

Mr. ADAMS. Necessarily. Of course, there is another consideration, namely, that the water must be let out some time, and it might have the effect of increasing the level. That is, we cannot control absolutely the conditions at Cairo by controlling conditions 500 miles up the stream.

Mr. LUCAS. There is one other question I should like to ask the distinguished Senator. In the earlier part of his remarks he discussed 17 other dams which are now contemplated by the T. V. A. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask whether or not the construction of the Pickwick Landing Dam, the Guntersville Dam, the Chickamauga Dam, the Hiwassee Dam, and the Gilbertsville Dam is in any way dependent upon the remaining 17 dams.

Mr. ADAMS. Not at all. The other 17 dams are upon tributary streams, with the view of making the tributaries available for navigation. They are navigation dams upon tributaries. There are three larger dams which are under consideration.

Mr. President, I have concluded what I had to say. I am very much concerned in the attitude of the Senate. I think the Senate has here an opportunity to indicate its concurrence with the effort which the House is making toward economy. I think here is a chance for economy without cost to the project, without cost to any individual. There is no humanitarian aspect involved. It is a proposal merely that we do not in this instance engage ourselves upon a program of spending $38,000,000 upon a project which, in my opinion, can just as well be postponed.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to proceed now?

Mr. NORRIS. Have I been recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Both Senators addressed the Chair at the same time.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was recognized, but the Senator from Nebraska may proceed with his remarks.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I view this question, and as I have always viewed it, it is entirely a national problem. No local phase of it appeals to me as being predominant, although localities will be benefited by any program carried out. I wish to discuss the question from a national point of view. I should like to provide for the damming of every interstate stream in the United States, first and primarily to control floodwaters and, as a constitutional peg, to improve navigation, and then to develop all the power that can be developed consistent with flood control and navigation. Power is a secondary consideration. As I see it, it comes into the picture entirely because in constructing a project to control navigation we necessarily make it possible in many cases—not in all, but in many cases—to generate and produce electric power, and it seems to me it would be an economic sin if we did not avail ourselves of that part of the program which would bring in revenue but, more than that, would reduce the cost of electricity used in the homes of our people anywhere within transmission distance of the generating plant.

Mr. President, it happens in this particular case, and it has been true ever since the depression while we have been trying to help solve the problem of unemployment, that, as I see it, one of the greatest means of providing employment for our people has been provided by the Tennessee Valley Authority. We have all agreed that we wanted to employ our unemployed to produce something that would be of lasting benefit. In that way we would prevent the putting of the unemployed on the dole.

I asked the Senator from Colorado whether, if his amendment prevailed and Watts bar dam were stricken out of the pending measure, it would not result in throwing out of employment several hundred thousand persons who would otherwise be employed and would be producing something of value. On that question I wish to read a telegram which comes from Mr. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, sent from Miami, Fla., February 10, 1939:

Executive council, American Federation of Labor, is of the opinion that any restriction of public construction projects such as dams will serve to aggravate the serious unemployment situation now prevailing throughout the Nation. For that reason the executive council, now meeting in Miami, directs me to appeal to you to restore amount of appropriation approved in Budget—restore the amount of appropriation approved in Budget estimates for construction of dams in independent office bill. I urge you to do this in order to promote employment opportunities.

That is just what is in this amendment—

WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

Anticipating this debate, and preparatory to what I am going to say, I asked for a map of the Tennessee Valley showing all these dams. It is in preparation, but it is not ready for me, and I shall have to call upon Senators' imagination to enable them to understand the picture of what is before us, what is involved, and I think when I get through it will be demonstrated that the telegram sent by President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, shows what is needed to be done.

The law provides—and we passed the law—for making the Tennessee River navigable from its mouth to Knoxville, a distance of over 600 miles, with a depth of 9 feet. That is the object of the law so far as navigation is concerned.

We start in with the first dam, the largest of all, which has been discussed.

Then we come up to the next one, which, in round figures, is about 200 miles up the river. Then we come to the third one, Wilson Dam, and then to the fourth one, Wheeler Dam. Then we come to Guntersville Dam, then to a private dam, Hales bar dam, built and owned by private individuals. We come next to Chickamauga Dam, then to Watts bar dam, and then one more dam, Coulter Shoals Dam, after Watts bar. When those dams are completed the work contemplated by the law we passed will have been completed. That makes seven or eight dams. Norris Dam was built on a tributary. Hiwassee Dam is being constructed on a tributary. The primary object of those dams is to control the floods of the tributaries, and any competent engineer will say that in order to control floods on a tributary it is necessary to go to the tributary to do it. Very often it is true that the only place where suitable reservoirs can be provided is where those tributaries come down through the mountains, and the floods cannot be controlled unless some reservoirs are provided in which to hold back the water. Of course, it is necessary to build dams in front of the reservoirs.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I simply want to refer to the telegram sent by President Green. I think Mr. Green labored under the misapprehension that the amendment would stop some construction work. The amendment which is now under consideration would not result in the laying off of a single man. All of the men at work would be continued at work. It is merely a question whether or not additional people would be put to work on the Watts bar dam. I think President Green had the idea that the amendment involved the cessation of work.

Mr. NORRIS. I think Mr. Green had a correct idea of what it means, and I think I shall be able to demonstrate that if the construction of Watts bar dam is prevented it will result in the discharging of thousands of men from employment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Was I correct in understanding the Senator from Nebraska to say that, by eliminating an item of $17,000,000, 200,000 men would be thrown out of work?

Mr. NORRIS. No. Did I say that?

Mr. TAFT. That is what I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not mean that.

Mr. TAFT. I understood the Senator to say several hundred thousand.

Mr. NORRIS. I meant several thousand men. No; it would not put 200,000 men out of work, and I thank the Senator from Ohio for calling my attention to the error I made, if I said that.

That reminds me that at the time Norris Dam was in the peak of construction the T. V. A. had on the pay roll, in round numbers, 20,000 men. The T. V. A. officials, with this law before them, laid out a plan by which they could consecutively build these dams and carry out the law. They put the engineers and the machinery to work on the Norris Dam, with the idea that when that dam was finished they could move the men and machinery to another dam of a similar kind. They cannot always do that in the construction of these dams. They did it, as I said, in the case of the Norris Dam. Some of the same machinery that was operating on Norris Dam is now operating on Hiwassee Dam. Conditions at both dams were alike, only that Hiwassee was much smaller than Norris. The dam at Guntersville is like the dam that is going to be built at Watts bar. It is a dam over the main stream.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that a very large number of those employed at Pickwick Landing Dam have now been moved to Gilbertsville Dam.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Thus keeping them in employment.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. And still it is said that the Pickwick Landing Dam is not finished because it is provided for in this appropriation. Technically that is true. But the men and machinery which were there in large numbers have all disappeared from Pickwick Landing Dam. The same thing is true with respect to Guntersville Dam. There are merely a few little odds and ends of work that have to be carried on to complete that dam. To a great extent the same thing is true of the dam at Chickamauga. If this provision stays in the bill, as I hope it will, and if the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is defeated, it will result in men being moved from Guntersville to Watts bar, and machinery worth hundreds of thousands of dollars being moved to Watts bar, and continuing to work, in order to economize the cost of this great improvement on the Tennessee River. The Tennessee River is the only river in the United States where Congress has ever undertaken in a systematic manner to develop an entire stream with the view of getting the maximum amount of navigation, the maximum amount of flood control, and the maximum amount of power consistent with flood control and navigation. I think it is perfectly clear that a great many men would be discharged and a great amount of machinery would be taken out of use if the Senator's amendment should prevail.

That is not all. In addition, the organization which the T. V. A. has set up would be disrupted. Engineers would be hunting other jobs. It would mean their discharge. It would mean breaking up the organization which is now so effective. The superintendent of one of the great dams told me he thought he had the best organization he had ever worked with in his life. He said they were better men, and they did better work, and the employees were better satisfied, than those on any dam on which he had ever worked under private control. When estimates are made by private corporations they are made on the basis of erecting shacks to house the men. The idea is to complete the work with just as little expense as possible. Private corporations do not provide for their employees any such facilities as the T. V. A. has provided in connection with all its dams. The T. V. A. has provided modern facilities to give the men the best there is while they are working. As the engineer to whom I have referred said to me, such a policy pays financially. He said, "I now have a better organization than any other over which I ever presided. Even under the wages and hours which the T. V. A. has put into effect, I get better work and more of it than with any private concern for which I ever worked." I think there is no question about that.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator stated a moment ago that the project to which he referred would provide employment for some 3,000 unemployed men. Can the Senator tell me, when the dam is erected and power is furnished, how many men producing coal will be displaced, how many men working on the railroads hauling the coal will be displaced, and how many others in other industries will be displaced?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not know how many men are involved, but I state it as my judgment that employment will be increased instead of being reduced. According to my view, the man who says, "We want to stop water-power production because its product takes the place of coal" has not analyzed the question at all. There will be more use for coal when the country is developed by hydroelectric power than there was before it was developed. That condition has been true in all the history of the world. When new things spring up, and new enterprises are started, instead of men being discharged from the coal fields, more men will be employed.

I had the matter put to me in connection with a project in my own State. A number of years ago the Reclamation Service put in an improvement on a river in the northwestern part of the State. That beautiful valley, of course, had been there for years, and had been inhabited for years. Water power was introduced. The Reclamation Service put in a reclamation project, and got water on to the land. I obtained figures from the railroad which had always served that territory. The figures showed that the railroad had hauled hundreds of cars annually since the improvement, whereas they had hauled only a few cars before the improvement. Hardware men and furniture men sent in more than 11 times as much as they did before. All kinds of industries came with the improvement.

The Tennessee Valley will blossom as the rose when we develop the power which God put in the streams for the people. The man who stands back and says "I am opposed to the self-binder on the farm because it put out of business the men who formerly made cradles" does not realize that he is living in a world of progress. That condition is true of everything in life. We ought not to put our foot down on an improvement which will develop the natural resources of the country.

The Senator from Illinois has left the Chamber. I wish he were present. He made inquiry as to the flood-control value of these projects. The flood-control value of Watts bar dam is 340,000 acre-feet of water. It will hold back that much water from the Ohio and from the Mississippi. That much water on the peak of a flood might mean the destruction of a city. That much water on the peak of a flood at New Orleans might mean the destruction of valuable property there. Every town on the Ohio River below the mouth of the Tennessee, and every city, every farm, and every industry on the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Ohio River, is interested in the improvement of the Tennessee valley according to the law which we have enacted. The Watts bar dam will hold 340,000 acre-feet. Every one of the dams built before the act was passed, with the exception of the Wilson Dam, in which no flood-control provision was made, has a very great flood-control value.

As has been said, the greatest of all is the Gilbertsville Dam. Before the construction of Gilbertsville Dam was begun, engineers estimated that if it had not been for the storage of water behind Norris Dam, away up on the Clinch River, a tributary of the Tennessee, Cairo, Ill., more than 600 miles below, would have been destroyed as a result of the great rains of 1937. Only a few inches more would have been necessary to cover the top of the levee and destroy one of the cities of the United States.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. I am very curious about the potential storage for flood-control purposes at the Gilbertsville Dam. If the river were permitted to remain at the normal river flow, and a flood were threatened, how much water, in acre-feet, could be stored behind the Gilbertsville Dam?

Mr. NORRIS. Something over 4,000,000 acre-feet. I refer to the usable capacity. The Gilbertsville Reservoir will hold about 7,000,000 acre-feet of water. However, that is not all usable capacity.

Mr. BONE. I mean above the normal river flow.

Mr. NORRIS. Something over 4,000,000 acre-feet.

Mr. BONE. Of course, anyone familiar with the problem of floods knows that that is an enormous quantity of water.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course.

Mr. BONE. It would be sufficient to take off the crest of a flood below.

Mr. NORRIS. Absolutely so. However, the amendment under consideration applies only to Watts bar dam. The flood-control value is 340,000 acre-feet. That means 340,000 acres of land covered with water 1 foot deep. As the Senator said, that protection would take off the crest of almost any flood. Considering all 11 of the dams on this one river together, their flood-control value to a very great extent will control the floods of the Mississippi River. They will control the floods on the Ohio River from the mouth of the Tennessee down.

I think I ought to say something about the navigation facilities and values of this dam. The law provides that we shall make the Tennessee River navigable to a depth of 9 feet from its mouth to Knoxville. The Watts bar dam alone will add 72 miles to the navigability of the Tennessee River. As a power facility, as I remember, it will generate about 150,000 kilowatts of power. As I said awhile ago, a plan has been laid out by the T. V. A. If we take this block out of the plan, we may frustrate the whole thing. The Tennessee Valley Authority has estimates, which are as accurate as anybody can make, as to the use of power in the Tennessee Valley, what the demand will be, and how it will increase. If the Watts bar dam is not started in the next fiscal year, the danger is that there will be a shortage of power. If the T. V. A. should contract all the power it now has with the idea of taking on the increase as it comes, it would be unable to fulfill those contracts in many instances. The T. V. A. has estimated the power which would be produced at the Watts bar dam and the power which would be produced at the next dam and has made its calculations in connection with the sale of power accordingly. We shall frustrate that program if we knock the Watts bar dam out of the bill, just as surely as the sun rises. Not only will men be discharged, not only will the organization be disrupted, not only will it be made impossible to use the machinery, which will go to waste and decay, but there will be much more damage in money than the delay would indicate.

Mr. President, if this program shall be interfered with, if it shall be torn asunder—and this amendment would do that, to a great extent—then the whole T. V. A. plan will be more expensive; the cost of carrying out the T. V. A. program will be increased by several million dollars. There is no economy in that kind of proceeding; it is the worst kind of economy to get half way across a stream and then stop and go back or try to stay there and stem the tide. This amendment would prevent human progress; it would cost the Federal Government several million dollars in damages and delay.

Who is behind it? Who wants it? The power interests are the ones who want it. They are the ones who do not want this development carried on. They fought the T. V. A. from its very birth; they are fighting now to destroy it. The adoption of this amendment will be a step in bringing about its destruction and would be hailed throughout the United States as a great victory for the private power interests of America. I do not believe that we want to do that; I do not believe the Government of the United States wants to countenance a bad business practice of that kind by destroying the T. V. A. It seems to me that good business judgment demands that we should go ahead. If we do not go ahead, we have got to provide by some other means for the unemployment that will be caused. In my judgment, if when we started to deal with the unemployment problem we had devised a national plan of developing our natural streams for navigation, for flood control, and for power on a grand scale, we would have done more to bring benefit to the people and employment to the unemployed, than we have done in the slipshod way that we have gone about it. It would be simply suicidal, having started on this plan, now to stop and now discharge the men who have been working on the project and say to those in charge, "Put the machinery in sheds; take it away; let it rust and decay; we are not going to exercise good business judgment." That would be ruinous, in great degree, to the whole program.

Mr. President, we have already—and I refer to this because the Senator from Colorado, who, I am sorry is not in the Chamber at the moment, referred to it in his statement—commenced this dam. I understood the Senator from Colorado to say that it had not been commenced. Authorization for this dam, however, was contained in the last appropriation bill. We provided in that bill for all the necessary engineering work to be done in order to get ready to start this dam and it has all been done. It has been done with the money Congress appropriated. That phase of the work has been finished; the exact location of the dam has been fixed and the borings for the foundations have been made. Everything is ready to start on the dam, because we authorized it a year ago in the appropriation bill then passed, and we provided the money with which to do it. So it is not correct to say that this dam has not been authorized; it is not correct to say that we have appropriated no money to carry on the work on this dam. The authorization has been made and money has been appropriated. We are in the midst of the construction of the dam now. I confess, of course, that we could stop this work right in the midst of it all; it is physically possible to do so; but do not get the idea, Senators, that we have done nothing about Watts bar dam. We have already appropriated money for it; we have already spent some money, and the necessary preparations have all been made. All the provision proposes is to carry on in a businesslike, systematic way the work which has already been commenced.

Therefore, it seems to me, Mr. President, as I look at it, that eliminating the provisions for Watts bar would be a blow at the very object which we want to attain through the T. V. A. We wish to make this river navigable; we want to get all the flood control out of its navigability that we can. This is one of the steps that will carry out the intent of the law, one of the steps that will carry out the object of Congress. To keep men employed, to keep the organization together, to keep going the machinery that has been bought to construct one dam, move it on down to another dam, is the economical way by which to construct these dams; it is the businesslike way; it is the patriotic way. There is no reason under heaven, Mr. President, why we should not now keep the Watts bar appropriation in this bill. I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be defeated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think the Senate knows I have uniformly been in favor of building dams in aid of navigation and flood control all over the country.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahay	King	Russell
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach
Austin	Frazier	Lewis	Sheppard
Bailey	George	Logan	Shipstead
Bankhead	Gerry	Lucas	Smathers
Barbour	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Barkley	Gillette	McKellar	Stewart
Bone	Glass	McNary	Taft
Borah	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Tobey
Burke	Harrison	Minton	Townsend
Byrd	Hatch	Murray	Truman
Byrnes	Hayden	Neely	Tydings
Capper	Herring	Norris	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hill	Nye	Van Nuys
Chavez	Holman	Overton	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Pittman	Walsh
Connally	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	White
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I was saying when I was interrupted by the roll call, I have felt as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] stated he felt about these dams, that the question is a national one. I followed out that view and belief by voting for Boulder Dam on the Colorado River in the West. I voted for several dams in the State of Colorado itself. I voted for similar measures in Oregon and Washington, or on the river between those States. I voted for other projects of a similar kind in the West and in all parts of the country, in the same way that I am now proposing to vote on these dams in the Tennessee River.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I understood the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to suggest, if not to say, that a vote against his amendment would be in effect a vote for Chattanooga, so to speak.

I do not see the matter in that way. As I understand this question, there is a comprehensive plan for flood control. We have undertaken to make the Tennessee Valley a model, so to speak. If we leave out one link in the chain, we cannot point to it as a comprehensive and complete project for flood control of the whole valley.

It so happens, as I understand, that Chattanooga would benefit perhaps more than any other one city; but that is not the point, as I see the matter, and that is not the reason why I am going to vote for this dam as against the amendment. The reason is that it is intended as part of a comprehensive and complete flood-control and navigation project, with power incidental to it, as much as can be developed and at the same time leave it a flood-control project.

The Senator from Tennessee was speaking on that particular point, and I feel that anyone whose vote is determined by the idea that this dam would simply give to Chattanooga a special advantage does not see the picture as a whole as I see it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma. I think his statement is exactly correct. It is not a question of Senators voting for or against Chattanooga. It is a question of their voting for the plan as a whole, just as the Senator has stated.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The statement made by the Senator from Oklahoma is very much of a misrepresentation of the position I took. I said nothing of the kind, and no such inference could be drawn from my remarks.

I am not concerned for or against Chattanooga. I am interested in Chattanooga. My objection to this proposal is on the ground that the United States Government finances have reached the point where we must give some consideration to expenditures; that the construction of the Watts bar dam at this time is not essential to carrying on the T. V. A. program; that it can wait; that the navigation facilities above Chattanooga are open to debate, and that a year's discussion would be worth while.

The statement that I am for or against this dam because of its effect on Chattanooga is not the fact.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Tennessee will further yield, I understood the Senator from Colorado to say that we should not favor Chattanooga over any other city. I certainly did not mean to misrepresent the Senator's position on that subject; but I understood that he said we should not favor Chattanooga over any other city, which would tend to make this a question of whether we are voting for Chattanooga or against Chattanooga. I did not want my vote to be construed as simply a vote to favor Chattanooga above other cities.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for his statement, and I thank the Senator from Colorado for saying that he had nothing especially against Chattanooga in offering his amendment. The truth of the matter is that both the Senate and the House of Representatives in 1935 adopted a plan for the development of the Tennessee River. Here is the plan in three lines:

That the Tennessee Valley Authority * * * shall have power to construct such dams, and reservoirs in the Tennessee River and its tributaries as in conjunction with Wilson Dam, and Norris, Wheeler, and Pickwick Landing Dams, now under construction, will provide a 9-foot channel in the said river and maintain a water supply for the same, from Knoxville to its mouth.

It is perfectly simple. Under that plan the engineers have adopted sites for building these dams—one at Gilbertsville, one at Pickwick, one at Wilson, one at Wheeler, one at Guntersville, one at Chickamauga, and now one at Watts bar on the main river. The plan has been carefully prepared. It has been authorized by Congress. It is necessary to navigation; it is necessary to flood control as well; and, incidentally, it will produce enough power to pay the entire cost of the improvement in a period of years.

I do not believe another project like this has ever been offered in the Congress of the United States—one that will bring about the navigation of 600 miles of a navigable river, bring about flood control on the great Ohio and Mississippi Rivers below, and then, in addition, by the power generated, will pay for itself over a series of years. So it is, that with these views, I wish to address the Senate for just a few moments on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, which would emasculate this plan and result virtually in stopping work on the Tennessee Valley improvements.

My reason for saying that it would result in stopping work is that as one of these dams is completed, or partly completed, those in charge move the machinery, the material, and the personnel, to another dam. They moved a large part of the material and personnel from the Pickwick Landing Dam to the Gilbertsville Dam, and so from Chickamauga and Guntersville, Ala., the material and the personnel will be moved to the Watts bar dam.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator knows that if we let them alone, they will never stop moving it to a new dam.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is nothing in the evidence that suggests that statement of the Senator from Colorado. The Senator became very much exasperated at some of the witnesses and what they had to say. He doubted the sincerity of some; but I am sure it was on the spur of the moment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I did not get out of patience with the witnesses. I did think that the chief engineer should have been frank with us, and not evasive. The committee had a great deal of difficulty in getting a plain answer from the chief engineer of the T. V. A., and had to persist in its endeavor to get information for the record.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall come to that testimony in a moment. I differ entirely with the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. It is not the first time.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it is not the first time, but I hope it will be the last. I hope the Senator will concur in my view as we proceed with this great project. I think he ought to do so. I have supported the Senator in all those things which pertain to the Colorado River and to Colorado. I helped him secure appropriations to bore the Rocky Mountains so as to get water from one side of the mountains to the other. But the Senator does not feel that way about Tennessee. Tennessee is a little different.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President I want the Senator to give me credit for having voted for the expenditure of some $300,000,000 for improvements along the Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; $220,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Two hundred and twenty million dollars has already been spent.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what the Senator voted for.

Mr. ADAMS. I voted for $95,000,000 for a project at Gilbertsville, and I voted for others.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not fall out with the Senator about it. I merely call attention to the fact that on the same committee, whenever the proposal is to develop projects of this kind for the benefit of the people of the West, giving them cheaper water, giving them water to drink, giving them water with which to make crops, even if it involves taking it from one side of the mountains to the other, I have uniformly stood with the Senator, because I think it is right, and I am sorry that the Senator does not think it is right now for us to continue this project as recommended by the engineers.

Mr. President, I shall now take the liberty of reading a small portion of the testimony. I shall not depend on my own memory, but I shall quote the reasons given by those who testified in favor of beginning the building of the Watts

Bar Dam at this time. I shall read what Colonel Parker said. I pause long enough to say that, though I may be mistaken about it, in my judgment there never was a more intelligent witness, or a fairer witness, or a witness who knew more about what he was discussing, than Mr. Parker, an able, splendid man. This is what he said about this matter:

The original request for appropriations approved by the Bureau of the Budget did not contemplate any departure from the plans previously presented to and approved by the Congress. The items eliminated by the amendment adopted in the House provided for the completion of the dams already under construction, including the Gilbertsville Dam located near the mouth of the river, the beginning of construction of the Watts Bar Dam located on the main river above Chattanooga, and the continuation of investigations of the Coulter Shoals site—all in accordance with the provisions of the statute, and as clearly contemplated by each of the appropriation acts enacted during the past 3 years.

The question, therefore, is not whether new projects shall be authorized, but rather whether authorizations previously given, upon the faith of which large sums have been expended, shall now be nullified.

Mr. President, that excerpt from the testimony of Mr. Parker, the engineer, gives ample reason why this dam should be constructed. He then proceeds:

The original T. V. A. Act, enacted in 1933, while in general terms authorizing the construction of other dams upon the Tennessee River and its tributaries, dealt specifically only with the transfer to the Authority of the existing Wilson Dam and appurtenant facilities, and the construction of the Norris Dam.

In 1935 the Congress adopted certain amendments for the express purpose of clarifying the construction program contemplated by the statute. By those amendments it was definitely specified that the Authority should construct such dams on the Tennessee River and its tributaries as would provide a 9-foot navigable channel throughout its entire length from its mouth to Knoxville, Tenn., and at the same time would provide an efficient system of flood-control reservoirs to assist in the control of destructive floodwaters in the Tennessee and Mississippi River Valleys. In the same amendments it was provided that the Authority should submit to the Congress a comprehensive report showing in detail just what dams would be necessary to accomplish those purposes.

As to the Watts Bar project, Colonel Parker said:

Even if the necessary link with the Mississippi River system is supplied by the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam, the channel contemplated by the 1935 amendments will not be complete. In order to tap the rich trade area surrounding the city of Knoxville, and thus make it possible for the traffic originating and terminating in that area to move throughout the whole system, it is essential to canalize the river between Chattanooga and Knoxville. That can be done only by the construction of dams in that stretch of the river. After years of investigation repeatedly authorized by Congress, it has been determined that such canalization can be accomplished by the construction of two additional dams. It has now been definitely determined that the best site for one of those dams is the Watts bar site, and the Authority is ready to proceed with construction there. In addition it is desirable to proceed with the investigations of the Coulter Shoals site, in order to make a final determination as to whether that is the place at which the final dam on the main stream connecting Knoxville and its trade area with the system should be constructed. If these dams are discontinued, the whole area of east Tennessee remains isolated from the system.

Again Colonel Parker stated:

The Authority will have expended through this fiscal year $678,000 on the Watts bar project, all of which has been authorized by previous appropriations by the Congress. It has been planned to begin construction in July 1939, as this starting date is in accordance with the most economical planning of the construction program. The completion of work at other projects of the Authority permits the transfer of construction equipment and trained personnel to the Watts bar project. To delay construction now would disrupt this entire plan and necessitate the disbanding of extremely efficient organizations.

As to the need of establishing the Watts Bar Dam, I quote the following from the hearings before the House committee:

Mr. PARKER. It is most important that authorization for starting construction of the Watts bar project be given at this time. This dam is the next logical step in the development of the program from the standpoint of navigation, because it will extend the 9-foot channel upstream from Chickamauga Dam; from the standpoint of flood control, because it will provide 347,000 acre-feet of controlled storage urgently needed for flood-control protection at Chattanooga; and from the standpoint of power, because it will provide in the initial stage for the installation of 90,000 kilowatts, which will be available to produce a revenue for our projects and for which there is a definite market. Of the utmost importance is the ability to stabilize and utilize our trained and experienced personnel and to gain the advantage of the reuse of our heavy equipment.

Now, that is a very real item. Our present plans are to combine the development of this site with the development of the Chickamauga site immediately downstream. As fast as the Chickamauga project is completed the personnel and equipment from that site will be transferred upstream to Watts bar, and the beginning of Watts bar has been scheduled with that particular thing in mind. If the Watts bar project should be postponed, it would mean the disruption of a large proportion of our construction force that has been assembled right there ready to start work.

Mr. CASE. Colonel Parker, it occurs to me that, judging from the history of the legislation last year, that the question that the House will probably ask as much as anything is, Why should we start another dam? Last year the conflict was over the starting of the Gilbertsville Dam and the reasons for it, and the House will ask for justification for starting the Watts Bar Dam. They will not be so much interested in the handling of the personnel, important as that is to you, but they will be interested in specific answers to the question of the necessity or value of this from the standpoint of flood control, navigation, or power. You mentioned that this is very important from the standpoint of Chattanooga. I think that point should be developed; and I think, if you can, you should justify it from the standpoint of navigation. Then there should be something on the need for additional power. I think there is a feeling at the present time that there is no market for all of the power produced.

Mr. PARKER. I should be glad to take those things up one at a time. First, from the standpoint of navigation, Congress instructed us to provide navigation to Knoxville. We have already spent a very considerable amount of money developing navigation. With the completion of the Chickamauga Dam it will be effective to somewhere half way between Chattanooga and Knoxville. That is no logical terminus. It is not a complete program. We have not yet done what Congress asked us to do. Watts bar and Coulter Shoals are needed to complete that entire program, and all of this money which we have spent so far on it will be only partially effective. If we do not complete it at the present time with our present resources, it will be very much more expensive to complete it at some future date if we have to reassemble those same resources again.

Now, from the point of view of flood control, the same thing is true in efficiency and cost. We are recommending that a levee be constructed at Chattanooga. If it is constructed, it will, in turn, be only partly effective. It will not only be partly effective, it will be decidedly dangerous, because if a flood occurs large enough to top that levee, it will endanger the community. The picture is incomplete without the completion of the Watts bar and Coulter Shoals projects, and this 340,000 acre-feet on the main river directly above Chickamauga is a very effective means of supplementing the proposed local protection.

From the standpoint of power I would rather have Mr. Krug explain to you just what the markets are, but I think I can safely say that our present power load, which I think exceeds 260,000 kilowatts, practically coincides with the estimates made a year and a half or 2 years ago, upon which this whole schedule has been based. There is no other source of so-called prime energy available. It will take 3 years, if we start the job now, to get this prime energy. If it is deferred, it means there will be a considerable period during which the power capacity of the system cannot grow.

I have here the report on the Watts bar project of which we have several copies available, and we would be glad to supply them to the committee if you wish to have them. This is a description of the entire project with the cost estimates, and all of the details.

I should say that the dam site is a very favorable one, and presents very few difficulties. It is probably the most favorable dam site we have discovered in that valley. We have had considerable difficulty there with foundations of limestone. You understand that we have to locate these dams where navigation requires that they be located; that is, they have to overlap to provide continuous depth, and we have run into considerable difficulties. This dam is located on sandstone and shale and is entirely free from any foundation difficulties.

Mr. President, that shows the necessity of beginning this dam the coming July. There is no evidence to the contrary. The distinguished Senator from Colorado says, it is true, that in his opinion it ought not to be begun until some later period. There is no proof in the record, not a line, that the work should be postponed. Not a witness testified that it ought to be postponed, but every witness whose testimony appears in the record stated that it ought to be begun on the first of next July.

Mr. President, that is not the only reason why the Government should proceed with this project. There is a stronger reason for beginning the dam. It will be remembered that last year when we were discussing T. V. A. a great deal was said about taking advantage of the private power companies, that the Government was trying to put them out of business, that the Government was going to confiscate their property, and all that kind of nonsense. What has happened? The power companies fought the

T. V. A. every moment of the time from the day the T. V. A. act was passed until recently, when the Supreme Court declared that the last act and every act relating to that subject was valid and binding, when it decided every issue in favor of the T. V. A. By that time the utilities interests had gotten through this body and the House of Representatives a provision for an investigation of the T. V. A., thinking there was something corrupt about it. What was the result of that investigation? The result was a clean bill of health for the T. V. A. Not a dollar was wrongfully used.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I have understood it to be said in debate here that the Congress had authorized the Watts Bar Dam as a part of the general project. That is not true, is it?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is.

Mr. MILLER. Literally speaking?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will read the language of the act.

Mr. MILLER. I am familiar with the language of the act; but I am referring to this particular dam.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator mean a definite fixing of Watts bar in the act?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, that was not done, for the very good reason that before any of these dams can be built the engineers must go to the sites and make investigations. They have to make borings, they have to examine in every way known to engineering skill, in order to find the particular place where they should build. I will give the Senator an illustration.

Mr. MILLER. I understand the mechanics of the procedure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Take the one at Gilbertsville.

Mr. MILLER. I understand it.

Mr. McKELLAR. For several years we wanted the dam built at Aurora, but the engineers of the T. V. A. finally fixed the site a few miles away, 15 miles away from Aurora, and the place near which it was decided to build the dam was Gilbertsville, so it was put at Gilbertsville.

The statute is perfectly plain. It provides:

The T. V. A. shall have the power to construct such dams and reservoirs, in the Tennessee River and its tributaries, as in conjunction with Wilson Dam and Norris, Wheeler, and Pickwick Landing Dams, now under construction—

Those dams had already been arranged for by the T. V. A. will provide a 9-foot channel in the said river and maintain a water supply for the same, from Knoxville to its mouth.

They were specifically authorized to build any dam between Knoxville and the mouth that would carry out that purpose. Therefore, I say that is a specific authorization.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I think the Senator knows that I am in sympathy with the Tennessee Valley Authority program.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. MILLER. But I believe the Senate ought to have the actual facts about this matter, and I know the Senator is anxious for the Congress to have the facts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I am.

Mr. MILLER. In 1936 the Congress passed the act of which the Senator spoke.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was the 1935 act. The 1933 act was not sufficiently specific.

Mr. MILLER. Then the Congress called for a report by the T. V. A.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. And that report was filed with the Congress on or before April 4, 1936, and in the report they set out this Watts Bar Dam. That report has never been acted upon by the Congress, and no other report has ever been adopted by the Congress in respect to that matter. So we do not have any adopted project except as—

Mr. McKELLAR. Except as stated in the act.

Mr. MILLER. Six hundred and seventy-eight thousand dollars has been spent in investigation work in connection with the Watts Bar Dam.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER. That was not the result of any specific appropriation by the Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. It resulted from a specific appropriation made for the purpose of examining and determining the appropriate place to put the dam. That appropriation was made last year. I think there was a smaller appropriation made the year preceding. I happened to be on the committee considering the matter, and keep up with the subject very closely; and, as I recall, those appropriations were made for the specific purpose of finding a suitable place for the location of the dam. Watts bar is not the place where it was originally intended to locate the dam.

Mr. MILLER. The appropriation was made for the purpose of exploratory work.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER. But the point that the Senator from Colorado, and other Senators who think along the same line, have made, is that they doubt the advisability of putting all our eggs in one basket. That is the situation in a nutshell. While $678,000 have been spent in exploratory work in connection with the Watts Bar Dam, the actual construction work can well wait. Nothing will be destroyed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will come to that point in a moment, if the Senator will bear with me, and show why the work cannot wait. I will discuss that question now. I am glad to take it up at this time.

I refer the Senator to page 64 of the Senate committee hearing. On that page the Senator will find the statement of Mr. J. A. Krug, chief power engineer, Tennessee Valley Authority. He will find in that statement a full answer to the question as to why the work cannot be postponed.

Before reading that statement, which is short, I will say to the Senator that since the 1st of January more than 200 cities and towns in the State of Tennessee have made contracts by which they have bought the properties of the power companies which are now in existence in that State. Having bought those properties it is absolutely necessary to obtain the power at the earliest possible moment in order to carry out the obligations they have made to furnish power and light to the people in their communities. I shall now read from Mr. Krug's statement.

Mr. MILLER. I am familiar with that statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to read it anyway for the benefit of the Senate:

STATEMENT OF J. A. KRUG, CHIEF POWER ENGINEER, TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY MARKETING OF SURPLUS POWER

From an economic point of view it is desirable to generate and market as much electric power as possible from the Authority's water-control projects, as in that manner the Authority can best achieve those provisions of the act which contemplate liquidation of project costs through the sale of power and the distribution of power for the benefit of the area as a whole. The Authority now has in operation four multipurpose water-control projects with a combined installed capacity of 420,000 kilowatts—

Think of it. If the Senator from Arkansas will give me his attention, I will read that sentence again:

The Authority now has in operation four multipurpose water-control projects with a combined installed capacity of 420,000 kilowatts. All of this power—

Not some of it, not a portion of it, but—

All of this power has been sold and a market has been developed for the sale of substantially all of the additional power which will be available on the completion of Guntersville, Chickamauga, and Hiwassee Dams.

That will take in all of those that are about to be completed.

This market will have an aggregate demand of over 600,000 kilowatts in 1942, and additional capacity must be installed not later than 1943 to adequately provide for the expanding power requirements in this market.

The projects required in the Authority's integrated program must be carefully planned and a period of from 3 to 6 years is necessary for their construction. Likewise, the turbines and generators involve design and construction problems so complex that about 2 years is required between ordering the equipment and placing the unit in operation in the system. Plans must be made now to provide the capacity needed in 1942 and 1943 and the requirements for the following years must also be considered. It is no longer a problem of finding a market for the power but the reverse problem of making certain that capacity will be available to provide for the increasing power requirements of the existing market.

ADJUSTMENT OF COMPETITIVE SITUATION

This market for the Authority's surplus power has been developed without duplication of the existing power facilities and without unreasonable losses to legitimate private interests. With the basis of agreement reached for acquisition of existing facilities of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and the Memphis Power & Light Co. by T. V. A. and local public agencies, competition between distributors of the Authority's surplus power and private utilities has been practically eliminated. With the acquisition of certain small electric systems in northern Mississippi and northern Alabama, the adjustment between the Authority and private utilities will be completed in an area sufficient to absorb substantially all of the surplus power from the Authority's present and proposed dams.

It is of paramount importance—

This is the engineer speaking.

It is of paramount importance that the Gilbertsville, Watts bar, and Coulter Shoals projects are completed as scheduled. Otherwise, it may be necessary for local public agencies, distributing T. V. A. power, to construct local generating plants to serve their increasing power requirements. Small scale local developments would fall far short of the economies which are inherent in the multipurpose projects proposed by the Authority.

Mr. MILLER. Is the Senator advised as to what other dams are being contemplated by the T. V. A. outside of the Coulter Shoals Dam?

Mr. McKELLAR. Outside of that there are no others.

Mr. MILLER. Except, possibly, some storage dams.

Mr. McKELLAR. Possibly, but they are outside of this program. The program that is at issue here is the program of development from Knoxville, Tenn., to the mouth of the Tennessee River, where it runs into the Ohio, at Paducah, Ky. There are no other dams on that river that are projected.

Mr. MILLER. Is the Senator advised as to what the plans of the T. V. A. are with reference to the operation of the steam plants acquired as the result of the purchase of the various utilities a few days ago?

Mr. McKELLAR. No. They are to be used where they have to be used, when the power cannot be generated at the dam.

Mr. MILLER. To be used as stand-by plants?

Mr. McKELLAR. To be used as standby plants where there is necessity for it. Of course, the Senator realizes that when water is used power can be produced at two-fifths of a cent or less, and it cannot be produced that cheaply by the use of coal.

Mr. MILLER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to read a little further from this statement:

NO POWER SURPLUS

It is now generally understood that there will be no surplus of power in the Tennessee Valley region by virtue of the installation of power facilities in the proposed projects. On the contrary, the most conservative estimates indicate that even with the installation of the full capacity proposed in the Authority's projects an additional 850,000 kilowatts of generating capacity must be installed in the area before 1946 to serve the expanding electric market. This assumes that the existing generating capacity in the area, much of which is already obsolete, will continue in existence.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask that the remainder of Mr. Krug's statement be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The remainder of the statement is as follows:

If a reasonable amount of this obsolete capacity is replaced during the same period, it is probable that the additional installations required will exceed 2,000,000 kilowatts. These requirements for power capacity are in excess of the 1,400,000 kilowatts presently installed or proposed for installation in the Authority's 10-dam system. The construction of additional flood-control dams on the headwaters of the Tennessee River would provide economic power capacity to assist in offsetting the power requirements developing in the southeastern area.

EXISTING RATES COVER ALL COSTS

Not only has a market been developed for the existing and proposed power capacity in the Authority's projects including Watts bar and Coulter Shoals, but this market has been developed at rates which will adequately cover all of the cost incurred in producing the power with a substantial margin as a contribution to the common cost of these multipurpose projects. A comprehensive study of this problem was presented to the Tennessee Valley Authority congressional investigating committee and a copy was filed with the House Committee on Appropriations.

This study shows that the power revenues from the proposed 10-dam system will approximate $20,250,000, which will cover all of the direct power costs and the common cost fairly apportionable to power, including 3-percent interest, depreciation, and all other items of operating cost, and leave a margin of more than $3,000,000 which will be available for flood control and navigation costs. If speculative costs are eliminated from consideration such as interest and workmen's compensation, power revenues from the 10-dam system will return over $15,000,000 annually to the Federal Government to apply as liquidation of the investment.

This study of operating results is premised on the Authority's experience with the four completed projects and its 5 years of marketing experience in the Tennessee Valley area. The results show clearly that the Authority's power operations will fulfill the expectations of Congress as expressed in the T. V. A. Act, namely, that the power projects should be self-supporting and assist in liquidating the cost of the projects.

NO CURTAILMENT OF STEAM GENERATION

It is contended by the private utility interests that the Authority's projects bring about the substitution of hydroelectric power for steam-generated power and thereby reduce the market for coal with adverse effects on employment in the coal industry. This is clearly inconsistent with the facts. The Authority's power activities coupled with its low-rate policy have greatly stimulated the demand for electric energy not only in the Tennessee Valley but throughout the country. The records show that even in the Tennessee Valley area, where the Authority now has in operation 420,000 kilowatts of hydroelectric capacity, the stimulation of electric-power sales has been so great that more coal is being used at the present time for generating electric power in that area than at any time in the past.

This situation is generally true throughout the country. Rather than the hydroelectric projects curtailing the use of coal, construction and operation of these projects in competition with steam is actually increasing the use of coal as a result of the great increase in power consumption which has resulted from the greatly reduced rates. The contention that the hydroelectric program is curtailing the market for coal is merely propaganda of representatives of private utility interests attempting to obtain the support of labor in their campaign against public power activities and low power rates.

REVENUE ESTIMATES

The estimates of power revenues and expenses submitted to this committee are conservative. It is probable that the actual revenues will exceed the $6,500,000 estimated. However, even on the basis of the conservative estimates submitted, the Authority's power operations for the fiscal year 1940 will produce revenues adequate to cover all reasonable power costs including a substantial contribution to the common cost of the projects. The Authority's power business has reached the status of a going concern. Free from litigation for the first time, the Authority will obtain power revenues adequate to provide substantial liquidation of the project cost. The success of negotiations for the acquisition of existing electric properties in the Authority's market area by the Authority and local public agencies is assurance that competition will no longer invite further delays and litigation.

TRANSMISSION REQUIREMENTS

The Authority is requesting $6,964,460 for the construction of transmission lines and substations for the fiscal year 1940. This amount is at least $1,000,000 short of the estimated transmission requirements for the period and several desirable projects must be deferred.

By virtue of the acquisition agreements reached with the private utilities, the Authority is in a position to acquire almost at once a marketing area which otherwise would have required many years to develop. If this is achieved, the funds requested for the fiscal year 1940 for construction of transmission lines and substations will be insufficient for the integration of the acquired systems as it will be necessary to carry out almost at once a construction program that otherwise would be spread over a considerable period of years as required in developing a market under competitive conditions.

To summarize, the Authority has developed a market for all of the power from the present and proposed projects and, should any change be required in the projected construction schedule, it will be necessary for local agencies to construct independent generating plants to serve a part of the increasing power requirements in the Tennessee Valley area. The increase in power demands from present contractors and municipalities, which have been assured power when it becomes available, would utilize all of the power which can be generated economically at the projects now under construction and those which have been proposed, including Watts Bar and Coulter Shoals and the tributary projects which will be desirable to afford complete flood-control protection to the Tennessee Valley and the expected protection to the Mississippi River Valley. This market has been developed under a rate level which will permit substantial liquidation of project costs so that power may carry out its functions as the "paying partner" in the Authority's program.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me state the situation with which we are confronted today. The power is needed; it is necessary to plan the building of the dams beforehand. They cannot be built in a year; they cannot be built in 6 months. We must plan years before the actual building begins. If the project is to be completed as Congress has directed the T. V. A. to complete it, it ought to be completed as early as possible. When the engineers tell us that Watts Bar Dam should be constructed and can most economically be constructed by beginning it next July, the item for that dam ought not to be stricken from the pending bill, and I certainly hope that the Senate will not do so.

Mr. President, I wish to speak with reference to one or two other matters, and then I shall conclude. I wish to refer to the question of money. The Senator from Colorado said that the total cost of the T. V. A. was $489,000,000. I quote from the record that the cost will be $419,000,000. That is what the engineers testified. That is not a statement by a member of the committee. That is the testimony of the engineers. The testimony is that when that $419,000,000 is expended there will be a return to the Government of upward of $20,000,000 a year. That will be the first instance in our history of an adequate return being made on the money invested by the Government in any project.

I do not care what project it is. I challenge any Senator to show any other project from which there is a return to the Government in full measure of the amount put into the project.

Much is made of the fact that this project is in Tennessee. What difference does that make? I have voted for many projects everywhere. I do not know whether the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has had any projects, but all the Senators except him have had projects before us, and I voted for all of them. If the Senator should bring forward a good project on the Connecticut River, I might vote for it, notwithstanding his opposition to the T. V. A.

Of course, what I have said to the Senator from New Hampshire is a pleasantry.

Here we have a great project for navigation of over 600 miles in one of the most fertile valleys of this country. We have a greater project of flood control. When these 10 dams are put into operation the crest of floodwaters at Cairo or points south will be lowered from 3 to 4 feet, sufficient to save those towns.

Chattanooga is only an incident. The project is for the safety of all the great cities south of the point where the Tennessee River runs into the Ohio River. It is for the safety and benefit of those cities from the standpoint of flood control. I believe the Gilbertsville Dam will be the largest flood-water dam in the country, and perhaps in the world. It ought to be continued. It is economy for the Government to continue it. The Watts Bar Dam ought to be begun and completed as early as possible, not only to take care of navigation and flood control, but to take care of the necessity for properly utilizing the great power plant which now exists in Tennessee, and which will be dependent upon this body for operation and control.

I should like to say a word about the returns from four of these great dams—Wilson Dam, Wheeler Dam, Norris Dam, and Pickwick Landing Dam. As a matter of fact, there are very few returns as yet from Pickwick Landing Dam. The returns from these four dams this year will amount to six and a half million dollars. I again ask the question, What other projects in the United States have ever brought such a return in money to the Government? Talk about the Government contributing to these projects or furnishing the money to build them. The Government will get every dollar of it back. Does any Senator know of any other project which will provide such a return?

My smiling friend the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], one of the most delightful gentlemen in this or any other body, said in committee the other day that he did not know where we are going to sell the power after it is generated. I call the Senator's attention to the testimony of Mr. Krug and other engineers. They say the power is already sold up to the very hilt, and that the dams cannot be built fast enough to take care of the demand which the Government will have for power after the plan has been carried through.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I based my observation on the fact that privately owned power plants are being purchased.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; they are. All kinds of plants are being purchased, including run-down plants, plants which do not have the machinery to run, and shells of plants, such as the one which was sold in Memphis. It probably sold for more than it was worth. It sold for more than I thought it was worth. I am taking the position taken by my friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. It is my opinion that the plant was sold for more than it was worth.

However, every kilowatt of power that can be produced will be required to meet the demand. That is the evidence of electrical experts.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator will yield further, have not the private companies been taking care of the demand for power in the past?

Mr. McKELLAR. In a way, and at about three times the price which should have been charged. The first thing that will happen to us in Tennessee upon the carrying out of this proposal will be a reduction of rates to a little more than one-third what they were before. The program will be a boon to the people in the entire area, not alone to my town or to my State, but to all the States within transmitting distance of these plants. The price to the consumer has been reduced nearly two-thirds.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is the Senator familiar with the question of taxes?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes. That matter is provided for under the arrangements made. The cities and towns will pay the same taxes to the State and to the county which have been paid heretofore by the power companies.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do the Government-owned power companies pay taxes?

Mr. McKELLAR. The power companies have agreed to pay the same taxes which were paid by the old private companies, so there will be no loss on that score.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. If there is all this demand for power, why was the cost of power facilities left out of the estimated cost of the Gilbertsville Dam? Are we not being fooled when it is said that the cost of the dam will be $95,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I will say to the Senator that nobody is trying to fool him. The T. V. A. does not want to fool him. I certainly do not want to fool the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Then why are power facilities omitted in estimating the cost?

Mr. McKELLAR. It must be remembered that the purchase of the private plants has been made in the past 4 weeks. The plans for putting in machinery to develop power at Gilbertsville have not yet been made. They will be made. Ninety-one thousand kilowatts will be generated at Gilbertsville, and it will be absolutely necessary to generate that power. The plans of the T. V. A. will have to be changed in order to generate that power to supply the demand.

Mr. TAFT. Then the Senator would say that the cost of the project will be at least $105,000,000, instead of $95,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. I presume the cost will be around $100,000,000. I think that question is immaterial, for this reason—

Mr. TAFT. The cost of power facilities has been estimated at from $12,000,000 to $16,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that point is immaterial, for the reason that when the power plants are built, the Government will get a full return of every dollar of the money. Every dollar will be provided for in the sinking fund with which to pay it all off. Are there any projects in the Senator's State which make such a return?

Mr. TAFT. Is it contemplated that the flood-control cost and the navigation cost will be paid off, or only the power cost?

Mr. McKELLAR. The power cost.

Mr. TAFT. Only the power cost?

Mr. McKELLAR. The power cost will be paid off first. The return will be a continuing one. There will be available to the Government $15,000,000 a year to pay off these amounts. I do not know any other project in the country into which the Government has gone which pays such a return. Not even Boulder Dam, in which the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and I were so much interested a few years ago, and which is one of the great projects of the country, will pay the Government a return comparable with the return from the Gilbertsville Dam.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with the question of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], it seems to me there is no greater obligation for the recapture of the amount of money involved in the Gilbertsville Dam, or any other dam which is useful for flood control and navigation, than there would be for the recapture of the cost of any other flood-control dam on any river anywhere in the United States.

Mr. TAFT. Not at all. I just thought the Senator from Tennessee was claiming the whole world, and I wanted to be sure whether he meant to claim that all the cost would be paid back.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not claiming the whole world. However, after 22 years of fighting in the Senate I do claim to know something about the subject, and I believe I know more about it than does the distinguished junior Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with the suggestion the Senator made about trying to fool somebody, I desire to say that no effort is being made to fool anybody. A year ago it was stated on the floor of the Senate and in the committee that the completion of the Gilbertsville Dam would involve about $112,000,000, which would include not only flood-control and navigation facilities, but installation of such incidental power as might grow out of the project.

There has been no secrecy about the cost. The cost of the dam originally was estimated at around $75,000,000. At that time it was thought that there would be two dams in the lower Tennessee River. However, when the engineers decided to move the dam down the river about 20 miles, and build one large dam instead of two, it was then estimated that the cost of the dam, complete for all purposes, would be about $112,000,000. That information is in the public hearings, so no effort is being made to deceive anybody.

Mr. TAFT. Would the Senator undertake to allocate the cost among the three uses of the Gilbertsville Dam, and give us some kind of a rough estimate?

Mr. BARKLEY. I would not undertake to hazard an opinion on that question. However, if the $95,000,000 which is now being talked about does not include the installation of power facilities, and if the cost of completion of the dam with those facilities is $112,000,000, it is a simple matter to subtract $95,000,000 from $112,000,000. The result is $17,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I am not expressing any opinion as to the discussion here today, but I desire to correct one statement in the matter of the construction of the Boulder Dam.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I have made a mistake I will be very happy to have it corrected.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Government would not permit a shovelful of earth to be turned in the construction of the Boulder Dam until we had made firm contracts by which the entire cost of the work should be paid.

Mr. McKELLAR. Out of the returns from power and water?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes; out of returns from power and water; that is quite true.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the Senator has stated that, because I did not know that there was such a contract. I remember that six or seven States made an agreement with the Government about it. It has been quite a time since the Boulder Dam Act was passed, and my memory may not be accurate.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. They did not make an agreement—

Mr. McKELLAR. There was certainly an agreement as to the distribution of water.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. They did not make an agreement with the Government except so far as the distribution of water might be concerned; but for the payment of every single, solitary penny of cost of the dam we had to arrange before the Government would turn a shovelful of earth. It shows the difference between the construction of Boulder Dam and the works succeeding it. I do not say that it was a just thing to us, but we were compelled to meet the Government's requirements at that time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very happy to have the Senator's statement about Boulder Dam. It makes me all the more pleased with my vote for that great project. I voted for it because I thought it would help build up the section of the country where it is located and make it a better and safer and more agreeable place in which to live. That is why I am for all these projects which will help our country.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If I may peacefully inquire—

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator belligerently or peacefully inquires, I shall be very glad to try to answer his questions.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to obtain a little general information about T. V. A., which I am sure the Senator can give me.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I can, I will be delighted.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How much has been spent on T. V. A. all told?

Mr. McKELLAR. Two hundred and twenty million dollars.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How much more will be required to complete the T. V. A. so far as already projected?

Mr. McKELLAR. About $199,000,000, after we obtain the $40,000,000 now proposed to be provided.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How much does that make the total cost?

Mr. McKELLAR. About $459,000,000; $40,000,000 of which is to be used for various other purposes, such as the production of fertilizer and other things in which the T. V. A. is interested.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does that include all the 17 dams about which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] was talking?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know to which 17 dams the Senator from Colorado referred. The law gives the T. V. A. the right to build dams on tributary streams. I will ask the Senator from Colorado how many dams he has found may be constructed?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have simply the official record of the T. V. A. I happened to have counted them this morning. The number includes 17 dams on tributaries. They are not in the cost items given, for they are prospective rather than definitely determined upon.

Mr. McKELLAR. I had not counted proposed dams on tributaries, and I doubt if anyone could tell accurately at this time how many would be needed or constructed on tributaries. There are a number of tributaries to the Tennessee River in east Tennessee, North Carolina, and, I believe, in Virginia.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator from Colorado know what the estimate is of the cost of the other 17 dams?

Mr. ADAMS. It is $80,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator give us information as to where the estimate comes from?

Mr. ADAMS. The estimate comes from the volume we have here of the House hearings.

Mr. McKELLAR. I had overlooked the House hearings. Those figures are not in the Senate hearings. As a matter of fact, the engineer who appeared before the Senate committee, Mr. Parker, who has this matter in charge, says that there is but one more dam in this project, and that dam is at Coulter Shoals, at Knoxville, and there is a provision in the pending bill, which as I understand, is uncontested, for a further examination of that dam.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator can understand my perplexity, for he must realize that each time we come back there seems to be a new dam. The T. V. A. seems to be "just one damn thing after another." [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is mistaken about that, because all the authorities have held against the Senator. The district courts, the circuit courts of appeal, and the Supreme Court of the United States have all held against the Senator. In addition to that, the joint committee which was constituted at the last session, for which both the Senator and I voted, and which was approved by the House of Representatives, has reported on T. V. A. and has not found that it is "just one damn thing after another." It has found that T. V. A. is a very useful activity of the Government; the committee has upheld it and found nothing wrong with it, and has discovered no dishonesty or corruption in it, as many people thought would be the case.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator does not attribute to me any suggestion that there is dishonesty in it? I have not said anything of that kind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I want to know is when will we get through building dams?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know when.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator does not know, I am sure nobody will be able to enlighten us.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are there any dams in Michigan? Does the Senator know how many there are there?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; they never let us build dams with Federal money in Michigan.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then there must not be any in Michigan.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Is it not true that the Congress, in the 1935 T. V. A. amendatory act, adopted a unified plan for the development of the Tennessee River?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, that is so.

Mr. HILL. And the dams that we are now talking about, the Gilbertsville Dam and the Watts bar dam, are necessary to carry out that plan. Neither the Senator from Tennessee nor I nor any other Senator is asking for the construction of any dam other than a dam within the plan which the Congress has already adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have tried to make it plain that Watts bar dam and Coulter Shoals Dam are the last two dams to be built on the Tennessee River under this project from Knoxville to the mouth of the river at Paducah, Ky.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Do I correctly understand the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Alabama to say that when we are through with the Watts bar dam no more dams are going to be asked for by either Senator?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Watts bar dam and the Coulter Shoals Dam.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee permit me to interrupt him further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield further to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The only other dam that will be necessary to carry out the plan adopted by the Congress in 1935 will be the Coulter Shoals Dam. As to what the future may bring, whether we should go into the development of the tributaries and matters of that kind, of course, we cannot tell; the future will have to take care of itself; but the Coulter Shoals Dam is the only other one, besides the Gilbertsville and Watts Bar Dams, which is necessary to carry out the program adopted by the Congress.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senator from Alabama is assuming something that I do not believe to be accurate. There was in 1935 a statute adopted with relation to the T. V. A. providing a unified plan that was to be filed in 1936. The plan was filed but it was never adopted by the Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it was adopted. Let me refer to that right here. It was adopted in language so plain that anybody on earth could understand it. I should like to read it. The act provided that the T. V. A.—

Shall have power to construct such dams and reservoirs in the Tennessee River and its tributaries as, in conjunction with Wilson Dam and Norris, Wheeler, and Pickwick Landing Dams now under construction will provide a 9-foot channel in the said river and maintain a water supply for the same from Knoxville to its mouth.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The 1935 act, from which the Senator has read, contains a direction to the T. V. A. to have a unified plan prepared and filed by a certain date in 1936, which was the next year. That plan was, doubtless, prepared but it was filed after the adoption of the statute from which the Senator has read. The plan of 1936 has not been adopted by Congress, so far as I know.

Mr. McKELLAR. Congress is the highest authority in the matter of these dams. The Congress has spoken in language that is unmistakable. There cannot be any doubt about that. Even with his brilliant legal mind, I do not believe the Senator from Colorado can find that the Congress has not specifically provided for the dams between Knoxville and the mouth of the river in words so plain that—

The wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.

Mr. President, I have taken more time than I intended to take and I yield the floor.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	King	Russell
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach
Austin	Frazier	Lewis	Sheppard
Bailey	George	Logan	Shipstead
Bankhead	Gerry	Lucas	Smathers
Barbour	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Barkley	Gillette	McKellar	Stewart
Bone	Glass	McNary	Taft
Borah	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Tobey
Burke	Harrison	Minton	Townsend
Byrd	Hatch	Murray	Truman
Byrnes	Hayden	Neely	Tydings
Capper	Herring	Norris	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hill	Nye	Van Nuys
Chavez	Holman	Overton	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Pittman	Walsh
Connally	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	White
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I understand that after considerable debate in the House of Representatives, the House voted to eliminate from the pending appropriation bill ten or eleven million dollars for the Gilbertsville Dam and about $5,000,000 for the Watts bar dam. The Appropriations Committee of the Senate has restored both of those items; and in order that he may raise the question separately, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has moved to strike out of the committee amendment the provision for the Watts bar dam. That involves an expenditure of about $5,000,000, as I understand, and will involve, before we get through, a further expenditure of approximately sixty or seventy million dollars for the two dams, which must go together.

Certainly I am strongly in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. There seems to be no tremendous demand for navigation on the Tennessee River above Chattanooga. The question of navigation is presented only on the theory that in some way this body has authorized and required the construction of a 9-foot channel to Knoxville. I do not understand that that is the fact, and it seems to me that it does not make very much difference whether it is or not.

On the question of an appropriation the argument is frequently urged that authority to make the appropriation has already been granted. If that argument is effective, we never are going to stop spending. We have had enough authorizations up to this time to involve us in billions of dollars of additional expenditure. The only way we are going to stop spending is to stop paying out money, and the surest way of preventing the paying out of money is not to appropriate the money to be paid out. I do not think the theory that this particular appropriation has been authorized is any argument in favor of it.

The question of navigation above Chattanooga certainly is something which should be carefully examined. It is very doubtful whether it really is an essential thing, except to make constitutional the authorization of the power dams above; and I see no particular reason why that argument is of any strength.

It is urged that this dam in some way will produce 340,000 acre-feet of flood control. That flood control can be provided a good deal cheaper with smaller dams on the tributaries.

It is suggested that we need this dam in order to put men to work, because there now is a wonderful organization there, and we must continue it indefinitely. That certainly is no argument for a continuation of building dams. If that is a good argument, we might as well admit that we are going to build dams for the rest of our lives. Sooner or later we are going to have to dismiss that organization, and we might as well begin to dismiss it now.

As far as the Watts bar dam is concerned, I think it cannot involve more than about 4,000 men. It is contemplated to spend $5,000,000 during the year; and if the authorities can get more than one man to $1,200 in construction of this kind, they are doing better than the P. W. A. is doing. That means that the dam might involve the possible employment of 4,000 men. When we are trying to support 3,000,000 men on W. P. A., it seems to me that is not a material factor in a decision of the important question whether we now shall commit ourselves to another expenditure of $70,000,000.

So I see no real justification for the Watts bar dam at the present time.

I want to go somewhat further, however, and discuss the whole question of the Gilbertsville Dam.

I was not in the Senate when the question was discussed last year. I have not spent 22 years in learning of the subject, as has the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]; and yet in the House of Representatives, after a considered judgment, men, all of whom have come directly from the people of the United States, have decided that they do not wish to proceed with the Gilbertsville Dam. That certainly requires in the Senate a reconsideration of the question whether or not we are going ahead with a project which is going to cost $112,000,000.

It is said that we have spent four or five million dollars on this dam. Four or five million dollars is a mere drop in the bucket when the total expenditure is considered, and a considerable amount of it can be salvaged on a very much less expensive system of dams.

I asked the Senator whether he could divide this cost. This is a three-purpose dam. It is supposed to provide power; it is supposed to provide flood control; it is supposed to provide navigation. No one is able to say what proportion ought to be allotted to any one of those purposes. As a matter of fact, the dam will not be effective for any one of the purposes, at least to the extent of the expenditure which must be allotted to it. So far as I have been able to discover from the record, it is necessary to allot about $27,000,000 to navigation, anywhere from twenty-five to thirty-five million dollars to power, and anywhere from sixty to seventy million dollars to flood control. That gives us something of a picture of the situation.

I do not know whether or not Senators know the situation of this dam. It is at the mouth of the Tennessee River, within a few miles of the Ohio River. The base of the dam, as I understand, is only about 7 feet above the level of the Ohio at pool stage, where it remains part of the year. For a considerable part of the year the backwater from the Ohio River runs up on the dam.

The top of the dam is about 375 feet above sea level. The water behind the dam is going to be perpetually maintained at least 350 feet above sea level. In the 1937 flood the Ohio River reached a level of about 347 feet above sea level, which is some 40 feet above the base of the dam; so the Ohio River will back right up against the Gilbertsville Dam, and almost reach the level at which water is to be maintained in that dam.

This dam is going to backwater back 186 miles. It is going to destroy, for all useful purposes, about 400,000 acres of the best farm land in Kentucky, permanently. If we are to try to prevent floods, and then create a permanent flood over 400,000 acres of land, certainly we should give the matter serious consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The engineers who testified before the Committee on Appropriations only a week ago stated that the acreage which would be permanently affected by this dam would be about 157,000. The Senator must be quoting from a speech made on the floor of the House of Representatives, not by an engineer but by one of the opponents of the whole Tennessee Valley improvement.

Mr. TAFT. As I understand, the figure I have given is the number of acres they figure they are going to have to appropriate for the purpose, and that is the basis on which the cost is figured.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the engineers testified that on rare occasions, perhaps once every 20 or 25 years, there might be sufficient water in the Tennessee River to flood that much land, but that the permanent acreage involved in the lake which is to be created by the construction of the dam was only about 157,000. My recollection is that only about 60,000 of that 157,000 is suitable for cultivation.

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator's knowledge; yet I should like to check the information because my information is from the gentleman who spoke in the House, in whose district this dam is located, as I understand it, among others—

Mr. BARKLEY. It not only is not in the gentleman's district, but it is at the far end of the State from the district represented by the particular Member who spoke in the House against the construction of this dam. I doubt very much if he has ever seen the location of the Tennessee River at that point. It is 500 miles from where he lives.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator spoke of all this land being in the State of Kentucky. My recollection is that about 160 or 165 miles of it is in Tennessee, and only about 25 miles in the State of Kentucky. So it would take several Representatives from Tennessee to talk about that from personal knowledge, and I do not think any of those in Tennessee are on that side of the question.

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator. I knew the water backed up into Tennessee; but it does not make very much difference to most of us whether the land is in Tennessee or in Kentucky, much as it might make a difference to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wanted to get the Senator right in his geographical location of the land. Most of these lands are in Tennessee.

Mr. TAFT. At any rate, this dam creates a lake about 160 miles long, which goes back into Tennessee, and has an average width somewhere around 2 miles, possibly 1 mile and six-tenths in width, on the average.

Of course, the main justification for river improvement in the past has been navigation. This dam is supposed to provide navigation, and for that purpose there is allotted to it $27,000,000. My interest in this matter was first excited over a year ago when talking to an Army engineer, who definitely was of the opinion that it was an utterly indefensible proposition. The report of the Army engineers shows that for approximately eleven to fifteen million dollars a series of four dams could be built that would provide all the navigation anybody would require, with a 9-foot channel.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. So this is a peculiarly expensive way of building a dam for navigation purposes. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Army engineers in a report recommended the building of a dam at Aurora, which is about 16 miles from Gilbertsville, and they themselves recommended a dam from Aurora back to the Tennessee line.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; and they also recommended an alternative plan of four lower dams, which would leave the water in the channel of the river throughout, as the Ohio River is canalized.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator did not state the alternative proposition in his remarks.

Mr. TAFT. No; I was talking about a particular gentleman, and I merely repeated his views on a proposal which would cost only eleven to fifteen million dollars instead of $27,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. My information is that originally the Army engineers recommended the construction of seven dams in the lower Tennessee, between the mouth, at Paducah, on the Ohio River, and Muscle Shoals, or the Pickwick Landing Dam. They not only recommended four but recommended seven originally. Of course, the seven, being lock dams of the ordinary river type, would cost less than this one dam at Gilbertsville. But at that time the Army engineers were only considering the question of navigation through locks and dams similar to those in the Ohio and other rivers which have been canalized, or where an attempt has been made to canalize them.

Mr. TAFT. I understand that.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that when we consider the construction of one great dam to take the place of these the testimony of the engineers, I think, conduces to show that it is much safer and easier to navigate a river where there is a large body of water covering miles in width than merely attempting it in the narrow channel within the banks of the river itself.

Mr. TAFT. I do not admit that. As a matter of fact, I think that navigation is very much more dangerous on a large lake than it would be if this river were in fact canalized by a series of dams.

Mr. BARKLEY. The engineers who have testified about this, as I recall, do not agree to that statement.

Mr. TAFT. A great many of the engineers do agree to that statement. There was one man who testified the other day. Any riverman will state—and the Senator has seen many of them—that they prefer a canalized river to any tremendous lake, subject to storms and all sorts of hazards.

Mr. BARKLEY. There may be difference of opinion about the preference of rivermen, just as there is a difference of opinion about the preferences of Senators. But I am speaking of the testimony of the engineers who have testified on this subject. The point I am coming to is that the original seven dams, or whatever the number was, were only for navigation. The proposed dam combines navigation and flood control, and I think the Senator would agree that the type of low dams contemplated by the Army engineers originally would be of very little value in flood control.

Mr. TAFT. I think they would be of about as much value as the large one.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a difference between the engineers and the opinion of the layman.

Mr. TAFT. No; they would be of no value in flood control, any more than the large dams, which I wish to discuss.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think the Senator is an expert on either large or small dams. But be that as it may, the increased cost of the large dam as compared with the four or seven small ones, whichever it is, is made necessary because this dam is to serve a triple purpose, flood control, navigation, and incidental power.

Mr. TAFT. I so stated when I started my remarks.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am frank to say that the power facilities of this dam are incidental, not primary.

Mr. TAFT. My point is that if the only purpose of this dam is navigation we can get navigation about ten or eleven million dollars cheaper than this dam is giving it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I have experienced so much trouble in learning when I am right and when I am wrong on this question that for the first time in my senatorial career I have voted on both sides. But I have a notation here that it was stated in the House debates on the subject that to make the Gilbertsville Dam of any practical value additional water must be brought to the dam from the Ohio River through a canal the construction of which will cost $150,000,000 additional. Is that true?

Mr. TAFT. I would think it not true.

Mr. GLASS. I ask the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Who made that statement?

Mr. GLASS. It was made in the debates in the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. By whom?

Mr. GLASS. That I do not know. The information is sent to me by a Representative from Virginia.

Mr. BARKLEY. The statement is so ludicrous that really it seems utterly impossible to imagine anyone who knew anything about the flow of water making a statement like that, that in order for the Gilbertsville Dam to be effective in flood control, it would be necessary to pump water from the Ohio River from above the dam so that it would run back into the river so that it would protect the people from the floods on the Ohio River and the Tennessee.

Mr. GLASS. With respect to the adversaries in this discussion, they regard each other's statements as ridiculous, and I do not know which is ridiculous. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. No one has suggested that a canal be built from the Ohio River to the Tennessee River, or to any other river, in order to get water into the Tennessee River through the back yard so that it might flow out of the dam down into the Ohio River, from which it was taken.

Mr. GLASS. I do not know whether the man who made that statement in the House was from Kentucky or from Tennessee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would not want to think that anyone in the House from either of those States would have little enough sense to make such a statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure no one from Tennessee made the statement.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The point the Senator is discussing, as to flood control and navigation, and the type of dams to be built, was one of the issues in court in the so-called Eighteen Company case, which was passed on by the Supreme Court recently. Is the Senator aware that the finding made by the trial court stands undisputed on that issue, where evidence was adduced on both sides to the effect that the only kind of dam that will afford navigation facilities and flood control is the high dam, and that the several dams proposed in lieu of the Gilbertsville Dam would have no flood-control value whatever?

Mr. TAFT. I am absolutely aware of that statement, and I have not said anything to the contrary. The point I am trying to make in regard to navigation is that if all we want is navigation we can get it about ten or twelve million dollars cheaper, and it is not fair to allocate to navigation $27,000,000 when we can get better navigation for $12,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit, the court made a finding on that very point contrary to the statement the Senator has just made. Their finding was that navigation from high dams was much superior, took less time, and was better in every way than navigation which came from low dams.

Mr. TAFT. I did not understand the decision to be that, merely that there was evidence to that effect, upon which they would necessarily have to rely in deciding the question of the constitutionality. As a matter of fact, the ordinary type of river transportation, in the opinion, I think, of nearly every expert on river transportation is very much safer on a canalized river such as the Ohio is today. There have been practically no accidents in many many years on the Ohio River. There has been one serious accident on Lake Pepin on the Mississippi River, where a boat was sunk and a hundred people drowned many years ago, simply because of high waves such as frequently rise on a lake of that character.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much does the Senator estimate it would cost to construct seven low dams instead of the proposed dam?

Mr. TAFT. As I understand it, four would take the place of this particular dam.

Mr. McKELLAR. And at what cost?

Mr. TAFT. My understanding is $11,000,000, but I have allowed up to $15,000,000 just to play safe.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator does not know what the four dams he speaks of will cost?

Mr. TAFT. The estimate which I have read in one of these reports is $11,200,000; something of that sort.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is that all it will cost for four dams?

Mr. TAFT. For four low dams.

Mr. McKELLAR. Four low dams will cost $11,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the second question is one of power. Of course, there seems to be a little question as to whether or not this dam is really intended to provide power. It is not included in the ultimate estimate. They say it is ultimately going to cost $95,000,000. As a matter of fact, it appears from the Senator's statement that the real cost will be $112,000,000, and they propose to produce, according to various estimates, anywhere from 100,000 kilowatts up to 150,000 kilowatts of power. I do not know on what that estimate is based. There is only this to be said about the dam as a power dam. In the first place, if we allot $35,000,000 to power, or even if we allot $30,000,000 or $25,000,000, it is more expensive than any other dam for producing power in the Tennessee Valley system. I do not think there is any question about that. There is some question about what it is going to cost. However, a reasonable estimate made by Mr. WIGGLESWORTH in the House, and not contradicted except in general terms, is that it is going to cost $277 a unit instead of $80 or $90 per unit cost on the dams higher up.

The one reason why power at this dam is peculiarly inappropriate is because the Ohio River does back up against the dam, and constantly reduces the head. The summer that I talked to the engineer to whom I previously referred, was that summer in which we had high water all through the summer, during which time the head at the Gilbertsville Dam would have been reduced 20 feet by the Ohio River backing up against the dam. The base of the dam is only 309 feet above sea level. They propose to keep the water in the dam, according to the testimony of the engineers, anywhere from 354 to 359 feet above sea level. Fifty feet is the greatest possible head they can get under any circumstances, and a large part of the time it will only be 30 feet. I do not know how the estimates are made. I only say that when the head is being cut down constantly by a constant rise in the Ohio River, the power cannot be reliable, and you cannot contract for the full amount of your power because half of the time you may not have it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a matter of fact, the Ohio River could not back up into the Tennessee River unless the Tennessee River were empty. Of course, if the dam were built and all the water that was impounded above the dam was held there, and no water permitted to be in the Tennessee River between the dam and the mouth of the river 23 miles below, the Ohio River might back up into it.

Mr. TAFT. The fall is only 7 feet, is it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not recall. I cannot state whether it is or not.

Mr. TAFT. The fall is 7 feet. Seven feet above pool stage in the Ohio.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have lived all my life at the mouth of the Tennessee River, and I know as a matter of physical fact that the Ohio River does not back up into the Tennessee River.

Mr. TAFT. It does not have to back up into the Tennessee River if it holds the Tennessee back. It raises the level of the Tennessee River. I do not care whether it backs up into the Tennessee River or whether it holds the Tennessee River back, so long as it raises the level of the Tennessee River you cut off the head at the Gilbertsville Dam.

Mr. BARKLEY. When the Ohio River is fuller than the Tennessee River, of course, the tendency would be to hold back the free flow of the Tennessee into the Ohio River, but when the Senator talks about the Ohio River backing up to this dam he is visualizing a situation where the water in the Tennessee would be held back above the dam to such a point that there would be practically no water in the mouth of the Tennessee River, between the dam and the Ohio, so that if a flood came down the Ohio River it could back up into the Tennessee River.

Mr. TAFT. No, but the base of the dam is approximately 309 feet above sea level. The Ohio River in pool stage is 302 feet above sea level. When it is 20 feet above pool stage it is 322 feet above sea level. The Senator is not going to say that the base of the dam is going to be lower than the Ohio River, 322 feet? Then my point is that you cut down the head at the Gilbertsville Dam; instead of 50 feet, you have only 30 feet of head.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is reading somebody else's speech that this water will back up as far as the dam.

Mr. TAFT. I am not reading anybody's speech. I got all the figures I could get on this question. It is purely a matter of mathematics, if the Senator can understand mathematics.

Mr. BARKLEY. Water will run down hill, and the only way by which the waters of the Ohio could run into the Tennessee would be that at flood stage, or any stage, the Ohio would be higher than the contiguous part of the Tennessee River.

Mr. TAFT. I do not care whether the water at the base of the Gilbertsville Dam is Ohio River water or Tennessee River water. Whatever water it is going to be, when the Ohio River is at 322 feet, it is going to be at least 322 feet at the base of the dam, and it is going to cut down the head on the Gilbertsville Dam 30 feet, and any engineer will tell you that that condition exists. I say it is an unreliable source of power, and that is perhaps the reason that they have omitted the provision for power machinery or anything else for the Gilbertsville Dam.

The ground on which this dam is most strongly urged is that of flood control. Frankly I think except for the problem of flood control, the dam would be so completely unjustifiable that I do not believe the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARK-

LEY] or the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] would be proposing it here today.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I recall 2 or 3 years ago that one of the power companies, I do not remember which—I remember the agent's name very well—made every effort in the world to acquire this dam site from the T. V. A., and surely a power company would not want to build a dam there unless it was a paying proposition.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator has asked me to provide a record where some of my statements may be found. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee to provide a record where his statement is to be found. If any power company wishes to acquire this dam, I think by all means the T. V. A. ought to sell it to them, because it certainly has no value for power.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will give the Senator the name of the man. He was an engineer representing one of the power companies, a man by the name of W. G. Waldo, and his testimony is of record in the House hearings of 4 or 5 years ago. I shall be very glad to have a copy of the hearings sent to the Senator so he may know what Waldo thought about it.

Mr. TAFT. I understood the Senator to say that he wished to acquire it for his company?

Mr. McKELLAR. He did.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The original site of this dam was surveyed, and the location fixed for the construction of a private power dam. What happened was that instead of the T. V. A. selling a power site to private interests, the T. V. A. bought it from this man and from his company, or paid them an amount agreed upon as compensation, a reimbursement for the expenses they had gone to in the construction work, or the survey and the preliminary work looking toward the construction of a power dam at that point.

Mr. TAFT. Was that at Aurora Landing?

Mr. BARKLEY. At Aurora Landing.

Mr. TAFT. That is 20 miles above, and where the question of power that I have discussed does not arise.

Mr. BARKLEY. The flow of the Tennessee River at Gilbertsville and at Aurora is practically the same. There would be no advantage as far as power is concerned at Gilbertsville over Aurora, because both are practically the same.

Mr. TAFT. How far above Gilbertsville is Aurora Landing?

Mr. BARKLEY. Twenty miles.

Mr. TAFT. And there is an additional fall of the river between Aurora Landing and the Ohio River.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. Of course, the farther you go up the river the more fall you get, because there being so much fall per mile, the more miles you travel the more fall you get. But practically the site which had been surveyed and on which a dam was to be constructed by private interests for power purposes was the same as the Gilbertsville site.

Mr. TAFT. And a good deal farther from the Ohio River, so that the problem that I have discussed here does not arise when you get up to Aurora Landing.

Mr. BARKLEY. Twenty miles would not make a great deal of difference.

Mr. TAFT. At least 10 feet more, which is a very material thing in the head of power.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the fall of the river as it may affect the machinery of a dam would not be any greater at Aurora Landing than it would be at Gilbertsville.

Mr. TAFT. I do not think the Senator gets my point.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am frank to say I do not.

Mr. TAFT. That the level of the Ohio River is so high that at Gilbertsville a large part of the time they have water well up from the base of the Gilbertsville Dam. At Aurora Landing that is not true. When you make power it depends on the difference between the level of the lake and the level at the base of the dam. That is what power depends on.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would only be true during the short time that the river is at flood stage.

Mr. TAFT. It does not have to be at flood stage. It may be 20 feet above pool stage, and it was almost continuously through most of the summer before last, and we did have the condition arising which I discussed, and you have it every winter. Sometimes for a month or two.

Mr. BARKLEY. For a month or two.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. Am I to understand that the Senator from Ohio is against the T. V. A. development?

Mr. TAFT. I am discussing only Gilbertsville. The T. V. A. development has already taken place, and I believe the Government should certainly make the best and most profitable use of it, and conduct the enterprise as it is now being conducted. I am not in favor of spending any more money on the development of dams as a general thing. Today I am interested in not spending it on this particularly inefficient and useless dam.

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator's contention today, that two of these dams should be cut out, would indicate to me that the Senator wants to stop the progress of the T. V. A. practically at its middle. Is that correct?

Mr. TAFT. I think I would be willing to stop the progress of the T. V. A. with about four or five dams completed, and the additional power installed that can be installed. I think I would be willing to do that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that for flood-control purposes the water behind the dam is constantly eliminated whenever opportunity offers, when it can be eliminated without unduly raising the level of the river below.

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. But for power purposes the water is kept as high as possible behind the dam, so that there will be sufficient water to generate power through dry spells.

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Obviously the proposal before us is either a power project or a flood-control project. It cannot be both. In my judgment, it is only a power project camouflaged as a flood-control project.

Mr. TAFT. I agree with the Senator; and I should like to discuss the question of flood control, because I think in that way we can better understand how the two purposes may be combined to some extent.

With regard to flood control, if we know when a flood is coming—which we do not—the water behind the dam would be at a height above sea level of 350 feet. For power purposes ordinarily it would be kept at between 354 and 359 feet. However, the dam is built high enough so that the level of the water could go up to about 375 feet above sea level. The claim is that when you see a flood coming you can somehow reduce it to 350 feet, although you want 359 feet for power use.

Then there is 25 feet of storage, in which there is 4,600,000 acre-feet.

Mr. TYDINGS. In that case a flood-control project is superimposed upon a power project.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. Without the power project, such superimposition would not be necessary.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct. The dam is built at least 15 feet higher than it would have been built if there had been no power.

Mr. TYDINGS. If we were building a flood-control project at this time with the idea of impounding the water during the flood and releasing it as soon as the flood was over, we could do the job for much less than is called for by the proposal under consideration. The point I wish to make is that this project is primarily a power project, to put the Government into the power business in competition with private industry. That has been the whole object. May I suggest to the Senator that when flood control was first mentioned in Congress in 1927 the purpose was to make fertilizer. At that time cheap fertilizer was going to save agriculture. We have built any number of dams since that time, and cheap fertilizer has not yet come. What is before us is only another piece of camouflage in order to obtain a power company under the guise of a flood-control project.

Mr. TAFT. I cannot analyze the motives behind the plan. What the Senator says may be true. However, so far as I am concerned, it seems to me obvious that the plan is not of any value for power, and I do not understand its proponents are even claiming it to be of any value so far as power is concerned. The whole force of the thing is flood control.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, as I understand the Senator's statement, he does not agree with the Senator from Maryland, who says it is entirely a power project. The Senator from Ohio says it is no good as a power project.

Mr. TAFT. I say that there may be a motive or desire to obtain more power. I have heard it suggested that there is a desire to bring power close enough to St. Louis so that the power can be brought into the city of St. Louis from the T. V. A. through a booster station. I think that suggestion is not warranted, in view of the President's recent statement that governmental activity is not to be extended in any way. However, those motives have been suggested.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that many communities in America need flood-control facilities. At Cumberland, in my own State, there is great need for a check on the Potomac River. There is need for flood control on many streams of America. If we were to confine the appropriation to flood control we would have enough money left over to take care of several other projects, but combining power with flood control results in other places in the country in need of some measure of flood protection being left with no funds whatsoever. In other words, we are taking flood-control money and developing power instead of using flood-control money for flood control to protect cities and towns and other property already in existence.

Mr. TAFT. However, if this were a flood-control project, I think I should be in favor of it, if it really could be shown to be a flood-control project. I have explained the theory on which it is claimed to be a flood-control project. It is claimed that through control of the water the level can be reduced to 350 feet and then raised to 375 feet, a difference of 25 feet, which, in a lake of the size contemplated, would be about 4,600,000 acre-feet. As a matter of fact, that storage apparently is no greater than already exists in the Tennessee River in that 186 miles. Reading from the original report of the Secretary of War and the Army engineers on the Tennessee River, House Document 328, it says:

The river flood channel has a large capacity for storage which it utilizes in its natural condition to regulate its stream flow and reduce flood discharges. The natural flood storage of the river channel of the main stream from Knoxville to Paducah, including backwater on the lower part of the tributaries, is estimated to be approximately 14,600,000 acre-feet. The section in which the Aurora Landing Dam pool alone is located has 4,800,000 acre-feet.

In other words, there is today a greater natural storage than the artificial storage which it is proposed to put on top of the lake behind the dam. No increase whatsoever in storage of water is made possible by the Gilbertsville Dam over what already exists in the valley. The only difference is that there is a control or regulation to a certain extent by opening the dam or closing it. The 4,600,000 acre-feet behind the dam can be controlled, whereas the 4,800,000 acre-feet of natural storage cannot be controlled. Yet when a flood starts, the water that comes down the Tennessee River goes into the Ohio, except for the 4,600,000 acre-feet which is stored behind the dam, or, if there is no dam, the 4,800,000 acre-feet which is stored in natural storage. So there is no real flood control involved.

So far as the matter of control is concerned, it is largely a fictional thing, particularly when we link power with it, because we cannot tell when a flood is coming. Floods have come at all times of the year. I think the records show that in the past 50 years there is no month in the year in which there has not been some flood in the Ohio River. If we keep the water at 359 feet, we shall not have 4,600,000 acre-feet. We shall have about two and a half million acre-feet, compared with the 4,800,000 which we can obtain today without touching the Tennessee River.

There is also this additional fact: When the river is at the level at which it was during the winter of 1937, the highest point it has reached, 347 feet above sea level at the mouth of the Tennessee River, that would mean 347 feet against the Gilbertsville Dam. Of course, if the Gilbertsville Dam were not there, it would have extended back for miles, not quite as far as the Gilbertsville Dam Lake itself, but in many respects almost as far.

So, as a matter of fact, we do not obtain any additional storage. We obtain only a certain amount of control. The control is a very doubtful thing. If we let the water out at the wrong time, or if we guess wrong as to whether or not it will rain 3 days from now, we will find that the actual control may do more harm than if we had no control at all. When Dr. Morgan built the dams in the Miami Valley, he put on the dams the statement that "These dams are flood-control dams, and they never shall be used for power." We have the constant incentive of people to obtain power, and to keep the water just as high as it is possible to keep it so that the power may be produced. Probably the control operates too late to bring the level down to the point where the dam will take care of a flood from the upper Tennessee River. Floods do not all come from the upper Tennessee River. The flood of 1937 in Cincinnati was created largely by rain within 50 miles on both sides of the river, up to 100 miles above Cincinnati, coinciding with the flood coming down the river.

The whole idea of a controlled reservoir is one which is extremely uncertain, and on which we cannot rely. So, I say the proposed dam is no good. It is twice as expensive as necessary for navigation alone. For power it is uncertain, and it is not even proposed to install power. For flood control it does not give one more acre-foot of flood control than we have today with the free Tennessee River. We are proposing to commit ourselves to the expenditure of $105,000,000. That is not money which we have, but money which we must borrow, money which we must add to a deficit of $4,000,000,000 which we shall have in the coming year.

If there ever was a toy, if there ever was anything which was developed merely as a beautiful picture, something to attract people's interest and look like a great public improvement, it is Gilbertsville Dam. If there ever was a toy which had no other use except to amuse those who are playing with it, Gilbertsville Dam is that toy.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Washington Sunday Star a week ago yesterday, February 12, carried the large headline:

Peace comes to power valley. T. V. A. utility feud dies with sale agreement.

Some of us who read those headlines felt that they correctly portrayed the situation, and that, after many years of warfare, peace had at last come to the Tennessee Valley. We, of course, knew that for years the power companies in the State courts, the Federal district courts, and in the Supreme Court of the United States had fought the T. V. A. They had waged war in every manner known to them in an effort to defeat the policies declared in the T. V. A. Act, in an effort to thwart the will and the purpose of the Congress of the United States as expressed in that act. Yet a few weeks ago the Supreme Court of the United States handed down the notable decision against the power companies and enjoined them to keep the peace.

A few days after the decision of the Supreme Court the T. V. A. bought at a fair and reasonable price the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. in the State of Tennessee. In view of the decision of the Supreme Court and the purchase by the T. V. A. of the properties of the Tennessee Power Co., there were those of us who felt that at last, after all these years, peace had come to the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. KING. I inquire where the money is coming from. I understand that an appropriation of $80,000,000 will be necessary to enable the T. V. A. to acquire the properties owned by private individuals.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will excuse me, I will get to that in a few moments. I will show exactly where the money will come from.

Mr. President, although there were those of us who hoped and believed that peace had come, we find a surprise attack made in the House of Representatives against the appropriations for the construction of the Gilbertsville and Watts Bar Dams by the T. V. A. The attack came in Committee of the Whole House, and was successful, and the parliamentary situation was such that it was not possible to get a vote in the House on the amendment which struck out the appropriations for the dams. I wish to advise the Senate that the House of Representatives as a House has not as yet passed on this proposition. The parliamentary situation was such that neither the full membership of the House nor the House, speaking as a House, could pass on the question.

On reflection it is not surprising, Mr. President, to find the war still going on over the development of the Tennessee Valley. Since 1916 when Woodrow Wilson as President of the United States, proposed the construction of the great dam on the river now known as the Wilson Dam until this good hour the war has gone on, with the power companies waging incessant warfare against the development of that great valley.

After the armistice when the Wilson Dam was between one-fourth and one-third completed the power companies and their allies in the House of Representatives cried "scrap it" and defeated the appropriation to continue the work looking to the completion of the dam.

Yesterday's Washington Post carried a story from Mr. Wendell L. Willkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, under the date line of New York, February 18. I quote from that newspaper story:

WILLKIE DEMANDS WRITTEN PLEDGE OF T. V. A. "LIMITATION"

Wendell L. Willkie, president of Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, challenged the Roosevelt administration to day to "put in writing" the President's press conference promise that the Government was limiting its power program.

The private utility executive, who recently emerged victorious from a long and bitter fight to obtain a "fair price" from the Tennessee Valley Authority for the Tennessee properties of Commonwealth & Southern, said that not until definite boundaries are established can industry be assured of freedom from Federal competition.

Mr. Willkie says that the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States must put in writing that there is a limitation on the power program. Mr. Willkie evidently does not trust the President and the Congress. He says that the President and the Congress must "sign on the dotted line." We have a statement here signed "on the dotted line." It is a statement from Mr. Willkie's power companies, made in 1921. General Beach, then Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, wrote a letter to all the power companies in which he extended them an invitation to come in and help the Government make some disposition of the Wilson Dam on the Tennessee River. General Beach said to the power companies:

From a strictly business, commercial standpoint, could private capital afford to undertake the Muscle Shoals development or make investment to use its output?

In answer to that query these same power companies of Mr. Willkie made this reply:

From a strictly business, commercial standpoint, and considering the comparable cost of production of power at existing water-power plants and proposed water-power plants in the southeastern territory, private capital could not afford to undertake the Muscle Shoals water-power development, nor make investments to use its output on the basis of present plans.

And the power companies went on to say further to General Beach:

Nor can the United States afford to invest additional public money to complete the dam and hydroelectric power plant at Muscle Shoals, Tennessee River.

Yet within a few months after this statement from these power companies that continue to wage war today, Henry Ford came to the Congress of the United States and said, "I will pay you 4 percent interest on $30,000,000 of the cost of the construction of the Wilson Dam; I will pay you $35,000 a year for the operation of the locks at that dam, and I will pay a sum of money into a sinking fund which at the end of 100 years will amortize and return to the Government every dollar the Government has put into Wilson Dam."

When Henry Ford made that offer, what did the power companies do? In spite of their declaration that they could not take over the Wilson Dam and that the Government could not successfully develop and operate it, they came rushing in to outbid Mr. Ford; and, in a monetary way, they did outbid Mr. Ford, because they said, "We will pay you, not 4 percent on $30,000,000 expended at the Wilson Dam, but we will pay you 4 percent on the full $50,000,000 expended there, and then, in addition thereunto, we will pay you $20 per horsepower for the increase of primary power at Wilson Dam due to the construction of the Norris Dam"—a sum of money amounting to some $1,200,000 every year. When they saw that the Government was determined to do something with this great project and that Henry Ford would take it, they rushed in to grab it. When they thought no one would make an offer, and they could keep the Government from doing anything with it, they wanted to say it was scrap, hoping that they might buy it as so much scrap, just as so many other great war projects were sold, as scrap.

In 1925 what did the power companies do? When Colonel Fiske, district engineer in the valley, invited anyone who desired to make a bid to come in and bid, the power companies came in and filed an application to secure a temporary license on every dam in the Tennessee River. They had said, "You cannot go down there and develop that power." Then they came in and asked for licenses on all of these dams. Why? They knew that if they got licenses on the dams the Government could not go forward and build the dams; that they could then do just as they pleased so far as building or not building the dams, or any of them.

Again, in 1930, the power companies pursued the same tactics with General Brown, the then Chief of Engineers.

So from the day this project was first suggested down to this good hour, in the committees of the Congress, on the floors of both Houses of Congress, in the courts of the land, the power companies have been waging war against the development of the Tennessee Valley. The Supreme Court has said to them, "We enjoin you to make peace." I want to see the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States say the same thing to them. Let us finish this job. Let us put an end to this warfare. Let us have peace. The way to do it is to go forward and provide the appropriations for these dams. When they are built by the Government, and only then, will there be peace with the power companies.

It has been suggested here that we ought not to appropriate money for the construction of the Watts bar dam because it is not economy to do so. I say to you deliberately that, on the contrary, if we do not provide this money, we shall be remiss in our duty to the taxpayers of the country. We shall fail to practice economy if we do not provide the appropriation for the Watts bar dam.

Why do I say that? I say it because we have already built the Norris Dam. We have some $35,000,000 invested in that great dam. By the construction of the Watts bar dam we shall add to the benefits to be derived from the Norris Dam in the sum of a million dollars a year that will go into the pockets of the taxpayers of the country. When we build the Watts power dam, power at the Watts bar dam will be stepped up to firm or primary power in the amount of 50,000 horsepower, because of the investment we already have at the Norris Dam. The power companies have said that that power is worth $20 per horsepower, and that is approximately what the T. V. A. is getting for its power at the other dams today. So if we multiply 50,000 horsepower by $20, we get $1,000,000 that we cannot afford to lose, but that we shall lose each year unless we go forward and build the Watts bar dam. The Norris Dam is there. It is waiting for us to construct the Watts bar dam to provide the benefit which will come from its construction.

If we fail to provide for the Watts bar dam, we let the water run from the Norris Dam, not in economy, but in wastefulness, because that water ought to be stepping up power at the Watts bar dam, and the proceeds of that power ought to be going into the treasury of the T. V. A., which means into the treasury of the taxpayers of the country.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] wanted to know how we are going to pay for the properties we have bought from the Tennessee Power Co. Over a period of some 50 years the Watts bar dam itself will bring into the Treasury some $68,000,000. We have agreed to pay only $78,000,000 for the Tennessee Power Co.'s properties; so the Watts bar dam alone, not including the income we are to derive from all the other dams that we have built and that are now under construction, will practically pay the bill for the properties we have bought from the Tennessee Power Co. As has been brought out here time and again, we cannot have 9-foot navigation on the river without the Watts bar dam. If we are to go forward with the navigation of the Tennessee River, we must have this dam; and if we are going to provide the proper kind of flood control for the Tennessee, the lower Ohio, and Mississippi Rivers that is envisioned in this great unified system on the Tennessee River, and that is so necessary, we must have the Watts bar dam.

The only difference between this project and the great project on the Ohio River, in the State of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who has just spoken, is that in the case of this project the Government of the United States will get back its investment dollar for dollar, whereas on the Ohio River we have expended some $150,000,000, and will get back practically none of this great sum of money.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HILL. I do.

Mr. BRIDGES. Do I correctly understand the Senator from Alabama to state that the Government of the United States will get back every dollar it puts into this project?

Mr. HILL. To be sure it will get it back. Certainly it will get it back.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish the Senator would explain how.

Mr. HILL. It will get back every dollar of money that goes into these great projects.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator explain that statement?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Take the case of the Watts bar dam alone, a dam which will cost about $35,000,000. That dam altogether will generate some 68,000 horsepower. At $20 per horsepower, that is an income each year of $1,360,000. That means that over a period of 50 years we shall get back not merely the $35,000,000 that we put into the dam, but over a period of 50 years—and I use the 50-year period because that is the period used in the Federal Water Power Act for private dam construction—we shall get back $68,000,000.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator, then, is going on the assumption that there will be no reduction in electric-power rates over a period of 50 years?

Mr. HILL. No; these figures are based on the way we are operating today. I will say to the Senator that even if there were a reduction in the rates, while it might take a little longer period of time, in the end every dollar would come back into the Treasury of the United States. With the exception perhaps of the Boulder Dam project, of all the millions, hundreds of millions and billions of dollars the Government of the United States has expended through the years on rivers and harbors and internal improvements of all kinds, where is there to be found another such project, where the entire investment of the Government will come back to the taxpayers of the country?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I understood the Senator to inquire whether or not there was any other project which would repay the Government's investment. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that every reclamation project is constructed under the obligation that its cost shall be fully repaid to the Government. In fact, reclamation projects may not be undertaken until a certificate goes forth to the effect that the project is feasible, and that the property under the project is capable of repaying its cost.

I say that merely in answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. HILL. In answer to that statement I will say that I understood that had been the policy, but that in most instances the Government has not gotten back its money.

Mr. ADAMS. We have not always been able to meet the drought and the grasshopper.

Mr. HILL. In most cases I understand that it has not been possible to meet the payments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HILL. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether he knows any reclamation project the cost of which has ever been paid back?

Mr. ADAMS. I do—the Carlsbad project in the State of the Senators from New Mexico.

Mr. McKELLAR. I congratulate New Mexico and the Senators from that State, because there are exceedingly few projects of that kind. In fact, I do not know any other except the one in New Mexico.

Mr. HILL. So, Mr. President, instead of the elimination of the appropriation for the Watts bar dam being a step toward economy it is a step which would deny the taxpayers of this country a return on their investment to which they are entitled. Fifty thousand horsepower at Watts bar dam made into prime power by the Norris Dam, which we already have, at $20 a horsepower, amounts to a million dollars a year that we would lose if we did not build this dam.

We hear much these days about national defense, and within a few days this body will be considering a great program for the construction of some 5,500 airplanes. One of the most important materials that goes into airplanes today is aluminum, and on the Tennessee River in the Tennessee Valley 46 percent of all the aluminum made in this country is produced at the Alcoa plant. Seventy-two percent of all the aluminum made in this country is made at the Alcoa plant on the Tennessee River and at Badin, N. C. If anything were to happen to the power plants on the Little Tennessee River, from which the Alcoa plant is today getting its power, where would the Alcoa plant turn for power, where could it turn? To the Watts bar dam and the Coulter Shoals Dam.

We recall a report which the War Department made on the power situation as it existed during the World War. In that report the War Department stated that if the war had lasted 1 more year there would have been a shortage of some 250,000 kilowatts of power in the Pittsburgh district. That is almost as much power as is being generated today on the American side of the Niagara River. The Federal Power Commission tells us that we are threatened at present with a shortage of power. The last issue of Fortune magazine says that today "the Army of the United States must get its gear in the industrial Northeast." When we develop great projects like the Tennessee Valley project, like the Fort Peck, the Grand Coulee, and the Boulder Dam projects no longer will we have the unfortunate and dangerous situation of having the Army gear located in one little section of this broad country.

Every reason would seem to dictate the construction of the Watts bar dam at this time. It is in the estimates of the Budget Bureau, it has not yet been stricken out by the House of Representatives. I prophesy that when we insert the provision today, as I believe we will, and the bill goes back to the House of Representatives, the House will retain the provision in the bill.

Navigation, flood control, economy, return of dollars to the taxpayers of the country, and even the national defense of the country dictate that we go forward and make the necessary appropriation and construct the dam.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee asked about reclamation a moment ago, and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] referred to the Carlsbad project in my State. I think I may say without boasting that the Carlsbad reclamation district was more prompt in making its payments than the water users on any other project in the United States. It met every dollar of obligation as it accrued, and, so far as I know, it never asked for a moratorium, remission of interest, or anything like that.

In connection with that project, and in connection with the discussion here today, I am prompted to add another thought. Recently, under the present administration, it was necessary to build for the Carlsbad project another dam and another reservoir, some 150 miles above the Carlsbad project itself, costing a little over $2,000,000. The water for that reservoir flows down the Pecos River, acting as a canal carrying water to Carlsbad. Without any thought of a flood-control feature the farmers of the Carlsbad irrigation district pledged the repayment of the entire sum of money that went into the construction of the Alamogordo Dam and Reservoir. During the progress of construction, before the dam was completed, one of the worst and most disastrous floods our State has ever experienced occurred, and, due to the construction which had already gone on in the building of the Alamogordo Dam, great flood damage was averted. I think, and the people of New Mexico think, that that dam and reservoir prevented a disastrous flood, which would undoubtedly have destroyed much property and perhaps many lives in Carlsbad, 150 miles away.

I have asked engineers to compile data and supply me with information as to what proportion of the cost of that dam and reservoir could properly be charged to flood control and flood protection. I think the farmers of the Carlsbad irrigation district are entitled to have a credit on the sum which they now owe the Government for the construction of that dam and reservoir, of whatever portion rightly should be charged to flood control, and at the proper time, when the information shall be fully assembled, I expect to offer a bill to that effect.

Mr. McKELLAR. What was the cost of the dam?

Mr. HATCH. A little over $2,000,000.

Mr. BRIDGES obtained the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for just a moment?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. Earlier in the day an inquiry was made as to certain cost figures, and I stated that I would endeavor to locate the figures. I find they are somewhat conflicting but they appear in the House hearings, pages 1636 and 1637. The first thing to which I wish to call attention is an interrogatory in which Mr. WIGGLESWORTH asked this question of Mr. Parker, the chief engineer:

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I just want the total figure for the present.

Mr. PARKER. If they are all filled, the plants alone, that is, without additional or subsidiary transmission facilities, the total cost would be $481,000,000.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. In addition to the transmission facilities?

Mr. PARKER. That is exclusive of the step-up and transmission facilities.

Then Mr. Ager, one of the T. V. A. authorities, said:

If you added another $80,000,000 for the transmission and substations I think you would have the ultimate development.

Mr. Blandford, another official of the T. V. A., then stated:

Subject to some checking on our part, for the installation of all of the units which would be problematical, and the building of any tributary projects that we have in prospect, plus the transmission, it might be around $550,000. That would be the aggregate.

In the Printing Office it was printed "$550,000," instead of "$550,000,000." I interrupted the Senator merely to make the figures available.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have listened with a good deal of interest today to the discussions and the debates upon the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. The amendment has been very ably discussed by the Senator from Colorado and the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. In my opinion they have presented in a very admirable way the basic arguments against the appropriation for the three dams referred to as recommended by the Appropriations Committee. In a very effective manner they have presented reasons for the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

I think the impression has been gained, certainly I have gathered it as a Member of this body from certain distinguished Members of the Senate, that people in the Tennessee Valley, people in Kentucky, and in the States in the particular sections represented by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], probably are unanimously for an appropriation along this line. So for the purposes of the RECORD, and to show the complete picture to the country, I should like first to introduce as part of my remarks, and ask the clerk to read a letter from the mayor of Paducah, the home city of the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
City of Paducah, Ky., February 11, 1939.

Hon. JACK MAY,

Congressman from Kentucky, Washington, D. C.

FRIEND MAY: Inclosed find copy of telegram to Maj. Bernard Smith, Nashville, Tenn., sent to him at his request.

On February 4, 1939, Senator MINTON, from Indiana, addressed a letter to Mr. Perry Pace, of the Perry Pace Button Works, Loogootee, Ind., in regard to the Gilbertsville Dam, and enclosed a letter dated January 25, 1939, from the Tennessee Valley Authority to the Senator written by John B. Blandford, Jr., general manager. This letter contained some very interesting data. Item 3 of the letter sets forth that the Gilbertsville Dam will be 150 feet high, its reservoir 184 miles long, estimated width of 2 miles when the pool is at its navigation level.

I have been advised that insurance companies classified Paducah for earthquake insurance on the same basis as California, due to the fact that in this area there are constant earth tremors. You are in a position to ascertain the correctness of this condition, and if it is shown to be correct, certainly the safety of the thousands of people that will dwell below the wall of the dam should be considered, for if there should be a recurrence of the thing that happened in the region of Reelfoot Lake with this wall of water above us, it would simply mean the elimination of Paducah, everybody and everything in it. It is not my intention to spread alarm, but a desire to get at the facts, and I sincerely hope that you will be able to assemble the necessary information as to the true facts.

This morning I received information that can be easily checked for its correctness, that the foundation of the proposed site of the dam is a type of shelly rock; that is, that there is a strata of rock with openings or sand between the strata that will have to be filled with concrete in an effort to establish a solid base. I am not an engineer but it strikes me as a layman that such a type of foundation would be extremely hazardous.

I will be glad to furnish you any information that I can gather from time to time, and will appreciate your advising me as to what positive evidence you can obtain along the lines suggested.

With kindest personal regards, and hoping that I will have an opportunity to see you in person sometime during the month of March, I am,

Your friend,

EDGAR T. WASHBURN, Mayor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to whom that letter is addressed?

Mr. BRIDGES. The letter is addressed to Representative MAY. I thought, inasmuch as it raised the question as to the safety of the distinguished floor leader's home city, and pointed out that it might be washed away, and everything in it destroyed, that he would have particular concern.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I have particular concern; and in spite of the letter of the mayor I am willing to take chances. I will say that I received a communication from the mayor since that letter was written, in which he states that his letter was based upon a total misapprehension and that there was likewise an incorrect interpretation placed upon it by the recipient of the letter who apparently used it in the debate on the floor of the House. I may say that I have also received telegrams from local organizations, clubs, and chambers of commerce and other organizations in the city of Paducah, contradicting any suggestion or implication contained in the letter just read.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am very glad of the confidence displayed by the distinguished floor leader of the Democratic Party, but if anything should happen in his home city to his friends and to other residents of that city, I want him to remember particularly that I have given due warning here, and I am thinking of their safety.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say to the Senator that I appreciate his solicitude about protecting Paducah from earthquakes. I have lived in Paducah, or within 18 miles of the city, all my life. What we are afraid of down there is not earthquakes but floods, and we had a very disastrous flood experience 2 years ago against a recurrence of which we are trying now to protect ourselves. So far as concerns the suggestion that the construction of a dam at Gilbertsville will produce earth tremors which will put Paducah on the same level with San Francisco, it would take a very fantastic engineering mind to conceive such a situation.

Mr. BRIDGES. I can appreciate that having survived a very vigorous campaign in Kentucky last year, the Senator probably has courage to feel that he and his friends can survive almost anything in that section, but I merely raised it as a point for consideration.

I have before me a letter from a Mr. William Heath, of the Birmingham Milling Co., of Birmingham, Ky., which I ask to have read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

BIRMINGHAM MILLING CO.,
Birmingham, Ky., February 16, 1939.

Hon. H. STYLES BRIDGES,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As a resident of Tennessee Valley, there are 75 to 80 percent of the people whose homes and business will be destroyed are opposed to the construction of this Gilbertsville Dam.

I notice from newspaper an organization called the Lower Tennessee Valley Association, whose members are composed of citizens outside the dam area whose business and homes will not be destroyed if this dam should be built, have sent resolutions to Members of Senate asking them to restore the Gilbertsville cut. The sentiment of the people who will have to be relocated if this dam should be built, is that this wasteful project should be voted out and not be restored, as the T. V. A. is putting under permanent flood thousands of homes and thousands of acres of good bottom farm land that is never damaged by the natural floods of the Tennessee River. In fact, the natural floods are more of a benefit to the farm land than damaging. This dam for navigation purposes, as proposed by T. V. A., will destroy what navigation there is on the Tennessee River, as the type of boats now operating on this river and other inland rivers could not operate on this lake without great danger to the boats from windstorms and other hazards created by building this great lake of water. The people of the valley understand that recommendations have been made to Congress for the construction of low-type dams that cost very much less than the Gilbertsville Dam and from navigation standpoint from Pickwick to the mouth of the river would be more practical and could be built with much less expense and save the relocation of thousands of families and the destruction of thousands of acres of land that would produce income for future generations.

Hoping this boondoggling project is killed for all time to come.

Yours respectfully,

WILLIAM S. HEATH.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have a telegram from one of the business firms of Paducah, Ky., which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

PADUCAH, KY., February 19, 1939.

Senator H. STYLES BRIDGES,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Understand that United States engineers have already made survey and prepared estimate of cost of a system of navigation locks and dams on Tennessee River from Pickwick to Paducah if found necessary for navigation, at a cost of $13,000,000. This figure can be verified from United States engineers' office. Paducah will be safe and secure with its flood wall when completed without Gilbertsville Dam. Since discussion in local newspaper of proposed 100- to 150-foot dam at Gilbertsville the growing opposition to this project is alarming because earthquake frequency here is only exceeded by that of California coast. The Titanic was a sink-proof boat but it didn't get back home. Gilbertsville Dam full of water and for any reason breaks would wash Paducah into the Mississippi.

IGERT TOWING CO.,
CAPT. LOUIS IGERT.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the telegrams and letters are really very amusing. There has never been an earthquake in Paducah of sufficient strength and volume to shake a tumbler on the slickest table that could be fabricated by the great furniture manufacturers of this country. It is rather strange to me that a few of my constituents, some of whom live close to me, should be corresponding with the Senator from New Hampshire and discussing engineering and seismic questions relating to the dam which it is proposed to construct at Gilbertsville.

I will say that in spite of the earthquakes and the thunder that is now coming to the Senator from my home town, I am still for Gilbertsville Dam, and I expect to put in the RECORD tomorrow, if it is deemed necessary, telegrams, letters, and communications which I have received from the same city, showing the overwhelming desire of the people that this dam should be constructed. There are certain situations connected with these correspondents which I could divulge to the Senate, which might show the motive behind their letters, but I have no desire to do so, because I do not think it will in any event have any effect on the vote.

Mr. BRIDGES. I know the Senator desires to be very fair, and not give the impression that everybody in his section of the State, particularly in his home city, including the mayor, is in favor of this project, and has not real concern as to the danger that might come to his neighbors, and his friends, and their property, and so forth, should this dam be constructed.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator sent me a copy of a letter and asked me if I objected to him putting it in the RECORD. The letter is addressed to me, dated the 17th day of February. I have not received the original of the letter, but if the Senator desires to put the copy in the RECORD, I have no objection. I congratulate the Senator on being able to receive copies of my mail before I get it, so that he knows what is in it in advance of my receipt of it.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wanted to be perfectly fair. Inasmuch as the distinguished Senator has no objection to my placing in the RECORD the letter that is addressed to him, and I merely have a copy—

Mr. BARKLEY. Has the Senator any more of my mail which he desires to put in the RECORD? If so, I should like to see it before he does so.

Mr. BRIDGES. I will identify any communications which are addressed to the Senator. I should like to have the letter to which I referred read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Senator, Washington, D. C.
PADUCAH, KY., February 17, 1939.

MY DEAR MR. BARKLEY: I am a Democrat and am interested in the best welfare of all the citizens in our large, fine country, but I want to take exception to you in your stand in favor of the Gilbertsville Dam, and the object of this letter is to point out why I think you should oppose it.

The reasons given for the construction of dam, as I understand it, are as follows:

Cheap power: I am of the opinion that if one figures the interest on the amount of money the Government is investing in this dam (for the power part of it), and adds to this the reduction of tax receipts from the present utilities companies, and adds the reduction in taxes from the valuable farming lands that will be covered up, the maintenance of the dam and the power equipment and the cost of distribution of this power that you will find out the power will not be any cheaper to the consumer (meaning the people of the United States as a whole).

Then, too, I understand that even the T. V. A. are not planning on any installation of the power units in the present program, and that they admit these power units will only be added later, if and when the demand for the power presents itself.

So I can't see why cheap power is any argument for it.

Navigation: I have worked for the Ayer & Lord Tie Co. at the marine ways here in Paducah for some 8 or 9 years, and have been associated with river navigation for the past several years. I want to say to you that I am sure this dam, if ever completed, will destroy navigation on the Tennessee River. Our flat bottom, low-deck boats and barges are not built to withstand such wind and swells we will have on such a large body of water. It is true that boats can be built that will navigate this pool, but such craft will not be practical to operate in the rivers below and above this pool. To transfer the freight from one type boat and barge at each end of the pool will make the cost of transportation too high. Not only this, but the investment in the two classes of boats and barges, one kind for the lake and the other kind at each end of the lake, would make the investment for the transportation too high.

Then there is no reason for it for navigation, because if the present dams are properly handled they can maintain a 9-foot channel in the Tennessee River clear to its mouth at all times of the year. There is already enough water impounded above for this purpose.

Therefore it is a settled fact that we do not need this dam for navigation. Then, why spend $95,000,000 on the present size of our Nation's debt, when we don't need it?

Flood control: I am opposed to it for flood control. I am of the opinion that we do not need it and I cannot see how impounding that much water above us will help us in a flood. Right now we have a stage of river at Paducah of about 48 feet which is 5 feet above flood stage here, and already some of our citizens are having to move out of their homes. In last night's Sun-Democrat there was a statement by Mr. Barron of Cairo, who is the Government river forecaster, which stated that the increased release from the Pickwick Dam would put our crest up 1 foot more. If they can do this to us with the Pickwick Dam, which is only very small in comparison with the proposed Gilbertsville Dam, I am saying to you that if we impound as much water above us as the Gilbertsville Dam will hold, which will be some 30 to 50 feet higher than our disastrous flood of 1937, if for any reason the Gilbertsville Dam would break, or if an earthquake would come along like there was one in 1812 when the Reelfoot Lake was formed and this dam was broken, the people of Paducah would be washed into the Mississippi River before they could cry for help.

If the pool is held with water in it, which it would have to have for power, then it is of no use in case of a flood. Right now the Pickwick Pool is full. It has been practically full all summer and they are not using it for power. They filled it up in the summer time and made the Tennessee River go down so low that I know of some boats that were caught out and one could walk all around them on dry land. So, it has already been demonstrated that the dams will not help us during a flood.

Then, why do we need this dam?

Yours very truly,

E. EARL CURTIS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. To what school of engineering does Mr. Curtis belong?

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not know. Evidently he is a friend and constituent of our distinguished majority leader [Mr. BARKLEY], because the letter was addressed to him, and I received only a copy.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was just wondering to what school of engineering he belongs.

Mr. BARKLEY. He probably belongs to the "earthquake" school.

If the Senator will yield, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether or not there have been any unusual tremors or earthquakes at Norris Dam, Pickwick Landing Dam, Wheeler Dam, or at any other dam since the T. V. A. project was begun.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have lived in Tennessee for only 45 years. There has not been any in those 45 years. Mr. Curtis says there was one in 1812. I do not go back quite that far. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. There was an earthquake about 140 years ago which created Reelfoot Lake. I was wondering whether there had been any increase in the frequency or the force of earthquakes at Norris Dam, for example, Pickwick Landing Dam, Wheeler Dam, Hiwassee Dam, or any of the other dams.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have never heard of it. This is the first time I have ever known the earthquake equation to be introduced into the debates.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have before me a resolution adopted at a mass meeting of the citizens of Union, Webster, Hopkins, and Muhlenberg Counties, in western Kentucky, four counties in the sovereign State of Kentucky, so ably represented by the distinguished majority leader from Kentucky. I ask to have the resolution read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

RESOLUTION

At a general mass meeting of citizens of Union, Webster, Hopkins, and Muhlenberg Counties, in western Kentucky, attended by the mayors and city officials of Sturgis, Ky., Providence, Madisonville, Mortons Gap, and Earlington, and other towns, working miners, mine owners, farmers, business and professional men, held under the auspices of West Kentucky Mining Institute, at Earlington, Ky., on the evening of Tuesday, January 31, 1939, to discuss, consider, and take action concerning the present crisis which brings face to face with extinction the only major industry of western Kentucky—the production of bituminous coal—the meeting was addressed by Lander Chisholm, mayor of Earlington; Dr. Harper Gattton, past president of Kiwanis International; John Daniel, chief of the Department of Mines and Minerals of Kentucky; Ruby Laffoon, late Governor of Kentucky; and John D. Battle, secretary of National Coal Association.

Ray Cobb, chairman (West Kentucky Mining Institute), presiding.

R. M. Nance, president of Progressive Miners' Union, moved the adoption of the following resolution, which was seconded by M. K. Gordon:

Resolved, That it is the deliberate sense of this meeting that it go on record as opposed to existing and suggested governmental action threatening the destruction of our homes, our jobs, and our businesses.

We oppose the Tennessee Valley Authority and its projects as not being national in scope; it pretends to flood control, with ulterior objects; it is intended to subsidize the production of hydroelectric energy for a local area at the expense of the Nation; it operates to subsidize, with tax money, a substitute for the bituminous coal of western Kentucky as employed in the generation of power and other purposes; and will displace such coal and take away the source of subsistence of additional thousands of miners and their families and people dependent on the mining industry.

Especially we oppose further appropriations for the support of the Gilbertsville Dam project, not only unnecessary and unprofitable to any but a few localities, while injurious to many, but as promoting prospectively the further destruction of the western Kentucky coal field and its people.

A true copy.

Attest:

RAY COBB, Chairman.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have also a resolution adopted by the Kiwanis Club of Madisonville, Ky., another community in the sovereign State of Kentucky, represented by the senior Senator from Kentucky, disapproving of the Gilbertsville Dam. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

RESOLUTION

Resolved by the Kiwanis Club of Madisonville, Ky., in regular meeting assembled, That we approve the action of the House of Representatives of the United States in refusing to appropriate money for the construction of the needless Gilbertsville Dam project, which we consider as worse than useless in that its construction would work the destruction of the coal industry of western Kentucky, from which the counties of western Kentucky coal field draw their life's blood; and also we approve it because such action shows a tendency on the part of our Representatives to conserve the taxpayers' money; further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be furnished by the secretary to each of our Senators and to the Representatives in the House of Representatives, and also to the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee of the United States Senate, whose chairman is Senator CARTER GLASS.

Attest:

W. W. CRICK, President.

WM. R. PERRY, Secretary.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I now have a letter from Harold J. Weeks, of Chattanooga, Tenn., enclosing an editorial from the Chattanooga Free Press, both of which I ask to have read. I will say that Mr. Weeks is the only man from whom I have introduced any communication who specifies that he is a Republican. I know Senators will not for that reason alone discount what he says, because evidently he is a gentleman of very high standing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter and editorial will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., February 18, 1939.

The Honorable H. STYLES BRIDGES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I hope you will pardon the presumption on the part of a Tennessee Republican in addressing you, but as I feel that our representation in the upper House is not in harmony with my views, I am sure you will lend me your ear.

I, like other Republicans in Tennessee, appeal to you to stop the inroads of Government in business. The program of the Tennessee Valley Authority is the beginning of the end of the American form of government. Regardless of the desire of the gentleman from the Second District of Tennessee to expend Government funds in his district, the great majority of Republicans of Tennessee and the decent Democrats of the State would be glad to see the activities of this great socialistic Government experiment curtailed.

The recent tentative agreement of the Tennessee Valley Authority to purchase the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. will virtually bankrupt the counties of middle Tennessee and, worse than that, will establish Government in business as a constitutional right. Unless this program is halted at once by the action of Congress, there will grow up within this State a vast machine of political patronage and a budding dominion of Russian influence. Private initiative will be killed and permanent Government subsidy of indolence and graft will develop.

The policy of the Government in the disposal of "incidental power" as exemplified in the building of Boulder Dam has been ruthlessly cast aside, and the people of Tennessee are to be saddled with a socialistic experiment un-American in conception and un-American in conclusion.

I enclose the editorial page of the Chattanooga Free Press for Friday, February 17. It tells the story. You may desire to show it to some of your Democratic colleagues.

Very truly yours,

H. J. WEEKS.

[Enclosure]

[From the Chattanooga Free Press]

PUBLIC POWER FALLACY REVEALED

Commissioner Leon Jourolmon, in a single comment on his opposition to the proposal to tax public power enterprises revealed the crass insincerity of the whole program. Said Mr. Jourolmon, in effect: "If we tax public power, we defeat the cheap power aim of the movement."

One could hardly have expected such a frank statement of the real aims of public power, even from the bold and blasting commissioner.

Public power, the commissioner admits by his position, is in reality no cheaper than private power; it merely reduces the bills of the consumer and makes the taxpayer pay them instead.

President Jo Conn Guild said some time ago that if the power company were not taxed and were relieved from the burden of interest on a large part of its investment, like the T. V. A., he could sell power to the public at rates lower than the T. V. A. and its affiliated municipalities promised.

History, past and current, lends conviction to this statement. Governmental enterprises are always operated at a larger production cost than private enterprises.

Now comes Mr. Jourolmon and admits that the premise set up by Mr. Guild was sound—that if public power pays taxes it will not be able to give cheap power to the consumer.

And if public power doesn't pay taxes as the power companies have been doing, somebody is going to foot the cost.

Who can it be but other taxpayers?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I understand from the majority leader that he would like to close the session at 5 o'clock. Inasmuch as I have more to say, I am perfectly willing to conclude my remarks today at this time and finish them tomorrow if that is agreeable.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Shackelford Miller, Jr., of Kentucky, to be United States district judge for the western district of Kentucky, vice Elwood Hamilton.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Edmund J. Brandon, of Massachusetts, to be United States attorney for the district of Massachusetts, vice Francis J. W. Ford.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of John T. Cahill, of New York, to be United States attorney for the southern district of New York, vice Lamar Hardy, resigned.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Herschel W. Arant, of Ohio, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, to fill a position created by the act of Congress of May 31, 1938; and Horace Frierson, Jr., of Tennessee, to be United States attorney for the middle district of Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state in their order the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

This concludes the Executive Calendar.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE—SHACKELFORD MILLER, JR.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Committee on the Judiciary today has reported the nomination of Shackelford Miller, Jr., to be judge for the western district of Kentucky. Inasmuch as that judgeship has been vacant for several months, and it is necessary to have the judge take charge, and inasmuch as a new term of court begins at Louisville in a few days, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, ordinarily I object to requests of that nature. I think, however, that the Senator's statement sets forth an emergency situation, so I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, February 21, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 20, 1939

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Shackelford Miller, Jr., to be United States district judge for the western district of Kentucky.

POSTMASTERS

FLORIDA

Sarah F. Pryor, Fort Walton.
Frederick S. Archer, Howey in the Hills.
Coy L. Brock, Vernon.

GEORGIA

Robert W. Knight, Cartersville.
Lollie L. Ward, Commerce.
Theo. B. Little, Cornelia.
Kirby A. Kemp, Cumming.
John F. Carter, Gainesville.
Cora W. Rogers, Jasper.
Lida Simpson, Norcross.
Sarah K. Scovill, Oglethorpe.
Herman C. Titshaw, Pitts.

MICHIGAN

William V. Clegg, Eaton Rapids.
John D. Mershon, Saginaw.

LXXXIV—102

OREGON

George B. Holmes, Eagle Point.

PUERTO RICO

Mario Perez Grau, Mercedita.

TEXAS

Edward F. Gaston, Dayton.
Effie P. Minnock, Galena Park.
Fred Boothe, Gonzales.
Joe C. Martin, Itasca.
Pauline L. Bogatto, Lamarque.
Maud Collier, Pelly.
Daniel J. Quill, San Antonio.

VERMONT

Wayland N. Hamel, Plainfield.

VIRGINIA

Mrs. Johnnie Wilson, Fieldale.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We wait, dear Lord, with quiet thought, with quiet prayer, and with a sense of Thy fatherhood. For all Thy mercies we praise Thy holy name. Draw nigh unto us and give vision, tenderness, freshness, and power richly to enjoy. How blessed are those tides of emotion when Thou art near; the horizon widens and the soul feels the higher state of assurance. Thou, the giver of peace, guard us against discord and enmities. Gird us with patience, bounding hope, and with strength to live nobly. Raise up those in our country who with singleness of purpose and clear understanding will help our people to the knowledge of Thy ways and will. May the glorious day soon dawn when the nations shall awaken to the rich privileges of the kingdom of God on earth, in which wisdom is more precious than gold, yea, than much fine gold. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 17, 1939, was read and approved.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief editorial on Oil As Farm Relief.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on three topics—the R. F. C., His Holiness Pope Pius, and the Library of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a memorial adopted by the Oregon Legislature asking Congress to call a constitutional convention to amend the Constitution by adopting the Townsend plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by incorporating therein letters which I have recently addressed to leaders of old-age pension organizations in this Nation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Appendix a letter I received, together with my reply.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC-BUILDING CONSTRUCTION

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report back favorably a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 99

Resolved, That a letter from the Postmaster General and the Acting Secretary of the Treasury transmitting to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives a report showing by States all construction projects selected under acts for public-building construction, and projects remaining eligible for consideration under the acts approved August 25, 1937, and June 21, 1938, and future authorizations be printed as a House document.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 1, strike out the word "a" and insert in lieu thereof the word "the."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. Today is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

REPEAL OF CERTAIN ACTS OF CONGRESS

The Clerk called the first bill on the calendar, H. R. 3233, to repeal certain acts of Congress (pocket vetoed).

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

OIL WORLD EXPOSITION

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 79, authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the Oil World Exposition at Houston, Tex., to be held April 24 to 29, 1939, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is this the usual resolution?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Yes; except that it is unusual in that it will not cost the Government of the United States a penny.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is mighty unusual.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to invite by proclamation, or in such other manner as he may deem proper, the States of the Union and all foreign countries to participate in the proposed Oil World Exposition, to be held at Houston, Tex., from April 24 to 29, 1939, inclusive, for the purpose of exhibiting samples of fabricated and raw products of all countries produced by the petroleum industry; and the exhibiting of the tools and equipment used by the industry; and bringing together buyers and sellers for promotion of trade and commerce in such products.

Sec. 2. That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the Oil World Exposition, to be held at Houston, Tex., from April 24 to 29, 1939, inclusive, by the Oil World Exposition, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign buildings or exhibits at the said exposition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the said exposition to sell within the area of the exposition any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling or exposure the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal from entry hereunder for consumption or entry under the general tariff law: Provided further, That imported articles provided for herein shall not be subject to any marking requirements of the general tariff laws, except when such articles are withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, in which case they shall not be released from customs custody until properly marked, but no additional duty shall be assessed because such articles were not sufficiently marked when imported into the United States: Provided further, That at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the exposition any article entered hereunder may be abandoned to the Government or destroyed under customs supervision, whereupon any duties on such article shall be remitted: Provided further, That articles which have been admitted without payment of duty for exhibition under any tariff law and which have remained in continuous customs custody or under a customs exhibition bond and imported articles in bonded warehouse under the general tariff law may be accorded the privilege of transfer to and entry for exhibition at the said exposition under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: And provided further, That the Oil World Exposition shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this act, and that the actual and necessary customs charges for labor, services, and other expenses in connection with the entry, examination, appraisement, release, or custody, together with the necessary charges for salaries of customs officers and employees in connection with the supervision, custody of, and accounting for articles imported under the provisions of this act, shall be reimbursed by the Oil World Exposition to the Government of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriation from which paid, in the manner provided for in section 524 of the Tariff Act of 1930.

Sec. 3. That the Government of the United States is not by this resolution obligated to any expense in connection with the holding of such exposition.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

REAPPORTIONMENT OF COTTON ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 660) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, to provide for the reapportionment of cotton acreage allotments not planted by farmers entitled thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Does the gentleman think that he will be inclined eventually to object to the bill?

Mr. CHURCH. No; I do not believe that I am inclined to object to the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The only reason that I am in a hurry about it is that the planting season begins rather early in the southern section of the country. This simply continues what is already in the act and has been for the past year, reallocating any unused acreage in the county. It does not affect the allotment. I do not think there will be any objection to it at all.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice for the time being.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3800) to amend section 8 (e) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This is a rather important bill, and I know there are some Members who expect to offer amendments to it. I think the matter ought to come up at an early date, but I think there ought to be more discussion and consideration given to it than can be given on the Consent Calendar. For that reason I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The gentleman understands that even on the Consent Calendar there is full opportunity for amendment. Amendments may be offered and discussed.

Mr. HOPE. That is true, but only under the 5-minute rule; and there are Members who think the matter ought to be discussed more at length. This is rather important, and for that reason I think it should go over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING CERTAIN OFFICERS, ETC., TO ADMINISTER OATHS TO EXPENSE ACCOUNTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3646) to authorize certain officers and employees to administer oaths to expense accounts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understand that this bill extends the law respecting the administering of oaths to travel accounts and other expenses, designating certain ones who may do that. Those mentioned in the bill may take the oaths when designated by some authority. Is that right?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. With that understanding, I have no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. The bill is recommended by the Bureau of the Budget and also by the Comptroller, and I assure the gentleman the Comptroller will not recommend any legislation to this House if he thinks it is not to the interest of the country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the Sundry Civil Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 487), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 8. Postmasters, assistant postmasters, collectors of customs, collectors of internal revenue, chief clerks of the various executive departments, independent establishments, and other Government agencies, or of bureaus thereof, the superintendent, the acting superintendent, custodian, and principal clerks of the various national parks and other Government reservations, superintendent, acting superintendent, and principal clerks of the different Indian superintendencies or Indian agencies, chiefs of field parties, and any officer or employee of any executive department, independent establishment, or other Government agency, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, who shall have been designated in writing for such purpose by the head of the department, establishment, or agency concerned, are required, empowered, and authorized, when requested, to administer oaths, required by law or otherwise, to accounts for travel or other expenses against the United States, with like force and effect as officers having a seal; for such services when so rendered, or when rendered on demand by notaries public, who at the time are also salaried officers or employees of the United States, no charge shall be made; and no fee or money paid for the services herein described shall be paid or reimbursed by the United States."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EXEMPTION OF AMERICAN VESSELS UNDER 200 TONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 950) to exempt from the provisions of Draft Convention No. 53 of the International Labor Conference Treaty of 1936 all American vessels under 200 tons.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in accordance with the authority granted in the second clause of article 1 of the International Labor

Conference Treaty Draft Convention No. 53 adopted by the International Labor Conference at Geneva in 1936 and ratified by the United States Senate in 1938 during the third session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, that all vessels of less than 200 gross registered tonnage owned by citizens of the United States of America shall be excepted or exempted from the provisions of the said treaty.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That pursuant to the authority granted in the second clause of article 1 of the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936, ratified by the President of the United States on September 1, 1938, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, given June 13, 1938 (being International Labor Conference Treaty Draft Convention No. 53, adopted by the International Labor Conference at Geneva in 1936), vessels of the United States of less than 200 tons gross registered tonnage are hereby exempted from the provisions of such convention: Provided, however, That neither the ratification of the said convention by the President of the United States, nor the advice and consent of the United States Senate given thereto, nor any provision of the said convention as ratified, nor any provision of this act shall be deemed to alter, amend, or repeal any statute of the United States existing at the time of said ratification, or thereafter enacted, with regard to any such vessel of less than 200 tons gross registered tonnage."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to exempt all vessels of the United States of less than 200 tons gross registered tonnage from the provisions of the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936 (being International Labor Conference Treaty, Convention No. 53, adopted by the International Labor Conference at Geneva in 1936)."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call of the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that all bills eligible for call under the rule have been called.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2868) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate further insists upon its amendments Nos. 10, 13, 16, 17, 18, and 23 to the foregoing bill disagreed to by the House, asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONTINUATION OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 97. The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 97

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 4012, a bill to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the resolution by striking out, in line 7, the last word, "three," and inserting therein the word "one."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, do I understand this is in anticipation of a similar request to amend Resolution 96, to provide for 3 hours of general debate?

Mr. SABATH. That is correct. When we reach the other resolution I will ask unanimous consent to amend that from 1 hour to 3 hours.

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman would not follow the present request with a request to amend the resolution, House Resolution 96, so that that will be done?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I make another unanimous-consent request, to amend the resolution, House Resolution 96, which I will call up later, by striking out the word "one" and substituting the word "three"; so that there will be 3 hours of general debate instead of 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that in the resolution, House Resolution 97, in the seventh line, the word "three" be stricken out and the word "one" incorporated in lieu thereof; that in the resolution, House Resolution 96, line 8, the word "one" be stricken out and the word "three" incorporated. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman desire some time on the rule?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. I yield the gentleman 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is recognized.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield that I may prefer a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including a speech delivered yesterday in Statuary Hall.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield for me to prefer a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to include in the RECORD my own radio speech.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONTINUATION OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the bill (H. R. 4012) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Electrical Home and Farm Authority, which is operated in connection with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to continue to perform their respective functions until January 15, 1941. Furthermore, the bill increases the capital stock of the Disaster Loan Corporation, also operated in connection with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to $40,000,000; and it authorizes it to make additional loans which may be necessary, or to appropriate, as the result of possible disaster in 1939 or 1940.

It also amends section 9. It is a statutory affirmation. The question has been raised as to the validity of the jurisdiction, by certain owners and groups, owning some of the bonds. Consequently, that section has been inserted.

From what I understand, there is really no opposition to the bill. The only thing I have heard is that it should be extended for a longer period. It shows that the gentlemen on the other side have the utmost confidence in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its activities. In view of that fact, I shall not detain the House.

I will reserve the balance of my time. I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, my remarks on this measure will be primarily directed to the new Republican Members of the Congress.

We are about to extend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act for another year or more. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation proposal was a Republican baby. It was conceived by Herbert Hoover. It is his child. It was recommended by him and was adopted during his administration. It is the one Republican vehicle that the Democrats, when they came into power, maintained and used, and used very extensively and effectively, because it was based on sound principles.

It provided for loans on sound collateral that would be returned to the Government. It has done more to stabilize industry, to preserve credit, than all the panaceas of the New Deal combined. This proposal was about the only proposal of President Hoover the Democratic Party did not sabotage back in 1931 and 1932. All of the sound recommendations made by Herbert Hoover after the crisis of 1929 were deliberately sabotaged by the Democratic majority in the House, for political and partisan reasons, except this particular vehicle, which they took over and used. They have loaned almost $10,000,000,000 under the provisions of the act. Had it not been for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, it is my opinion that not only would the banks have closed, but all credit would have been paralyzed. The railroads would have gone and the insurance companies would have followed them, with a total collapse of credit in the United States. It was this Republican measure, used afterward as a vehicle by the Democrats, that to a large degree stabilized industry and preserved our institutions. Unfortunately, however, after 6 years of the New Deal, we find a very deplorable condition in our country. The Democratic Party, after running up a deficit of an average of over $3,000,000,000 a year, or a total of $20,000,000,000 in 6 years, to bring about recovery, now faces a situation in which there are 12,000,000 people unemployed and four or five million more on part time.

The main objection to the New Deal is simply that it has not worked, it has not functioned, it has not done what the people wanted it to do, it has not done what its backers promised to do: To bring about recovery, to restore employment, and to put American people back to work. When we are discussing this question of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its continuance, it is only right to ask ourselves: "Why has not the New Deal worked? Why has it failed? Why has practically all of its policies broken down and collapsed, whether it be the farm policies, the industrial policies, or business policies? Why is it that today 12,000,000 people are unemployed and other millions on part-time employment? Why is business at a standstill? The answer is that this administration has deliberately—the first administration in history so to do—has deliberately attacked, vilified, hampered, harassed, and abused business, thereby destroying confidence; and fear pervades the land.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The gentleman states that this is the first administration that has vilified business. I ask him how about the administration of Theodore Roosevelt and its attacks on business?

Mr. FISH. The difference between this administration and the Theodore Roosevelt administration is that the latter sought to regulate business, not to strangle it, not to socialize it, not to use unconstitutional and unsound radical methods to destroy confidence in America.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FISH. I would like to proceed, if the gentleman does not mind.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I would like to ask the gentleman one question at that particular point.

Mr. FISH. Very well, I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Was the threat of the Theodore Roosevelt administration to take over the coal mines a step in the socialistic direction?

Mr. FISH. When he threatened, as the gentleman says, to take over the coal mines it was to bring these groups together; and he brought them together, brought about peace in the coal industry, and the owners and the employees cooperated for many years. It worked to promote employment and for the benefit of labor. The charge that we on the Republican side make is that the Democratic Party has taken over the Socialist Party, has taken over not only the Socialist program but has taken over the Socialists and elected former Socialists to the House or put them in charge of important posts in the Government service.

I do not for a minute say that the New Deal did not start off in a blaze of glory. I am not criticizing the American people for having elected Franklin Delano Roosevelt in 1933. In a depression that is the usual procedure.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. How about 1936?

Mr. FISH. I admit that he made a wonderful start toward balancing the Budget in 1933, that he restored confidence and that he put people back to work. Perhaps I can express it more clearly in football terms: The New Deal started off as a championship football team with a great quarterback in the person of Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Their plays clicked, they ran the ends, they smashed the line, and they marched down toward the goal post of recovery and employment. Every Republican and every Democrat desired it but before they reached that objective they changed their team, they brought in a whole host of substitutes, young rascals, half-baked theorists never identified with the Democratic Party in their lives, never elected to any office. Naturally their signals became confused and confidence was destroyed.

That former championship football team has been driven back yard by yard, yard by yard except temporarily in October and November of 1936 when conditions improved for a few months and the President said: "We planned it that way"—yard by yard that former championship team has been driven back until now it is on the 1-yard line in the coffin corner without a single program, without a single play, without a single policy to get it back on the highway to recovery, to restore confidence, and to put the American people back to work. Why? Simply because the Democratic Party has tried to socialize industry and has destroyed the private investment markets. There is no more Socialist Party; it hardly exists, except in high places under the New Deal.

The President in his speech complained of there being so much money idle in the banks, and idle manpower; and he wondered why this idle money was not used to put idle manpower to work. There is only one thing stopping it, and that is the deliberate destruction of confidence by this administration and its economic fallacies. Fear pervades the land from one end to the other; and I say to you younger Republicans: Until confidence is restored there will be no permanent employment in our country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, we are, I expect, going to cover quite a broad field today in these two bills, for many questions are involved in the continuance of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The two bills which we shall consider today deal with the continuation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Electric Farm Home Authority, the R. F. C. Mortgage Corporation, the Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Export-Import Bank. During the discussion of these questions other incidental subjects undoubtedly will be discussed, and I think we should start today in crystallizing certain policies concerning credit and our foreign relations. The credit policies of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are so interrelated to the credit policies of the Government that we cannot discuss the one without discussing the other. We all know that many extraordinary powers have been given to the President during the past 5 years. At proper times periodic reports will be made by a committee which has been designated by the Republican leadership to make a study of these extraordinary powers. This committee was organized last week and there has not been an opportunity for it to meet and make recommendations as a committee concerning these proposals today. Whatever I have to say concerning them, therefore, is said on my own responsibility and is not necessarily a reflection of the will or wishes of the committee as a whole.

The first problem to which we must give consideration is whether we want to continue the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to January 15, 1941, or let us say to June 30, 1941.

The Senate in taking action on a similar bill last week extended the date to June 30, 1941. This seems to be in keeping with common sense.

The date, January 15, 1941, would be somewhat embarrassing to a new administration, whether that administration be Republican or Democratic. It would not allow the Congress an opportunity to study the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its subsidiary agencies in time to make an intelligent report to the Congress previous to the time these agencies would go out of existence if we did not extend them. It would authorize us to do nothing more than quickly organize for the purpose of passing a simple resolution, as we are doing today, continuing the activities of these agencies. Of course, this would not be fair to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or any of its agencies, any more than it would be fair to the Congress or an incoming President. The incoming President will not take office until 5 days after the date set in this bill for expiration of these agencies. At the proper time, in a series of amendments to be offered, we will seek to extend the date of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and if provisions concerning some of the subsidiaries are not stricken from the bill, then we will seek to advance the date of their termination until June 30, 1941, instead of January 15, 1941.

Mr. Speaker, these questions of credit policy to which I refer have to do not only with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation but have to do with the extraordinary powers of the President to dominate and influence the domestic and foreign policies. It has to do with the silver purchase plan. It has to do with the gold purchase plan and the continuation of the power granted to the President to devalue and further devalue the gold content of the dollar. It has to do with whether title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which authorized the President to issue $3,000,000,000 of unredeemable currency, shall be continued.

We are confronted today in another bill following the present one with the effect of the activities of the Export-Import Bank on our neutrality. The activities of the Export-Import Bank have been negligible up to the last year, the outstanding loan made by this bank being to China in the sum of $25,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Was that loan made to the Republic of China?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It does not make any difference.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. It makes a lot of difference.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It makes no difference under the terms of this bill.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. It was made to a Chinese importing company.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Whether it was made to the Republic of China or to any of the nationals of China makes no difference. You should destroy the neutrality of the United States Government with respect to foreign situations in that manner.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. The Export-Import Bank is not covered by the bill now before us.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that. I am merely stating what we may expect in the discussion today concerning both of these bills which will be considered, and I am taking the time now to cover them briefly, citing what is the genesis of the subject which we are going to debate here today.

Mr. Speaker, we have passed a Neutrality Act. I believe the people of the United States do not want the Congress to authorize any agency over which it has no control to destroy in any manner the neutral position which the United States should assume in its foreign relationships, whether it be a controversy between Japan and China, a civil war in Spain, or a potential conflict among the nations of Europe. The people of the United States do not want the Government of the United States or any of its agencies to take sides in any of these conflicts. Although their sympathies might be with one side, they do not want the United States Government by any overt act to precipitate our entrance into European or Asiatic conflicts by loans or by direct grants, and I think the loan to China by the Export-Import Bank presents a fundamental question which must be given consideration at this particular time.

Is the Export-Import Bank going to be allowed to continue to embarrass the people of the United States, who have firmly declared a neutral policy with respect to foreign conflicts? Because the Export-Import Bank has been practically nonexistent until recent months, and because the major part of its activity has been in respect to loans to belligerent countries, I contend there should be more supervision over the activities of that bank than is now incorporated in the Executive order setting up this bank.

I do not believe it is a healthy or safe condition when we without restraint give to the President of the United States or to any other individual the untrammelled right to perform an act which might be interpreted by other nations of the world as an act of unfriendliness on the part of the United States.

The President of the United States has the power under these extraordinary provisions which I have mentioned, and others to be sure, to so involve us in European and Asiatic conflicts as to make our active participation almost necessary. Under these conditions, the present bill must be considered in a different light than the mere continuance of an agency of the Federal Government for the purpose of aiding our industrialists and farmers to export their products.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield in fairness?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would prefer not to, because I have other matters which I desire to cover at this time.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The gentleman keeps reiterating there was a loan to China. There has been no loan made to China.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I refuse to yield, and I wish to make the assertion in that respect that I understand the gentleman's side of the House does not expect to take all the time allowed under this rule, so I wish the gentleman would not ask me to yield, but, rather, go to his leader and ask for time either under this rule or under the bill when we reach it, and wait for me to discuss these questions and then answer me.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I did not like to let that point go.

Mr. WOLCOTT. One very important question arises. An amendment will be offered to this bill extending the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The President of the United States can stop any of the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation when he finds that credit is available through private sources. We have written into the act a provision that upon the report of the board of directors or otherwise he may stop the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. An amendment will be offered to strike out the phrase "or otherwise," because we do not believe the President should be given the authority and power to stop any activities set up by the Congress without the advice of at least the department vitally interested.

In October of 1937 the President exercised his authority to stop the activities of the R. F. C. He said, in almost defiance of the mandates of this Congress, that loans to small industries should be stopped, and they were stopped. He said the R. F. C. would make no more loans, and that it should liquidate loans which it had. This condition existed until the spring of 1938. Because of other extraordinary powers given to the President and to the politicalized Federal Reserve Board, the rediscount rates were raised and reserve requirements were raised and the Commodity Credit Corporation stopped the pegging of the price of cotton and other commodities, and as a consequence the United States was precipitated into one of the most serious depressions we have experienced.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD].

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, it is always embarrassing to take issue with a member of one's own committee, and particularly the genial and distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]. However the gentleman from Michigan has made repeatedly within the last few minutes the statement that the Export-Import Bank had made a $25,000,000 loan to China, intimating or attempting to convey to the Members of the House that a $25,000,000 loan had been made to the Government of China. This is as far from the facts as one pole is from the other.

As a matter of fact, this is what happened: The Chinese-owned American Trading Co. of New York secured a credit commitment from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the sum of $25,000,000. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY], a member of our committee, asked Mr. Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if this credit could be used in connection with the export of war material to China. I do not believe anyone in this House would question the truthfulness of Mr. Jones in any answers he might give before a committee. This particular testimony is as follows:

Mr. BARRY. What was the purpose of that $25,000,000 loan to China? What products was that designed to facilitate the export of?

Mr. JONES. I do not know exactly what they were going to buy. It must not be in violation of the Neutrality Act.

The CHAIRMAN. You did extend a credit of $25,000,000 to the Chinese Government?

Mr. JONES. No; not to the Chinese Government. It is to a Chinese-owned American Trading Co. in New York; the credits as they are extended will be guaranteed by the Bank of China, but not by the Government of China.

Mr. BARRY. Could that credit be used in connection with the export of war material to China?

Mr. JONES. No. The understanding is that it will not be. Mr. BARRY. Did I understand you to say that the Chinese Government is not liable, but a privately owned Chinese corporation?

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether the corporation is owned by the Chinese Government or not. It is owned in China, and it is domiciled in New York, and the credits are guaranteed by the Bank of China; and the Bank of China, I understand, is owned half by the Government of China and half by private interests. The commitment was intended to cover private transactions.

We have the word of Jesse Jones for this. If the Members of the House wish to take his word, all right. If they do not, they can take the word of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take some time to state to the Members of the House that in my opinion no corporation of the Government has rendered a more constructive service than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The R. F. C. was conceived and set up at a time when business and agriculture were in the deepest doldrums. It renewed confidence and instilled hope in the minds of merchants, farmers, manufacturers, businessmen, and industrialists all over this country, and has continued to reinforce that confidence and that hope.

The managers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have rendered yeoman service. Mr. Jones, as Chairman, has been constructive, wise, prudent, patient, and most painstaking, working night and day to aid industrial and farm communities throughout the land. Wherever and whenever existing loaning facilities were unavailable, the R. F. C., under his wise guidance, came to the fore to aid, succor, and rescue. His colleagues on the Board have rendered similar service.

Just think for one moment what would happen if we should not continue the work of this Corporation. During the past year it loaned $983,000,000 to 5,234 persons and entities; of these, 4,634 were industrial loans; in other words, the banks of the country generally were unable, wittingly or unwittingly, to make, or refused to make, these many loans. At the suggestion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, however, they did participate in a number of them. The banks in many instances have cooperated, due to the patient and intelligent endeavor of Chairman Jones and his codirectors.

Never has the R. F. C. given the impression that it was or is competing with banks. It wants and strives with might and main to make the banks loan instead of itself.

Beyond peradventure of a doubt, a large number of loans will be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation during the ensuing year, and there will be need therefor, because banks cannot or still will not make them. I shudder to think what would have happened last year if these 5,234 persons and firms had been refused the shelter of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and could not get money wherewith to continue their activities. It seems to me idle to argue any further. There is absolute need for the continuation of this Corporation until 1941.

I have had numerous contacts with R. F. C. directors, lawyers, and aids. They have been uniformly courteous and fair. I have come away empty handed. My requests have not always been granted. But I always came away satisfied that the R. F. C. was on firm ground in denying me my request. They satisfied me they were not unreasonable or arbitrary, but on the contrary they were fair and equitable.

I want to give credit where credit is due.

We readily condemn. We grudgingly praise.

Besides Mr. Jones, his assistant, William C. Costello, the directors, Charles B. Henderson, Carroll B. Merriam, Emil Schram, and Howard J. Klossner have been uniformly helpful and constructive with their advice and counsel and concrete aid, not only as to loan applications I placed before them but to those of many of my colleagues.

I cannot refrain from a word of praise to the R. F. C. general counsel, Claude E. Hamilton, and his staff of excellent attorneys. Mr. Hamilton is rendering splendid aid and assistance and is worthy of highest commendation.

I cannot call out of the entire staff all names; my tribute goes forth to the entire staff.

SUMMARY OF LOANS BY RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

I give you a summary of R. F. C. activities since its organization February 2, 1932, 7 years ago. I make copious use of the report submitted by Chairman Jones and sent to the President as of February 2, 1939. I quote frequently from that report, making the words of Mr. Jones my own.

In addition to the original purposes of the Corporation and the many amendments to the act from time to time which have expanded the scope of its direct operations, R. F. C. activities have also been carried on through Commodity Credit Corporation, organized October 17, 1933; The RFC Mortgage Co., organized March 14, 1935; Electric Home and Farm Authority, organized August 1, 1935; Disaster Loan Corporation, created February 15, 1937; Federal National Mortgage Association, organized February 10, 1938.

Total R. F. C. authorizations have been $13,206,639,807. Of this amount $2,900,601,066 was by direction of Congress in which R. F. C. directors had no discretion.

Authorizations for which R. F. C. directors have responsibility aggregate $10,306,038,741. Of this amount $2,293,568,866 was withdrawn or canceled; either the purposes for which the authorizations were made were not carried into effect or the applicants found they did not need the money; $7,243,873,197 has been disbursed and $5,372,565,029, or 74 percent, repaid; $768,596,678 remains available to the borrowers or for the purposes for which the authorizations were made.

Of the amount authorized and disbursed by direction of Congress, $1,799,984,009 was for direct relief, and $1,001,112,169 to other governmental agencies. Of the former amount $17,158,858 was repaid by counties and municipalities, and of the latter amount $37,000,000 was repaid from capital stock of regional agricultural credit corporations. From October 1932 to May 1933 R. F. C. invested $44,500,000 in the capital stock of 12 regional agricultural credit corporations to make loans principally on livestock. In addition to this investment in their capital stock, R. F. C. advanced them $173,243,641 to enable them to make loans principally on livestock. All of these loans have been repaid, and the companies have sufficient money on hand to retire the balance of the capital stock. These agencies were transferred to the Farm Credit Administration by Executive order in May 1933.

Since their transfer to the Farm Credit Administration they have made additional loans of approximately $100,000,000. All the loans made by them have been repaid except approximately $12,000,000.

In February 1938 R. F. C. asked Congress to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel its notes given to the Treasury for disbursements made by direction of Congress for which R. F. C. received no benefit. The act authorizing such cancellations was approved February 24, 1938. Pursuant to this act, notes aggregating $2,699,236,946 have been canceled. As stated, much of this money was used for direct relief, but approximately $850,000,000 is carried by the Treasury and other agencies in the form of capital stock of governmental corporations or other obligations or has been converted into cash.

CLASSES OF LOANS

Classes of loans made are loans and other aid to agriculture; loans to banks; preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures; closed-bank loans; drainage, levee, and irrigation loans; self-liquidating loans; railroad loans; loans to business and industry; mortgage loans; loans to insurance companies; loans to building and loan associations; loans to public-school authorities; loans to State funds created to insure deposits of public moneys; mining loans; rural electrification loans; Commodity Credit Corporation; the RFC Mortgage Co.; Federal National Mortgage Association; the Electric Home and Farm Authority; and disaster loans.

This gives us a bird's-eye view of the magnitude of the tasks of the R. F. C. It has been a boon to millions of our people. It has relieved much of suffering and misfortune in many parts of the land. All classes, all sections have been aided. The benefits and benefactions of the R. F. C. have been incalculable.

LOANS AND OTHER AID TO AGRICULTURE

Agriculture in one way or another has been accorded loan authorizations and allocations of $3,101,673,840. Such vast aid to farmers cannot be lightly considered.

Of this, $399,636,000 was to Federal land banks, $29,035,359 to joint-stock land banks, $9,250,000 to Federal intermediate credit banks, and $199,072,648 to livestock and agricultural credit corporations to provide funds to meet the needs of farmers and stockmen.

One billion eight hundred and forty million seven hundred and seventy-four thousand one hundred and seventy-eight dollars was for loans through Commodity Credit Corporation and other agricultural agencies to producers of cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, turpentine, resin, wool, mohair, hops, figs, dates, raisins, prunes, peanuts, butter, and pecans in 39 States.

Cotton loans were made in Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

Corn loans were made in Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, and Wisconsin.

Wheat loans were made in Arkansas, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New York, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

Tobacco loans were made in Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia.

Turpentine and resin loans were made in Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina.

Wool and mohair loans were made in California, Colorado, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Texas, Utah, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

Loans on figs, dates, raisins, and prunes were made in California; on hops in Washington; and on pecans in Georgia.

Peanut loans were made in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, and Virginia.

Loans to associations were made on butter produced in California, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska,

New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, and Washington.

Think of the vast number of commodities whose growers have been aided.

Eighty-three million three hundred and seventy thousand nine hundred and fifty-five dollars went to finance the exportation of some of these commodities.

One hundred and fifteen million dollars was allocated to the Secretary of Agriculture for crop loans. Of this, $44,500,000 was reallocated and, with $40,500,000 allocated by R. F. C. to the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, used to provide $45,000,000 capital of the Production Credit Corporations and $40,000,000 capital and surplus of the Federal Intermediate Credit Banks.

Sixty-one million nine hundred and thirty-four thousand seven hundred dollars was allocated for the capital and expenses of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporations, and $97,000,000 for the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Of $202,600,000 originally allocated to the Farm Credit Administration for loans to farmers and to joint stock land banks, $200,000,000 was reallocated and used to provide capital of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation.

These items were by direction of Congress and their outstanding balances were included in the items for which our notes were canceled in accordance with the act of Congress approved February 24, 1933.

Farmers and stockmen in every section of the country have been the recipients of these loans. They should bless the R. F. C. and its overseers.

RAILROAD LOANS

Of the $1,243,348,560 loan commitments to railroads, $200,460,500 representing securities purchased from P. W. A., $307,561,724 was not used, the purposes for which the authorizations were made not being carried into effect, or the roads having an R. F. C. commitment were able to get the money from private sources. Eight hundred and twenty-six million seven hundred and seventy-three thousand one hundred and sixty-one dollars has been disbursed to 82 roads. Three hundred and forty-six million five hundred and nine thousand three hundred and sixteen dollars of this has been paid, leaving a balance outstanding of $480,263,845 due from 50 railroads. Thirty-two roads have paid their loans in full. Nineteen were placed in receivership or trusteeship after receiving loans. Three of these are no longer indebted to the Corporation. The balance due from the remaining 16 roads in the custody of the courts aggregates $168,565,837. Interest is being paid currently on 2 of these, the loans of which aggregate $25,825,227.

R. F. C. will have some individual losses on railroad loans, as in other classes of borrowers, but, treated as a class, there should be little net loss on railroad loans.

To be more specific in the railroad situation, R. F. C. has collected $86,335,352 interest from railroad loans, and, in addition to this, has approximately $15,000,000 interest accrued that it believes to be good. The margin in this interest over the cost of money to the Government will cover losses on individual railroad loans.

LOANS TO BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY

Seven thousand three hundred and seventy-one loans have been authorized to business enterprises, aggregating $447,324,578. Banks have agreed to take participations in 1,661 of these loans in the amount of $61,492,756, their participations ranging from 10 percent to 60 percent. The banks and R. F. C. share proportionately in security and repayments. Of the R. F. C. part of these loans $86,027,903 was not used, and $144,192,699 remains available to the borrowers; 2,720 of these loans, or 37 percent of the total number, have been for $5,000 or less. During the past 12 months 49 percent have been for $5,000 or less. Fifty-three percent of the loans have been for $10,000 or less, 83 percent for $50,000 or less.

In addition to the participations taken for their own account, banks hold $57,552,558 of these loans with a take-out agreement from the R. F. C. For the take-out agreements the R. F. C. gets a part of the interest paid by the borrower. This is 2 percent per annum where the bank's participation is 25 percent of the loan or less; 1½ percent where the bank's participation is from 25 percent to 50 percent; 1 percent where the bank's participation is 50 percent or more.

Participation agreements and take-out commitments are executed when the loan is made, and the take-out commitment is equivalent to insuring the bank to the extent of the agreed take-out. It is necessary to exercise the same care in insuring part of a loan as when the Corporation makes the entire loan. The same investigation is required and the same expenses incurred.

In April and May 1933, the R. F. C. made commitments to lend apple growers in the State of Washington up to $2,000,000. Under these commitments it authorized 960 loans to 716 applicants in the amount of $1,025,120, of which $991,506 was disbursed.

In addition to the foregoing loans to business, the Electric Home and Farm Authority has bought installment contracts from 2,573 dealers in electrical appliances. These are loans to business. They furnish the dealer with capital for his credit sales. The contracts carry the unconditional endorsement of the dealer.

R. F. C. will probably have a substantially larger percentage of loss from industrial loans than from any other class. Forty-six of these, representing loans in the aggregate amount of $3,009,092, have already been foreclosed and the security reduced to possession. Properties securing three of these loans, which amounted to $234,905, have been sold at a net loss to the Corporation of $31,003. Five hundred and forty-three loans to business are in default and 60 are in process of foreclosure. In addition to these, 507 of the loans to apple growers in the State of Washington are in default.

R. F. C. has authorized 2 loans at the request of the Maritime Commission, 1 to the American President Lines, Ltd., $2,500,000, secured by a first mortgage on 13 ships, and another for building ships at Tampa, Fla., $300,000. Local banks took an additional $200,000 participation in this loan.

It has loaned the Tennessee Valley Authority $3,000,000.

It has authorized loans to the Lower Colorado River Authority of $5,000,000 for purchase of operating units in the vicinity of this project. The Authority expects to sell some of the units to the cities and towns in which they operate.

In cooperation with T. V. A. the R. F. C. authorized a $6,000,000 loan to the city of Knoxville to buy its power plant from the Tennessee Public Service Co., but with the R. F. C. commitment it was able to get the money from private sources.

MORTGAGE LOANS

This item—$608,597,899—includes the capital stock of the RFC Mortgage Co., $25,000,000, and loan authorizations to the RFC Mortgage Co. of $160,021,276. It also includes the capital stock of the Federal National Mortgage Association, $11,000,000, and loans to it of $50,000,000. It includes $362,576,623 loans to privately owned mortgage-loan companies made principally in 1932, 1933, and 1934 to prevent the companies from failing and to enable them to grant extensions to their borrowers. Four hundred and eighteen million six hundred and sixty-two thousand nine hundred and sixty-four dollars has been disbursed and $298,016,329 repaid.

November 1933 the R. F. C. aided the savings banks of New York State by authorizing the investment of $50,000,000 in the capital notes or debentures of the Savings Banks Trust Co., which company the saving banks of New York organized to assist any that might need to realize on their mortgages. None of this money was used.

R. F. C. also authorized $86,000,000 to the Institutional Securities Corporation, organized by the savings banks for the same purpose. Only $14,312,567 of the amount was used and it has all been repaid.

Publication of this procedure by the R. F. C. and the banks was so reassuring to depositors that the banks were able to remove the restriction on withdrawals allowed under the law in a very short time.

The act authorizing the investment in the preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures of banks made no specific provision for aiding mutual savings banks, of which there are a great many in New York and the New England States.

R. F. C. aided the New England banks and some of those in New York State through buying their notes, with provisions of subordination in favor of depositors, in this manner bringing to the savings banks the same assistance provided for National and State commercial banks.

THE RFC MORTGAGE CO.

Because there was practically no mortgage money available to deserving borrowers to protect their properties from foreclosure, and to aid in the reorganization of properties covered by excessive mortgages and mortgage bond issues, Congress, at Mr. Jones' request, authorized the R. F. C. in January 1935 to invest in the capital stock of mortgage companies up to $100,000,000 when any such investment was approved by the President. Following the approval of this act, the R. F. C. endeavored to interest private capital to organize mortgage companies, offering to take preferred stock with them.

Meeting with no success in this effort, the R. F. C., with the approval of the President, organized the RFC Mortgage Co. March 14, 1935, with a capital of $10,000,000, later increased to $25,000,000. The stock is all owned by the R. F. C. The company has authorized $137,969,839 loans on income-producing business properties, borrowing its requirements from the R. F. C. The company has been a lifesaver to many communities when real-estate loans were at a standstill.

F. H. A. INSURED MORTGAGES

Because banks, insurance companies, and other private investors were reluctant to buy F. H. A. insured mortgages, the R. F. C. announced August 17, 1935, that it would buy these mortgages at a discount of one-half of 1 percent and sell them at a premium sufficient to cover the cost of operation. The R. F. C. has authorized the purchase of $96,955,222 F. H. A. insured mortgages and has completed the purchase of $73,083,604 of these. The R. F. C. has sold $16,604,899 to private investors at a modest premium; $34,108,848 has been transferred to the Federal National Mortgage Association.

Of the total number of F. H. A. insured mortgages bought, 102 loans, aggregating $400,845, have been foreclosed, for which the R. F. C. holds or will receive the equivalent amount, less cost of foreclosures, in F. H. A. 2¾-percent and 3-percent debentures carrying Government guaranty. The loss on the loans foreclosed will be less than 10 percent.

DISASTER LOANS

By special direction of Congress through amendments to our act, the R. F. C. from 1933 to 1936 made loans for rehabilitation of property damaged by floods, earthquakes, or other catastrophes; $16,784,521 was authorized for this purpose; $12,003,055 disbursed; $4,278,027 of this has been repaid.

Following the Ohio River flood in January 1937, Congress directed R. F. C. to organize the Disaster Loan Corporation and provide it with capital up to $20,000,000 to make loans to those who suffered losses from the flood or other catastrophes in the year 1937. This act was later amended to include catastrophe losses that occurred in the years 1936 and 1938.

Immediately following creation of this Corporation, R. F. C. established offices for making loans at Ashland, Ky.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Huntington, W. Va.; Ironton, Ohio; Portsmouth, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio; Paducah, Ky.; Memphis, Tenn.; Dyersburg, Tenn.; Louisville, Ky.; Cairo, Ill.; Evansville, Ind.; Harrisburg, Ill.; Galena, Ill.; and New Orleans, La. Loan committees composed of local citizens were set up to recommend loans. These committees served on a voluntary basis and were of great assistance to the Corporation in meeting the emergency.

Seven thousand five hundred and fifty-five loans, aggregating $8,805,051, were authorized as a result of the Ohio River flood; $1,574,504 was not used; $6,785,729 of this has been disbursed and $1,752,542 repaid. It is significant of the character and integrity of the American people that 80 percent of these loans are current in their payments.

The Board of R. F. C. is now making disaster loans as a result of the hurricane in September 1938, principally in the New England States. Immediately after the hurricane we established offices at Charleston, S. C.; Gardner, Mass.;

Hartford, Conn.; Lowell, Mass.; New Bedford, Mass.; New London, Conn.; Providence, R. I.; Springfield, Mass.; Worcester, Mass.; Keene, N. H.; Concord, N. H.; New Haven, Conn.; Montauk, Long Island, N. Y.; Quogue, Long Island, N. Y.; with loan committees composed of local citizens to recommend loans. These committee members also serve on a voluntary basis.

Loans aggregating $3,764,625 have been authorized to 1,526 applicants who suffered losses from the hurricane. We are lending to salvage the very large amount of blown-down timber. Probably 25,000 farmers and landowners lost their timber. It is estimated that 3,000,000,000 feet of timber is down as a result of the hurricane, and effort is being made to salvage as much of it as possible. The facilities of the Forestry Service and the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation are being used to salvage the timber.

Disaster and catastrophe loans have been made in 34 States—Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Washington, and West Virginia.

Imagine the closing up of the R. F. C. and the inability of the vast populations of the States visited with disaster, unable to procure the relief granted by the R. F. C. That would be disaster upon disaster.

Whenever the R. F. C. or its directors and personnel are ever criticized just point to their splendid work in the disaster zones.

CONCLUSION

In addition to the foregoing, vast loans to banks have been arranged to meet the abnormal demands of the depositors during the Nation-wide depression. Also capital loans were made to these banks by way of purchase of their preferred stock and debentures.

There have been drainage, levee, and irrigation loans. In many States loans have been made to insurance companies, building and loan associations, and public-school authorities. There have been loans to State funds created to issue deposits of public moneys. There have been mining loans, loans for rural electrification. There has been set up the Commodity Credit Corporation which has made loans on cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, and so forth.

Let us not forget also that the R. F. C. has accumulated an operating reserve sufficient to cover any and all probable losses. Thanks to the wit, ingenuity, resourcefulness, and wisdom of Chairman Jones and his Board and counsel and aids, despite the vast services it has rendered throughout the country, despite the vast amount of credit available, there has been no net loss to the Government and there doubtless will be none.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will use some of the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] if he wants to yield it to me. Would the gentleman care to yield to me any of his time under the rule?

Mr. SABATH. I yielded the usual 30 minutes, half of the time, to the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield further time. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I may say I did not expect to take this particular time, but we need all the time possible today in order to comment on the long era of experimentation on borrowed money. We wish to review the many and various activities of the R. F. C. and to show how the R. F. C. has been used as a vehicle to mop up losses and direct gifts, although obliged to pay interest to the Treasury, which carried its notes as assets, to the evident misleading of the public as to the condition of the Treasury. We shall show that the Government and the R. F. C. have stood back of a very great variety of undertakings. A little later I will enumerate a large number of these activities. I imagine that on the other side of the House you are not anxious to take much time. You are merely desirous of seeing these bills pass with as little criticism as possible. It is probably not a matter of affection you have for many of these activities competing with private business. If your wife sees you off on the train it may not be from affection—she may merely wish to be sure you are out of the way. I am sure that many of these activities are not pleasing to real Democrats, but you are now saddled with them and do not dare to shake them off.

The Export-Import Bank, about which there has been so much comment in the newspapers recently, is a dangerous weapon to put in the hands of a President; who already has in his hands so many dangerous weapons, the possible use of which might bring us into economic war with other nations, possibly with dire results. I remind you of his power of devaluation of gold and silver and the power even to use the printing press.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield so that I may give him the information that the Export-Import Bank is dealt with in a bill that is not before the House?

Mr. GIFFORD. It will be, just a little later.

Mr. SABATH. And on that bill the committee will have 3 hours of general debate.

Mr. GIFFORD. I may not be able to get further time, so I wish to comment on that bill now and refer to other instrumentalities just to arouse your interest. For instance, Mr. Jones stated that the local private banks would rather lend at 1 percent to the Electric Home and Farm Authority than take 9 percent from the purchasers. This is highly significant. Private banks now look only for safety and absolute security, relying on the Government's guaranty back of all of these subsidized experiments. It is time that these dangerous economic weapons were taken away from the Great Spender. He has not proved to be the "Great Emancipator" of our economic troubles.

Conditions have not greatly improved. The index of the New York Times yesterday shows business going straight down again, and this despite the protest that times are getting better. However, we believe in the Honorable Jesse Jones, and no manner of man could have been selected to have guided the R. F. C. as well as he has done. We have no criticism of him. The criticism is that this administration has given him so many questionable schemes to administer. He himself has tried to protect his R. F. C. from the staggering grants and losses caused by the Commodity Credit Corporation, the W. P. A., the P. W. A., and the capital which he was forced to furnish for many other corporate devices. When he came before us a year ago and requested that we mark off about two and a half billion dollars worth of these grants and losses, on which he was paying interest to the Treasury, which was calling them assets, we were pleased to order the Treasury to cancel his notes. He will always answer truthfully if we are able to present the question properly to him. But there are too many activities concerning which we are sadly uninformed. The gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD] smiles. He seems to know all about these things, but half of the membership of the Banking and Currency Committee are new members, and there are many new Members of the House who may wish to obtain full and accurate information about many of these recent experimentations of the Government. Seemingly, all business is affected in some phase or other by this Government competition.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH and Mr. RANDOLPH rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include in the Appendix an address delivered by myself this morning at the National Aviation Forum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter I received from a Mr. Scullen with reference to the freight-rate situation, together with a copy of my reply.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

CONTINUATION OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts and his usual tirade, except to correct him. I believe that after a thorough investigation of the items in the New York Times and in other trade journals he will find steel and other businesses on the incline and improving. Commercial and industrial activity has surpassed the level of 1937 and is far in excess of the mark set in 1929.

As to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], I very much regret to have to refer to his remarks concerning the administration's responsibility for the recession in 1937 and 1938. Would the gentleman have carefully read and studied conditions, he would most certainly be obliged to concur that the recession was not due to any acts of President Roosevelt, but to the management of big business and industrialists under the leadership of republicanism. In their attempt to block the wage and hour bill they started their crusade by ceasing operations. They dismissed thousands of employees and created a critical condition of unemployment for the purpose of scaring Congress and the President in their efforts to proceed with the wage and hour bill.

With reference to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the older Members of the House remember and the younger ones should know of the organized attempt by big business to repeal and amend the capital-gains and surplus taxes. Special attention should be given, and I again emphasize the general Nation-wide campaign by a strategically organized lobby for passage of amendments to the capital-gains and surplus taxes. The "big boys" never like to pay taxes and are always scheming how best to unload them on those less able to pay.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman recollect that in March 1937 the President made a speech in which he said that the price level of commodities was too high, and that from that day on we started to have the so-called Roosevelt recession?

Mr. SABATH. I correct the gentleman again. From March on and until September 1937, more people were employed and the country was in as prosperous condition as ever. However, in the month of October 1937 the conspiracy was hatched—operations ceased, plants closed, and then the recession set in.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN rose.

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield now. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] apparently gives much credit to the Republican President, Mr. Hoover, for the R. F. C. Again, he is mistaken, and I am indeed surprised that he should make such statements. Unfortunately, he does make many statements that are not based on facts, and I regret that I am obliged to set him right. The first Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill was introduced by me in 1931, and the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, sitting right here knows that to be a fact.

Many of you have received a telegram from President Hoover setting forth a proposal in connection with the legislation which was then being formulated. To enlighten the new Members and to remind some of the older Members with short memories, especially the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], I insert the telegram received by me from President Hoover:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., June 23, 1931.

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
Chicago, Ill.:

You no doubt have seen my statement in Sunday's press of the proposal of the American Government in respect to postponement for 1 year of all intergovernmental debts. Inasmuch as the proposal is, of course, contingent upon action by Congress, and as the matter is one of national interest having no partisan character in that light, I consulted before action the Senators and Representatives of both parties present in Washington and as many as possible who were accessible in the country. This list of generous support from Members was shown in the public statement referred to above. I regret that difficulties of communication rendered it impossible to contact with all Members of the Senate and House. I do not wish to press any Member for reply as to his views if he prefers not to give them at this time, yet if you are favorable to the proposal in the first paragraph of the statement above mentioned, it would undoubtedly aid in the negotiation now in progress if you could inform me thereof.

HERBERT HOOVER.

In reply to this message I sent President Hoover the following telegram:

JUNE 23, 1931.

His Excellency HERBERT HOOVER,

President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

I am satisfied that your proposal will be helpful and beneficial, and I will gladly support it, but I still feel that immediate steps should be taken to relieve conditions in our own country, as they are much more alarming than you may be aware of or the press dares to publish.

A. J. SABATH, M. C.

From that time on I pleaded with President Hoover to save the country from complete collapse, and I proposed and introduced on December 9, 1931, a bill—H. R. 5116—to create a National Relief Finance Corporation and urged hearings thereon. However, the committee, in its desire to obtain approval from President Hoover, merged my strong bill with that of Representative Strong and gave it a title which bore the words "Reconstruction Finance Corporation." I did not designate by bill as a "reconstruction" bill, as I did not desire to leave the implication that the Republican administration had destroyed and that the Democratic House was going to reconstruct. Of course, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] may recollect my efforts since December 1929 to suspend activity on the stock exchange and to prohibit short selling. Stock manipulations were made, fearing that if no action were taken by the Government that it would affect—yes; that it would destroy—not only the banks but the insurance companies as well and bring about a panic. Unfortunately, due to their failure to act, the Hoover administration and the Republican Party did engulf the Nation.

I do not wish to encumber the RECORD, but I refer the gentleman to H. R. 5116 and other bills of the Seventy-first and Seventy-second Congresses which I introduced on the subject, and particularly to my speech of January 15, 1932, which will refresh his memory and be informative to the new Members.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield now. The chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee knows how I endeavored untiringly to obtain a hearing on the bill in 1931, and knows further that its consideration and passage was delayed by Republican members of the committee upon the advice of President Hoover and his advisers. They believed it would be politically wise to postpone action until shortly prior to the Republican convention in 1932, so that the ensuing benefits from that legislation could be utilized in the 1932 fall campaign. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] should also remember that, when the bill did pass the House, President Hoover, for the purpose of further delay, vetoed it. In his veto message he recommended that the provision tending to be beneficial and to aid commerce be eliminated, and that the provision granting loans to municipalities and States be made only upon self-liquidating projects. Consequently, we were obliged to pass a bill from which the beneficial provisions had been eliminated and which restricted loans to municipalities and States only on self-liquidating projects. Had even this legislation been enacted in 1930 or 1931, as I had advocated, I am satisfied that the crash, if not prevented, would have been greatly minimized.

In my effort to create confidence in the institution, I provided in my bill for the appointment of four outstanding men, namely, former President Coolidge; and, if I am not mistaken, the defeated candidate for President, Alfred E. Smith; the former chairman of the War Finance Board, Mr.

McAdoo; and Mr. Stevens—two Democrats and two Republicans. Unfortunately, the provision naming these gentlemen as directors, proposed on the floor as an amendment, was defeated on the pretense that it was unconstitutional to specifically name gentlemen in the bill. I assure the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] I was not playing politics as he was in those alarming days. I saw the storm brewing with great force and was trying to save the situation as much as possible, and what I feared came to pass in 1932 and 1933. I feel that the gentleman from New York owes it to himself and to the country to correct his statements and not to claim credit where credit is not due.

It should also be recalled that Mr. Ogden Mills, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, opposed the billion-dollar capitalization of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the four billion reserve and suggested a $250,000,000 capitalization as being sufficient to restore confidence. This statement is merely to clear the record.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman please yield?

Mr. SABATH. As soon as I get through explaining to my friend Mr. FISH. Confidence was restored only after Mr. Roosevelt was elected, and the Democratic Party in Congress began to function. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he familiarize himself with the record and with the proceedings of the committee. As I stated before, the first Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill was vetoed by Mr. Hoover, who insisted that loans should be made only to self-liquidating projects. In the last hours of the Congress, however, in the desire to pass some legislation, we agreed to the suggested amendment, which, nevertheless, precluded the making of loans to business as was originally contemplated. Therefore, only those who derived any benefit under the first act were the railroads, the banks, and the insurance companies. Yes; the banks, but not all of them. The small bankers were forgotten. Only the more powerful ones were able to obtain money, including my fellow townsman, former Vice President Dawes. He obtained $95,000,000 only a few days before resigning as the Chairman of the R. F. C. The small banks were permitted to be closed. In my own city in June 1932, during the Republican Convention, notwithstanding my appeals, 42 of the outlying banks were closed. All of them could have been saved from closing with great losses to the thousands of their depositors with only one-third of the amount of money which was loaned to Vice President Dawes' bank.

However, under Mr. Hoover's administration there was no sympathy or desire to help the smaller man or the smaller bank. Unfortunately, we still have about $40,000,000 coming from Mr. Dawes, who unloaded his responsibility onto others.

Mr. Speaker, though my memory is not as good as in years gone by, yet time has not so long passed that I cannot vividly recollect those trying days and my humble efforts to impress President Hoover and others then in power of the seriousness of conditions. When I recall that those who were then employed worked only 2 or 3 days a week at a salary or wage far below that needed on which to exist I dislike to think of those unfortunate conditions, but I am happy, though we still have unemployment, that today we have employed from eight to nine million of the wage earners who were in such dire want.

If it had not been for the Republican conspiracy, today nearly everyone capable of working would have been at work. Conditions are improving. They will improve if you gentlemen will not harass and try to embarrass the administration, but will try to cooperate as I believe you should and is your duty. You will see that we will again enjoy that prosperity to which the American people and our Nation is entitled.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In view of the fact that a magazine carried the statement that a poll of the correspondents who report our debates, designated the gentleman who is speaking as well as myself, as one of the least useful Members of the House, does not the gentleman think he is wasting his time this morning?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in the past few weeks I have seen many articles criticizing and condemning writers who recklessly and unjustly have assailed many men in public life in their good names and records. However, the statement of Miss Dorothy Thompson, appearing in this morning's Washington Post, is perhaps more direct and seems to express the views of many of the fair and to-the-point writers. It is entitled to some thought on the part of those who are guilty. I should like to include her entire article, but take the liberty to insert two excerpts, as follows:

SLANDERING PRESS IS ON WAY OUT

When free speech and a free press allow themselves to license to slander, libel, malign, distort, and vilify, they are on the way out.

There also is no possibility in journalism of avoiding misjudgments and even misstatements of purported fact, for the most conscientious are fallible. But it ought to be possible to frame a code whereby slander is earnestly discouraged.

Personally, I have paid no attention to the ridiculous article referring to the gentlemen from New York, Michigan, and myself, because before it came to my attention I was informed by a gentleman in the press gallery that when the article came to their notice the members were questioned and replied that the article was untrue and that no poll had been taken.

While the gentlemen from New York and Michigan differ with me politically, I cannot advise them what to do, but would suggest that they ignore such printed untruths and falsehoods.

However, there are some polls taken that are correct. For instance, one that I saw in today's papers, showing the popularity of President Roosevelt is greater today than ever before. The percentage is 58 as against 54 only a few months ago. [Applause.]

May I suggest to the new Republican Members that the sooner they realize their responsibility to the people at home to vote for progressive legislation, as they have promised, and which made their election possible, the better it will be for them and for the country. President Roosevelt is still as popular as ever. He will continue in the love and affection of the American people, and you might as well know right now that it will be to your advantage to stand by him and cooperate to help advance the conditions of all the people of America. [Applause.]

In conclusion, as referred to above, I hereby insert remarks made by me on this floor on January 15, 1932:

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

(Speech of Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH, of Illinois, in the House of Representatives, Friday, January 15, 1932)

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill H. R. 7360, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, due to the unrestrained and unrestricted frenzied financing on the part of our international bankers; due to the greed of big business and investment bankers who are responsible for overcapitalization, overextension, and overproduction; due to the criminal stock inflation and manipulation, this greatest and richest of countries, possessing more gold, wheat, and foodstuffs than it knows what to do with, is now enduring the hardest times in its history.

The Republican Party not only permitted, but sanctioned, approved, and even aided in this debauchery, in this orgy of high financing and manipulation. It aided in draining the legitimate business; yes, 95 percent of the population of its available cash. And when in 1929 I appealed to the President and you Republicans to stop the destruction, the President and you were deaf to my appeals and warnings. I was told that I must not interfere with business. And big business was not interfered with.

Yes; the efficient big-business propaganda worked overtime serving notice on Congress not to interfere. Big business had its full sway, and what are the results? Two thousand three hundred bank failures in the United States in the year of 1931 alone—this notwithstanding that not a single bank closed in Canada—and those banks still open in great distress; railroads, insurance companies, States, and municipalities unable to meet their pay rolls and obligations; plants, factories, shops, and merchandise establishments closed; one-half of the apartment buildings, homes, and farms in the hands of bond committees and receivers and being sold for taxes; 8,000,000 people unemployed and pleading for work; over 20,000,000 people obliged to live and actually existing on charity. These are the accomplishments of Hoover's administration, and these are the achievements of our great financiers and industrial leaders who for years resented congressional interference. But now, when these great pillars of society realize that they themselves are in danger of being engulfed in the catastrophe which they brought about, they turn in desperation to the Congress which they despised.

Their predominant thought is, "To hell with the suffering masses; save us first, and do it quickly." That is the reason for this haste.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, for over 2 years, I and untold thousands of thinking men of this Nation, scenting the fast-approaching crisis, appealed to President Hoover and the Republicans in control of Congress for some relief legislation, but we were ignored. Therefore, I am disgusted listening now to some of you and to your President for speedy action on this bill, when you and the very greedy interests that you represent insisted last session that Congress adjourn so as not to interfere with the round-the-corner approaching prosperity.

Gentlemen, do you not know that the same interests that have brought about and are responsible for the existing conditions have cunningly and cleverly endeavored to place the blame upon Congress for their misdeeds, and that they now clamor for haste so that Congress may swallow this big banker and railroad reconstruction bill? I designated my bill the national relief finance corporation and drafted it to comply with the title. However, the title you gave it, reconstruction, is proper, and is a candid admission that you have destroyed and at this late date are using us to rebuild what you have wrecked.

Mr. Chairman, in the hope of reestablishing confidence, saving the banks from closing their doors, and preventing the pauperizing of millions of depositors and widespread unemployment, I have for over a year advocated and demanded the restriction of short selling, particularly that called "bear raiding." I have advocated with all the force that I possess the establishment of a $5,000,000,000 national relief finance corporation, which would aid not only banks, industries, and municipalities, but also the farmers and the wage earners of this Nation. And ever since December 1930 I have argued with, implored, yes, pleaded with, the President and the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board to accept for rediscount finance corporation securities and to sanction legislation to make possible the rediscounting of municipal short-term securities, as well as to make loans or to purchase for investment purposes mortgages on homes; but the President and the Federal Reserve Board have ignored my recommendations, advice, and pleas, and have refused to take notice of the distressing conditions and the appeals of small banks and bank depositors and the petitions of millions who demand work rather than charity or dole.

In the last session of Congress, Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I made repeated efforts to secure such legislation, but, again, no consideration was given to my urgent appeals. Therefore, shortly after the adjournment of Congress last March, when bank failures, unemployment, and want and misery still continued to increase, I again addressed urgent appeals to the President, and was instrumental in causing thousands of businessmen to petition him to call a special session of Congress for the purpose of enacting legislation which I had recommended, or any other legislation which would relieve the distressing conditions. Yet, Mr. Chairman, all that the President saw fit to do was to issue new assurances of the coming business revival, and notwithstanding that during the entire summer months the press and the businessmen of the Nation implored him for some action, he remained indifferent and devoted himself to international-banker and stock exchange-financier conferences.

And when I read that the President had at last called a White House conference, I hoped that some constructive program would be agreed upon. But my hope was short-lived, for on the following day I secured the names of the men with whom he had conferred and immediately concluded that no possible good could accrue to the Nation from that conference. The press reports disclosed the fact that the present Speaker of this House, Hon. JOHN N. GARNER, then the Democratic leader of the House, was leaving Texas by airplane to comply with the President's request for a conference, and though I have confidence in our Speaker, yet I felt it my duty to forewarn him, and I sent him the following telegram:

CHICAGO, ILL., October 6, 1931.

HON. JOHN N. GARNER,

Washington, D. C.:

I read in today's papers that after a secret conference with the Wall Street bankers the President is calling a conference of some Democrats for the purpose of binding them to the Wall Street formulated program. As you know, the Federal Reserve Board, under the domineering influence of Wall Street, has miserably failed and was in a great measure responsible for the complete demoralization of our industries and banking institutions. I therefore suggest that you do not bind the liberal and progressive Democrats to any Wall Street formulated program.

Demand that a special session of Congress be immediately called for the purpose of relieving conditions and to reestablish confidence. People have lost faith in President Hoover and his administration and are clamoring for action to save millions of people out of employment and out of food. Will demand the establishment of a $5,000,000,000 prosperity finance corporation to be managed by financiers uncontrolled by Wall Street destructive forces. Will also demand increase in large income and inheritance taxes and immediate liberalization of the Volstead Act.

ADOLPH J. SABATH.

And received the following answer:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 6, 1931.

HON. A. J. SABATH,

Chicago, Ill.:

Telegram received. Greatly appreciate your clear-cut analysis of situation. Have no intention of binding myself nor of attempting to bind Democratic Members of House. Concur fully in your view that situation justifies calling special session.

JNO. N. GARNER.

Mr. Chairman, on the succeeding day my conclusions were confirmed, for the press devoted much space to the plan evolved by these financiers.

As soon as the details of the conference were made known, the press seriously questioned the benefits that might be derived from this $500,000,000 private bankers' pool and charged that the international bankers consented to the formation of such a pool on the condition that President Hoover would agree to the European moratorium and, above all, charged that it was a plan to relieve the railroads and the financial institutions that owned a large amount of these securities. Mr. Chairman, being asked for my view of this Wall Street-White House plan, I issued the following statement:

"The publicity given to the recent Hooverian proposal with regard to the creation of a private bankers' pool has tended to encircle the plan in the minds of the people with a halo it does not rightfully deserve. For the entire plan has been exposed by the press as a rather naive scheme to relieve the large holders of railroad securities.

"I doubt very seriously whether this scheme—evolved by Wall Street financiers primarily for their benefit—will ever materialize. But whether it materializes or not, I will persist in my demands for the creation of a Federal agency to deal with the serious situation practically and efficiently. I have often suggested that there be created a Federal finance corporation, capitalized for $1,000,000,000, with the power to issue bonds to the extent of five times its capital structure. Such an institution would not be difficult to create, if the oversubscription of the Federal bond issues be a criterion.

"Unlike the Wall Street-Hooverian pool, my proposal would not strain to a greater extent the banks of the country, nor would it cost the Government anything; in fact, it would probably result in a profit. A Federal institution of this kind would bring liquid money into every business, emancipate banking from its troubles, and particularly bring aid to the small bank, where it is most needed. I am satisfied that this plan, coupled with a broader rediscount power on the part of the Federal Reserve Board, would relieve not only the banks and make for a clearer perspective but would be a positive blessing to all of the insurance companies and municipalities and to the business of the Nation in general.

"It is because of these and other reasons that I have appealed to the President to call a special session of Congress. My appeals, however, go unheeded. What possible excuse can there be for the President's refusal to call a special session? Conditions require it. If it be politics, then something should be done so that political differences do not retard the Nation's attainment of happiness and prosperity. If it be collusion between the party in power and Wall Street—and it is more than idle rumor which states that the Hooverian pool is a reciprocation for the extension of the moratorium and the cancellation of the European war debts—then it is a candid admission by the administration that it is solely concerned with giving aid to foreign nations and is indifferent to the best interests and welfare of our country.

"Therefore, instead of groping around like the administration and accomplished nothing, the Nation's only salvation at this trying crisis is to call immediately a special session of Congress.

"A. J. SABATH."

Four months have elapsed since the country was assured that this $500,000,000 private bankers' pool was pregnant with possibilities. Therefore, am I not justified in asking the President or you Republican prosperity makers what became of it and where it was lost? Did it die a prenatal death, or was it only Wall Street "hot air" combustion, or, perchance, just plain Republican buncombe?

In view of all of these delays and empty promises, I cannot help become suspicious of the suddenly acquired haste which the President now displays by his messages to Congress, and I cannot help resent the attitude of his spokesmen on the floor of the House for criticizing our efforts to safeguard properly the provisions of this tremendously important bill.

The outcries from some of you Republicans for a vote will not fool anyone, for the simple reason that the people must, and do, realize that if we had a Roosevelt or a Wilson in the White House this or other relief legislation, properly safeguarded so that direct benefits would accrue to many instead of a few, would have been enacted long ago. Mr. Chairman, I will vote for the bill, but only because it is patterned after the bill I have advocated for 2 years, and though its provisions are not as liberal as those in mine, I hope it will in a measure relieve the existing conditions. However, I never dreamed that Republican ingenuity would be so great as to succeed in eliminating nearly every safeguard which my bill provided.

The bill that I introduced on the first day of this session provided for a capital of $1,000,000,000 and the power to issue bonds to the extent of five times the capital. This would have made it possible to utilize $5,000,000,000 for the purpose of relieving the distress current throughout the country, and not, as you maintain, for the purpose of reestablishing confidence. Confidence, I agree, is important, but even more important are those provisions which will make for confidence. If, as you say, the creation of a corporation with a capital of $500,000,000 and resources of $2,000,000,000 will result in confidence, therefore it is logical to believe that a corporation with a capital of $1,000,000,000 and resources of $5,000,000,000 will be bound to be doubly effective in creating confidence. But in the last analysis what is needed is the ready cash and the liberal credits; these will turn the tide.

But I fear that under this bill, which should be designated a big banker, railroad, and agriculture relief bill, the small banks, the small-business men, and the small industries will secure only indirect benefits, if any, and the municipalities, which are in dire need the country over because of Republican misrule, are foreclosed from receiving any aid whatever. And this, to my way of thinking, is the most important omission and fault of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, the need to aid our municipalities is great, and relief given to them would have a more beneficial effect than any loans made to New York banks or to their railroads. Several of our large cities are in danger unless immediate relief is given to them, for they find it impossible to borrow money to pay employees, including policemen, firemen, and teachers. I reiterate, the conditions in our municipalities are alarming. In the city of Chicago we find ourselves, due to Republican misrule, 2 years behind in collecting our taxes and unable to borrow funds to operate. What is true of Chicago is true also of most of the large municipalities—New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit—but it is not necessary to go further. The municipalities constitute an important part in the functioning of this Nation, and it should be recognized that aid given to them will enable them to start needed but delayed improvements which can result in work for thousands of unemployed, thereby making it unnecessary for the unemployed to be objects of charity or to accept doles.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, without trying in any way to mitigate the hard lot of the farmers, I want to say that this great economic upheaval has not been called an "industrial depression" for nothing. It is an "industrial depression," and being that, it has affected the cities particularly, because they are the seats of industry. The 8,000,000 or more unemployed people in the United States are the unemployed of industry, and, consequently, of the cities. I repeat, the lot of the farmer is distressing, but at least he has a roof over his head and enough to eat, and to that extent he is not in as serious a plight as the city dweller.

I appreciate the assurances which many of you have given me to vote for my amendment to secure relief for the municipalities; but, unfortunately, due to the ruling of the Chairman, this is impossible. Therefore, I will introduce a bill to that effect and will endeavor to secure favorable action from the committee, so that I can obtain a vote on it in the House; and if I succeed, I hope that you will demonstrate by your votes that you do believe in reciprocity and do recognize the fact that the unemployed people of the cities, unable to secure food, grow as hungry as those on farms. Remember, I ask for no appropriation, only a loan which will be repaid with interest within 1 year. That is all I ask for, gentlemen.

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, before I conclude, permit me to make this observation and suggestion: Having lost confidence in our banking institutions, many people have withdrawn their savings, which is to be deplored, inasmuch as this retards the resumption of business and employment. But had the President acted in time, Nation-wide committees to unloosen hoarded money would have been unnecessary. Like Nero, who fiddled while Rome burned, the President "fiddled around" while this economic and social destruction was being wrought. I doubt whether there is $1,400,000,000 of hoarded money, unless it be in the coffers of the extremely rich, and he should realize that we cannot unloosen it from them by an appeal or a law. But I will suggest what could and should be done without delay to put more money into circulation.

We have today in the Treasury over four and a half billion dollars' worth of gold; therefore instead of selling bonds and increasing taxes to obtain sufficient revenue to meet the deficit, why not issue the amount of currency against the gold reserve in the vaults of the Government that is permitted under the law? Is there anyone who will deny that the issuance and the putting into circulation of approximately $5,000,000,000 in currency would not relieve immediately the terrible conditions?

Oh, I realize that the propagandists of financiers, big business, and big hoarders of money will immediately create alarm by saying that this is inflation. But the Lord only knows that the deflation has gone far enough, and if ever there was a need for some inflation, this is the time.

Why should people be obliged to repay their obligations with a dollar that has two or three times its 1929 value? As I have stated several times, Mr. President, if you had acted on my recommendations 2 years ago, yes even a year ago, there would have been no need for your extraordinary appeal to unloosen hoarded money, and if you will act on my suggestions in this respect, the country can be saved from complete ruin and demoralization. But I doubt that you will, and this notwithstanding that during your campaign and after your election you encouraged and urged the people to invest their savings in inflated stocks and bonds.

You sanctioned—yes, it is charged, aided in—the unloading on the small banks and people of over $8,000,000,000 worth of foreign bonds that are now worth less than 50 cents on the dollar. Against my protests, you have permitted the avaricious Wall Street racketeers, the "bears" and short sellers, to hammer down the prices of the securities which you advised the people to buy to a small fraction of their real value.

You have remained mute to all appeals and warnings. Your last play to unloosen hoarded money is another gesture; you know—and if you do not know, you should know—where the money of the country is; it is in the coffers of the international bankers and stock manipulators.

You have frequently assured the country that you are opposed to wage reductions, but your indifference, your refusal to call Congress to pass needed relief legislation, has brought about reductions in wages, salaries, and earnings of all breadwinners. Is it possible that your deliberate inaction was due to a plan, as it is often charged, to force wage reductions for those still employed?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4012) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4012) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, with Mr. CELLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I think my friends on the minority side of the aisle will acquit me of the habit of indulging in partisan discussions on the floor of the House. As a rule, I avoid that kind of discussion when important measures are under consideration. But I want to depart from that custom today, in order that I may briefly bring the record down to date and keep it in harmony with the facts.

Reference has been made to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act as a partisan measure. That bill was first passed in this House in January 1932. The bill was sponsored by the present chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, now addressing you. Mr. GARNER was Speaker of the House and Mr. Hoover was President of the United States. We were approaching the end of 12 years of rule under the party represented by the Hoover administration at that time. There had been, during that period, 10,000 bank failures in the United States. We had witnessed a sweeping decline in our trade and commerce, both foreign and domestic. Agriculture was paralyzed. Bankruptcies in every type of business extended throughout the land. The people were suffering from Nation-wide mortgage foreclosures upon farms and urban homes. Confidence was completely destroyed. Bank runs were the order of the day, and many solvent institutions were closing frequently as a result of the lack of confidence on the part of the public.

Some of us, and I speak authoritatively, had for years proposed and urged the passage of legislation to restore confidence in banks by insuring bank deposits, and to put an end to the suffering and distress experienced by the people of the country as the result of bank failures. It is not unfair to say that the occupant of the White House at that time was sought out by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House, and other Members, and urged to cooperate in passing legislation to insure bank deposits and restore confidence. We were unable to secure his approval or his cooperation. But this House in 1932 passed a bill insuring bank deposits, along with another measure providing for the liberalization of the policies of the Treasury, and the Federal Reserve System, with a view to raising commodity prices and preventing the further spread of insolvency extending over the Nation.

The Senate of the United States was under the control of the opposing political party, and both of those measures failed of consideration in the Senate. We were told over and over by those in high places, by leading men in the financial world, and those high in official circles that the collapse of community banking institutions throughout the United States was a wholesome development that should be welcomed. That was the answer to those of us who were fighting to arrest the downward trend that had become the source of serious alarm to all in positions of responsibility and to thoughtful citizens everywhere.

On Friday morning, after the Christmas recess of the Congress had been arranged to begin on Saturday night following, the President summoned to the White House the Speaker of the House, the majority leader, Mr. Rainey, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House, and other Government officials for a conference at breakfast.

At that conference the President suggested the passage of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. Let me relate the difficulties that were outlined to us around the breakfast table that morning. I cannot go into full details but we were told that 800 banks in the New York Federal Reserve district—not Dallas, Tex., not Atlanta, Ga., not Kansas City—but 800 banks in the New York district with a capital and surplus of $600,000,000 were impaired in the amount of $475,000,000. We were told that we faced a spread of bankruptcies and failures that would involve not only the banks of the Nation, but the railroads and the insurance companies in which the hard earnings of citizens had been placed through the years for the protection of their families. Those were the conditions confronting us; such was the picture presented that morning; and it was presented again that afternoon in a conference with certain Members of the Senate attended by leading bankers and businessmen from New York, and officials of the administration. At that time we were urged to call off the Christmas recess to consider such legislation. The suggestion was abandoned, however, and the legislation was taken up when we came back in January.

The bill that was introduced by the administration provided for the establishment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Under the administration bill offered the only institutions to be made eligible for relief by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were the banks, the railroads, and the insurance companies of the United States. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], who labored ably and constructively in the passage of that legislation knows that I am stating its history correctly.

A subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency was appointed to rewrite the bill, and the subcommittee for the first time brought within the benefits of the legislation the plan for direct relief to depositors who had suffered as the result of the bank failures, and the first provision for benefits to agriculture under that legislation. Those of you who will get the original bill will find that I am stating the facts.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Let me continue, please.

I wrote with my own hand an amendment to the bill which provided for loans for the relief of depositors in the 10,000 banks throughout the United States that had collapsed during the years 1920-31. That provision was fought by the administration and Treasury and Federal Reserve officials. I will not go further into detail unless I am called on to do so. The amendment was incorporated in the bill passed by the House. It was not included in the Senate bill but was agreed to in conference. I was followed into the conference committee in the Senate Office Building by those high in the administration at that time and urged to drop that provision from the bill. Not only that, we put in that bill the first provision for loans to agriculture and agricultural marketing associations, for the benefit of the farmers of the United States. Later under a change of administration the policy to which I have referred was extended by further legislation. Under legislation, for relief of depositors in closed banks, more than $1,000,000,000 was lent throughout the United States for the relief of people in communities where banking institutions had gone down in wreck and ruin.

Since that time other measures not necessary to enumerate here, have been adopted, amending and extending the benefits of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. Before Mr. GARNER left the Speaker's office he sponsored a bill on this floor that passed the House under which the benefits of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds supplied from the people's Treasury, were to be used for the benefit of all classes of business, large and small, in the United States. That bill failed of passage in the Senate, that body being at that time under the control of the opposing political party.

I was glad to cooperate with President Hoover. I sympathized with him. No man on this side can say that I ever allowed politics or any consideration of a partisan nature to interfere with my efforts to assist him—and the same is true of the other members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of this House. Mr. Chairman, I thought it was proper for the sake of the RECORD to refer to the history of this legislation. If this were the time and the occasion I should like to proceed further in tracing what has been done since then for the protection of citizens who trust their funds in the banks of the land; and to make the benefits of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation available to every business enterprise in the United States in the effort to enable business and industry, big and little, resume normal operations.

Mr. Chairman, we still have our difficulties. All has not been accomplished that we should like to see, but it is only fair for the truth of history to state these facts in justice to the membership of this House and to the present occupant of the White House whose leadership made these accomplishments possible, and which were impossible before he took office in 1933. [Applause.]

I now wish to refer briefly to this bill under consideration.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to my colleague, and am glad to do so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee—and this by reason of his intimate knowledge of the whole picture—whether in his opinion the failure of banks during the 10-year period from 1920 to 1930 was largely due to the fact that they had loans that could not be liquidated quickly or because the loans were unsound? Would the gentleman give us his opinion on that?

Mr. STEAGALL. I think a large part of unsound loans were held by the big banks that did not fail. When the fire spread from the back alley to the front street and involved those high in the banking world who had sneeringly answered our insistence that something should be done to save the community banks of the country, they came here and demanded that we open the Treasury of the United States for their protection; and under conditions that existed at that time we were afraid not to do it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman feel that those banks which are now making loans on an amortized basis are pursuing a much sounder policy from the standpoint of soundness and liquidity than did the banks in prior decades which made loans that were annually amortized?

Mr. STEAGALL. That involves a discussion of banking details. I think it is a fortunate development that we have come to stress the matter of soundness of loans rather than mere liquidity. As will be remembered, some of us labored industriously to liberalize the test for loans, and permitting loans made upon a basis of soundness to be accepted by Federal Reserve banks for accommodation to banks needing funds. We have accomplished some progress in this regard; officials of community banks were told by those in high places in the banking world, and in the official circles as well, that they should cease making loans to the people of their communities, to whom they had been accustomed to make loans, the soundness of which had been demonstrated by experience, but that they should seek investments elsewhere in what they were told were liquid securities. The country was flooded with billions of dollars of such securities, which later proved worthless. It was under that kind of leadership more than anything else that the smaller community banks of the country got into trouble. They were urged to cease making loans on character. They were told to standardize and automatize their loaning methods instead of continuing to do business in the light of their experience and in light of their knowledge of the character, the history, and the background of the people of their communities with whom they did business.

Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss the bill before us and I shall not yield further. The bill we are now considering provides for the extension of general activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation until January 15, 1941. The Senate has passed a similar bill, making the expiration date June 30, 1941—the end of the fiscal year—which many of us believe is an improvement.

An amendment will be offered to conform to the Senate provision.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was approved January 22, 1932. The measure provided a capital fund of $500,000,000 for the Corporation and authorized the expansion of capital to three times the original amount, making the resources of the Corporation $2,000,000,000. By a later enactment the resources of the Corporation were increased to $3,800,000,000. Later the resources of the Corporation were reduced to $3,400,000,000. The resources of the Corporation were again increased to $4,250,000,000. Measures were passed from time to time authorizing the Corporation to expand its capital for the purpose of supplying funds for different relief agencies and activities of the Government, the operations of which were conducted outside of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and not as a part of the regular activities of the Corporation. I attach hereto a summary of the activities of the Corporation.

Summary of activities of Reconstruction Finance Corporation from Feb. 2, 1932, through Feb. 1, 1939

	Authorizations	Cancellations	Disbursements	Repayments and other credits ¹	Balance outstanding
For benefit of agriculture.....	$2,584,639,140	$982,459,540	$1,446,284,760	$1,414,958,458	$31,326,302
To open banks to meet demands of depositors.....	1,334,744,454	196,378,317	1,138,217,337	1,060,626,324	77,591,013
For distribution to depositors in closed banks.....	1,331,814,759	327,511,981	983,701,788	920,580,062	63,121,726
For bank capital (including Export-Import Banks).....	1,349,234,714	169,593,552	1,146,590,662	562,558,630	584,032,032
For self-liquidating projects (including P. W. A. municipal securities).....	954,058,325	44,719,243	741,744,404	457,826,219	283,918,185
To business enterprises.....	390,816,097	86,027,903	160,595,495	49,697,449	110,998,046
To drainage, levee, and irrigation districts.....	142,845,995	20,480,759	85,600,433	3,204,792	82,395,641
To railroads (including receivers and trustees).....	1,248,348,590	307,561,724	826,773,161	346,509,316	480,263,845
For loans to and capital of mortgage loan companies (including $25,000,000 capital the RFC Mortgage Co. and $11,000,000 capital Federal National Mortgage Association).....	608,597,899	103,599,895	418,662,964	298,016,329	120,646,635
For loans to and capital of insurance companies.....	138,914,750	13,331,442	125,168,210	95,374,562	29,793,048
To building and loan associations (including receivers).....	154,240,454	29,028,416	118,221,753	116,255,022	1,966,761
To public school authorities.....	24,580,800	1,267,300	22,450,000	22,301,000	149,000
Catastrophe rehabilitation loans.....	10,784,521	4,139,466	12,003,055	9,540,494	2,456,551
To State funds for insurance of deposits of public moneys.....	13,087,716	23,085	13,064,631	13,064,631	-----
For mining, milling, and smelting businesses.....	12,655,500	7,392,000	4,179,700	1,531,252	2,648,448
For other purposes.....	669,057	54,243	614,814	514,489	100,325
Total, by directors of the Corporation.....	10,306,038,741	2,293,568,866	7,243,873,197	5,372,565,029	1,871,308,168
Allocations and loans to other governmental agencies and for relief by direction of Congress.....	2,900,601,066	15,001	2,801,096,178	2,753,398,603	47,697,575
Grand total.....	13,206,639,807	2,293,583,867	10,044,969,375	8,125,963,632	1,919,005,743

¹ Includes $25,111,268 credited on indebtedness for property taken over.

² Total loans to business of Reconstruction Finance Corporation and participating banks, $447,324,578. Bank participations $61,492,756, including $4,984,275 Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans taken up by banks.

³ Includes $2,699,236,946 cancellation of Corporation's notes pursuant to act of Congress approved Feb. 24, 1938.

I attach also a statement showing the income, expense, and surplus of the Corporation.

Reconstruction Finance Corporation, analysis of surplus (income and expense from Feb. 2, 1932, to Feb. 1, 1939, inclusive)

Income:
Interest and dividends earned.....	$491,441,259.75
Premium on loans and investments sold.....	7,889,337.41
Premium on Corporation's notes sold.....	700,309.69
Participation and commitment charges, etc....	1,394,905.72
	<hr/> 501,425,812.57
Expense:
Interest on notes sold—
To Secretary of the Treasury.....	194,801,846.54
To others.....	24,507,636.90
Other interest.....	1,694,332.80
Administrative expense.....	60,893,556.30
Other.....	9,676.99
	<hr/> 281,907,049.53
Balance, surplus and reserves.....	219,518,763.04

This statement is highly creditable to the management of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It discloses a high degree of efficiency that amply meets the highest expectations of those responsible for the enactment of the law. Great credit is due Jesse Jones and his associates for the splendid manner in which they have conducted the business of the Corporation.

The bill under consideration provides for the continuance of the Electric Home and Farm Authority. The Electric Home and Farm Authority is a corporation set up under the laws of the District of Columbia out of relief funds for the purpose of making loans upon electrical appliances in connection with rural electrification and to extend the use of electrical appliances in rural and in urban homes at reduced cost. The Authority has a capital of $850,000 provided from N. I. R. A. funds and held by its trustees for the United States. It borrows its requirements at low rates with R. F. C. backing.

It has purchased from 2,573 dealers in 32 States 101,953 installment contracts covering installment sales for home electrical appliances aggregating $15,573,318, of which $7,239,106 has been paid. These contracts usually run from a few months to 3 years, the average being about 2 years.

Electric Home and Farm Authority operates in cooperation with utility companies and with dealers who sell the equipment. The dealers guarantee the notes and the utility company makes collections with its monthly bills. It is helpful to householders who find it necessary to buy on installment.

Buying these contracts is making loans to business enterprises, to dealers, upon the security of the equipment sold, and the obligation of the purchaser of the equipment. Payments are made promptly, and there are no losses to speak of.

If we did not have the Electric Home and Farm Authority, the R. F. C. would extend the same service in small loans to business. It is much more convenient and economical to handle these particular loans through the Electric Home and Farm Authority as they are now being handled. It is simply the businesslike way to conduct these operations.

The Authority is not losing money and there has been a substantial reduction in the interest rates paid by consumers. That Authority has served over 100,000 families in the United States, aiding them in securing these modern conveniences for home life at a reduced cost. The Authority is saving money for consumers, promoting the distribution of modern appliances for the convenience and comfort of the public, and involving no loss to the Government.

Another provision of the bill under consideration makes the assistance of the Disaster Loan Corporation, established under a previous act, available for loans for relief from disasters occurring during the years 1939 and 1940. Under the present law the Disaster Loan Corporation is limited to demands resulting from disasters occurring in 1936, 1937, and 1938. The act was approved February 11, 1937, to meet the conditions arising from floods in Kentucky, Ohio, and elsewhere, and later amended to take care of floods in 1936 and also in 1938. The Corporation has loaned $9,661,733. It has collected $1,808,199, leaving now outstanding loans in the amount of $7,853,534. The bill under consideration would increase the capital of the Disaster Loan Corporation from $20,000,000 to $40,000,000. It is hoped that the additional amount authorized by the pending bill will not be needed, but it is felt that the Corporation should be supplied with sufficient funds to care for disasters that may occur during 1939 and 1940.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Banking and Currency through the years I have been a member thereof has rarely been a partisan committee. It has been my boast that behind closed doors I have never seen there a vote cast from partisan motives. The interjection of partisanship this morning is not to my own taste.

The gentleman from Alabama, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, has, as best my memory goes, correctly given the early history of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with the exception that there was before the meeting at the White House to which he made reference a meeting in October attended by the older members of the committee from both sides, together with the Secretary of the Treasury, Assistant Secretary, and others concerned with the situation. It was the most solemn meeting I ever attended. About 30 men were present, equally divided between the parties. The President told us that unless we committed ourselves to a program that would hearten the people every bank in the United States would close its doors within 2 weeks.

Partisanship was forgotten. No man spoke there with any desire to advance his own fortunes or that of any party. We left the meeting on that evening with an agreement by every man there that he would stand by four proposals and secure their enactment at the earliest possible moment. The news was given to the country by telegram and for the second time President Hoover saved the day. He had saved it when he secured the moratorium on foreign debts and he saved it again that evening.

Mr. Chairman, I refer to this with no desire to claim any credit for any party or for any man. I say that the 30 men who were there, by the action that was then taken, staved off what came on the following 5th of March. There followed other conferences, no doubt, and perhaps advantage came from them. I do not repeat this with the desire to claim any credit for any man or for any group. One of those measures developed into the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, started by a Republican, developed by a Democrat, the most efficient and useful public service that was rendered in the course of those trying years.

I am not here to ask that you refuse to continue the life of this Corporation. If you please, extend it for 2 years. I would vote for it as long as the Corporation is headed by Jesse Jones, who has been the outstanding man in the present administration for his efficiency, for his judgment, for his prudence, and for his usefulness. [Applause.]

I greatly regret that the gentleman from Chicago should have seen fit to renew the slur at Mr. Jones for the loan to the Dawes bank. Mr. Jones told us the other day that he thought we would in the end get out of that loan without loss. If it should all be lost, nevertheless it saved the complete wreckage of tens and twenties and hundreds of banks in the Northwest.

Leaving that aside, however, let me tell you why I take the floor this morning. It is to raise the question whether we have reached the point when we may begin to stop any of the work that has been done. In phrasing it in that way I imply no slur upon what has been done. That is a question of itself. I am asking you to confront the question of whether it is time to begin to curtail. We were told that all these measures in the mass were meant for depression measures and were temporary expedients to be abandoned whenever the time came. It is true we are not out of depression. It is true that somehow, for some reason no man explains satisfactorily, a year and a half ago we entered upon a new and secondary depression, and some of these measures may be continued wisely by reason thereof. But whether or not we shall start at once strikes me as a question we ought to face on both sides of the aisle dispassionately and without prejudice for the public welfare.

It so happens that tied up with the general extension of the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is that of one of the smaller corporations, the Electric Home and Farm Authority. I ask your consideration of that with no hostility to its purpose and with no criticism of its conduct, but simply on the ground that this furnishes an excellent example of the sort of thing in my judgment we ought now to face.

The Electric Home and Farm Authority was created for the purpose of advancing the sales of electrical equipment, of all appliances that go into the home and are operated by electricity. This was perhaps one of the desirable things in the whole program through which we have passed. It was perhaps important that we should encourage the sale of electrical appliances. If I remember aright, the first suggestion came in connection with T. V. A. It was said we should encourage and help T. V. A. to make disposal of its power by having the Nation finance conditional sales. When the camel put his nose under the tent he kept right on. This camel has been going under the tent until he is almost out of sight behind the canvas. This activity has expanded until now it is found in 32 States, with every indication that it will presently get into the other 16.

In short, we have established here a system which furnishes Federal Government backing for an industry. We have picked out one industry and are putting the Government behind it. This is perhaps a good thing, and I am not going to argue that at all, because I do not know much about it. I do argue, however, that if you finance the conditional sales of vacuum cleaners you have exactly the same duty, if it be a duty, to advance the conditional sales of automobiles.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I have the impression that the Electric Home and Farm Authority is an activity that is maintained because of its beneficial influence upon interest charges in installment buying. If I am correctly informed, this agency is not endeavoring to build up volume. As I understand, it has spread out into several States because of the necessity of influencing interest charges in installment buying in such States, and the agency has served to bring about a form of schedules maintained heretofore by all interests selling on the installment plan, for instance, the sellers of automobiles and other articles that are sold on credit, and has served to hold down interest charges to the extent that installment buyers are now saved hundreds of millions of dollars on their credit transactions. This is my understanding of the purpose of the activity and of the influence it has had upon interest charges.

Mr. LUCE. The point I am bringing out is not the desirability of the ends the gentleman has in mind. I am raising the question of whether we shall embark upon or continue and spread our Federal Government activities until we give every sick and feeble activity Federal subsidy.

Some years ago I told the House one afternoon I was the only Democrat left in Congress. Two other Members rose to their feet and demanded admission to my quota. One of them is no longer with us. I do not know how the other two men would feel on this particular matter, but I do think that Thomas Jefferson would never have dreamed of extending the activities of the Federal Government to the financing of any one industry in this country as is done here. So I rather think I may claim still to be the only Democrat left in the House.

I cannot conceive it to be a wise function of a democratic government to undertake perpetually the practice of financing individual industries by putting behind them Government credit. This may be a good industry, and I am not arguing that point. It may have helped and doubtless has helped a hundred thousand people to get into debt. I am not arguing that point. It may be a desirable thing that any sick industry should be helped by the Government, one that is so feeble it cannot stand on its own feet. I am not arguing that point. I am arguing against the wisdom of the Government's perpetuating such a program after the need has passed and after no more emergency exists in that particular field.

It may be added that this is an industry peculiarly free from any questions of depression-produced suffering. It is a luxury industry. Of the 14 appliances and equipment concerned, only 4 are in my own home, and I have thought my home comfortable. I had not supposed myself to be among that third of the people alleged to be ill-housed. My forebears had none of the four and they did not know they were ill-housed. It did not occur to them to ask the Congress of the United States to finance their purchase of attic-ventilating fans or any of the other 13 conveniences listed.

I leave a parting thought with you. Observe that the bill as it is printed, although the chairman of the committee has explained that he intends to amend it, will make this authority expire about a week before a new President is inaugurated. The newspapers have been greatly concerned with the question of who will be the next Democratic candidate for the Presidency. In the hearings we were told that the present occupant of that chair, according to the memory of the witness, desires his authority to expire January 15, a week or so before the next inaugural. The gentlemen above me in the gallery may infer from that some answer to their question of who will not be the next Democratic candidate for President. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 14 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, although there is considerable time for discussion of these matters, it has to be taken in turns because of the division of time on the rules and on the bills. I tried to say something during the first 5 minutes that might cause you to be interested to know a little more about these measures.

The gentleman who preceded me talked about the Electric Home and Farm Authority, which is under the control of the R. F. C. I have here the report of the Rural Electrification Administration, which seems to be a close relative. In this report there is no statement of assets and liabilities or of its financial conditions. It simply tells us how much money they have given to each State, and I can find but little financial information that is worth while. It is full of stories to prove how wonderful it is that the farmers can have electricity. It is full of matters like this—how the housewife likes her new equipment, "I do not know how I ever got along without it; I would almost rather give up my husband than give that up." It is replete with that sort of thing. I have several such statements marked, but I have not the time to read them. I tried to explain to you in my previous remarks that the banks of the country will lend at 1 percent to this Authority, backed by the Government, when they could get 9 percent from the borrower himself; but they do not want to take any chances, and the banks have heard probably the stories of high-pressure salesmanship indulged in to sell them these things. The stories have been plentiful. The best one I have heard I will give you only to illustrate, perhaps, what has caused the feelings the banks have about the proposition and explain why they are unwilling to loan even at 9 percent. He had one cow. The agent sold him two milking machines—and took the cow for security. [Laughter.] If that needs further explanation, he was probably told that he needed the two machines because one might be out of order sometime.

High pressure salesmanship! That was to be expected. But this highly colored report dwells only on the great blessing it has brought to the farmers. When, oh, when, will we recover from the "blessings of the New Deal"? It will tell you how the two babies, born too early, were saved because the farmer had electricity in his house, and you can believe it if you wish to. Such are the tear-compelling arguments.

Of course, it is a good thing. I am not saying it is not, but I am trying to bring out the thought that there are many such good things upon which our Government might embark. I know and you know quite well that the "road back" is the only "safe road" and we must take that road mighty soon. Huge debts do not seem to frighten you, but we have gone through with a tremendous amount of money. A $50,-000,000,000 debt is facing us. I suspect you will be saying, "Well, we went through with an awful lot with that last President of ours." A lady said, "I went through a lot with that husband of mine," and the other said, "How much—$100,000 worth?" [Laughter.]

I must read to you rather hastily of the many activities the Government has indulged in and in respect to most of which it has used the R. F. C. as the dumping ground to furnish the capital stock and start them on their way. The R. F. C. gave Harry Hopkins $1,800,000,000, and the Treasury took R. F. C. notes for it, made them pay interest and carried it as an asset on the Treasury books, so you could read that the Government had assets to that amount. P. W. A. would take its securities to the R. F. C. and it would market them and again use the money. By using the R. F. C. to furnish the capital stock of these many devices which we set up, we could temporarily hide the losses and the Treasury could report the face value as assets. A year ago we ordered cancellation of about $2,600,000,000 of these so-called assets then appearing on the books of the Treasury.

The President, as I have told you before, during the campaign of 1936 on the stump—we have his speeches—stated that we had $6,000,000,000 of assets. Did not he know that two and a half billion dollars were worthless assets, notes of the R. F. C., based on money that had been given away? If you do not believe it, in May 1937 they had $3,-625,000,000 of the notes of the R. F. C. In May 1938 only about seven hundred and sixty-three millions were reported. Was that honesty in bookkeeping? I was interested in Mr. Jones' recent testimony. "We control the Commodity Credit Corporation." I then asked how many bales of cotton they owned. Well the answer was, in effect, "the Government is supposed to own 11,000,000 bales of cotton." Then I asked, "Have you taken over any of that cotton?" "No." "We still hold the farmers' notes, and have not foreclosed on any of that cotton?" "No; these assets of the Corporation are notes of the farmers" and there was cotton on which money was loaned at 12 cents a pound. I had thought the Government owned 11,000,000 bales of cotton. That it would not dump except at favorable intervals so as not to hurt trade. I fear that they are like the seed-loan notes. I have told of this before. We have a large amount of farmers' seed-loan notes dated from 1921, amounting to about 152 millions of dollars carried at their face value as assets in the Treasury. Contemplate that. This statement goes out to the public, and I have complained often, but what is the use of complaining? I have offered a resolution "that these securities be audited." It was summarily dismissed by the majority. We have complained about money misspent in various activities and the Comptroller General has ruled that the money has been improperly spent. But what can we do about it? The water has already gone over the dam. We cannot recover.

I here desire to put into the RECORD a list of the various corporate devices and spending agencies backed by the Government. Can you not think of something favorable to your district that may be set up as a corporation, to loan money at a very low rate, with the Government guaranty, or has everything already been provided for? There are the H. O. L. C. mortgages, the farm land-bank mortgages, the Land Bank Commissioner mortgages, the R. F. C. mortgage companies, savings and loans securities, the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation, the Federal Home Loan Bank, the United States Housing Authority—which now wishes to double its activity. This is the proper hour to consider these things, because we are to be asked during this session to renew many dangerous powers granted to this administration, which is bringing about a debt of $50,000,000,000. There is the Export-Import Bank, and you will be told about that this afternoon. The papers are full of comments the last few days relating to it. Will you loan to Brazil or rather loan to dump wheat in Brazil and arouse the Argentine to demand reprisals? Is that the good-neighbor policy? Are you sabotaging the work that was done in South America lately? Of course, the banks did not loan any money to the Chinese Government for war material, but we loaned it to her for something else, that she might use other moneys that she may have for armament. You do not have to loan money direct for war purposes. This merely releases other funds for that purpose. Oh, the ways by which definite purposes can be attained by indirection. And the helplessness of those who try to learn the truth. Committees of the Congress are often unable to arrive at the whole truth.

To resume, there is the Disaster Loan Corporation and the A. A. A., with about a billion yearly; the Electric Home and Farm Authority, the R. E. A., with about seventy-five million; and the F. D. I. C. and the T. V. A. and the C. C. C. and the Federal Subsistence Homestead Corporation and the intermediate credit banks. All have been subsidized by the Government. The Central Bank for Cooperatives and banks for cooperatives, and the Maritime Commission, with loans of $61,000,000 already. Then there is the agency for seed loans, and the Farm Security Administration; a new thing to take over Tugwell's Resettlement Administration vagaries. Now it is the Farm Security Administration, thinking you would not recognize it. There are loans to Indians, and now we are soon going to be asked to loan for socialized medicine and many other things not yet thought of. There are about 27 of these corporate devices carrying merrily on, because their transactions are guaranteed by the Government.

Am I saying anything that you care to refute? I yield if I am. Does anyone challenge any of these statements? Does anybody care to suggest a misstatement? Well, I trust the recital will be interesting to the new Members of this House who will wish to know what has happened to their Government during the last 6 years. I have the Treasury statements here, if anybody wants to challenge my statements. When we declare it to be dishonest bookkeeping, why do you sit there and take it?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Gladly.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Is it not true that the Farm Security Administration shows that over 85 percent of their funds which they have loaned will be paid back?

Mr. GIFFORD. No. The F. S. A. has under its control those resettlement schemes like Tugwelltown, which already is a 50-percent loss.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. No. I am talking about the loans that are being made to the farmers.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am talking about the Farm Security Administration. I am not talking about the farm mortgages and the farm land banks. These F. S. A. schemes are enterprises that Tugwell started, and the Government owns them lock, stock, and barrel, where they expect to resettle people, build manufacturing plants in competition with private industry, which the Comptroller said they could not do.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I am not defending those. I am defending the loans that are being made by the Farm Security Administration.

Mr. GIFFORD. I think the gentleman is referring to the Farm Credit Administration. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD].

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, many million voters have become "annoyed" with the New Deal and "are in the market for something better."

So states that brilliant publicist and distinguished Representative from New York [Mr. BARTON], who in a clever article in Collier's entitled "After Roosevelt, What?" endeavors to show that the Republican Party is prepared to give the people what they want without "annoying" farmers, business, the unemployed, or any other sizable group of voters.

Our distinguished political analyst discovers that the Republican Party realizes at last that this is the twentieth century and that the task of this century is to raise the consuming capacity of the people. This must be done because "the masses of the American people have been thoroughly convinced that they should and can have a better life."

The enlightenment of the Republican Party has gone further than this.

Both parties—

We are told—

are agreed on adequate relief, collective bargaining, the regulation of exchanges, social security, and low-priced housing; these, in principle, have ceased to be matters of political controversy.

This is certainly some concession. Thumbing through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the past 6 years, the curious reader discovers that every one of these five major New Deal policies was bitterly attacked by the discredited and futile Republican minority in Congress, who prophesied ruin to follow in their wake.

The guaranty of bank deposits, the H. O. L. C., the N. R. A., the T. V. A., the A. A. A., the removal of gold from the control of the banks, the S. E. C., and even the C. C. C. met with an opposition that was appalled by such direct efforts to restore confidence, protect investors, save mortgaged homes, to use our public power resources for the benefit of the people, and to take drastic and bold measures to save the farmer. Hardest of all for the paralyzed opposition to accept was the Government's recognition of its direct responsibility for the welfare of the people, which extended to the unemployed, resulting first in the Civil Works Administration and then in the Works Progress Administration.

In 1934 the two parties lined up in the congressional campaign in direct and deadly opposition. The Democrats defended the New Deal and advocated its development. The Republicans, almost without exception, attacked the New Deal as socialistic, impractical, wasteful, unconstitutional, and, above all, as an "infringement upon the liberties of the American people."

The people's answer was to greatly increase the majority membership in both Houses, an unprecedented result in midterm elections.

A strengthened Democratic administration proceeded to develop and expand the New Deal. The majority supported measures intended to give security and decent living conditions to farmers and to workingmen and women everywhere, to promote collective bargaining, and even to work out a system of fair labor standards with the abolition of child labor. Along with this came the Social Security Act, which represented the first attempt of any administration to provide for the aged and the unfortunate. It is as yet inadequate, but it is a great beginning of a new and better era.

In 1936 the two parties went before the people in a Presidential campaign. The candidate of the Republican Party showed his acumen and political sense by attacking a minimum of the New Deal measures. For the most part his argument was something like this: "Restore the Republican Party to power and we will do the things the Democrats have done, but will do them better, without burden to the taxpayer and without strain on the Constitution."

However, in most congressional campaigns of 1936 the New Deal was roundly attacked as subversive, socialistic, extravagant, and as being opposed to business.

The result of the 1936 election was decisive. Once more and unmistakably the people approved the New Deal and asked for its rapid development.

Then began an unprecedented attack in Congress, in the conservative press, over the radio, in forums all over the land, against President Roosevelt and the Democratic program. Losing at the polls, the opponents of the New Deal took other and subtler measures to stop it.

These attacks, combined with adverse decisions of the Supreme Court, prevented the rapid development of the Democratic program to restore business prosperity and employment. Frankly, the Seventy-fifth Congress failed to accomplish the objectives of the administration. Nevertheless, every poll clearly revealed that the great majority of the voters were with the administration.

In the congressional campaigns of 1938 the Republicans, instead of attacking, took a different tack, based, perhaps, on Landon's technique 2 years earlier. In many districts they refrained from attack on the President. In district after district the Republican candidate cried: "Elect me and I will do the things the Democrats have done, but will do them better, without burdening the taxpayer and without strain on the Constitution." This gentle wooing by ardent candidates, combined with their dramatic readiness to espouse all sorts of panaceas presented by minority groups, turned the trick in many a congressional district.

Instead of the normal mid-term pick-up of 40 or 50 seats by the minority, the Republicans gained 70 seats. This is clever work. No wonder the old party is heartened, that it hopes to return to power through the adoption of a program that will "annoy" the fewest possible voters; that it advocates "adequate" relief without "unbalancing the Budget," a clever utopian idea calculated to "annoy" no one.

Mr. BARTON has the program ready. In the first place, the Republican Party must reaffirm the old-fashioned faith that there is no substitute for work, that the way to have more is to produce more. He emphasizes the obvious fact that abundance is obtained through mass production. Adroitly skipping the fact that abundance in warehouses and elevators and factories and on the shelves of great mercantile establishments does not necessarily mean abundance in the homes of the people, he tells us that he sees in the fact that about one-third of the families in the United States have an annual income of only $471, "the greatest challenge and opportunity ever offered in American industry."

Only, of course, under Republican leadership, when $471 can be given the purchasing power of $800. How? The implication is through further application of science to industrial production. But the real answer is by keeping wages low and, if this cannot be done, by keeping the relative cost of labor so low that prices can be lowered. There is no suggestion for lowering of prices through the abandonment of the cunning and crooked and destructive practices which made enormous unearned profits for the inside groups, who cut such melons as that notorious million dollars handed to Grace by Bethlehem Steel while the stockholders got no dividends and labor was underpaid.

So here we are, with precisely the same old sophistry, the same philosophy of reducing labor costs and thus attaining "normalcy," with low prices which will convert the lowest income groups into valued customers. Of course we all know that under no price level ever yet devised can a $471 family have anything but the barest hovel in which to live and the barest minimum of food, with rags and tags for clothing. The scientific investigators in the cost of living have given us data on this. Whatever the income, one-fourth normally goes for rent. If more, there is lack of balance in the family budget. Does the gentleman from New York think that under his system of low prices rents will go down so that the family with an income of $471 can rent a decent house for less than $10 a month? In fact, that figure will have to be nearly doubled. So we have our $471 American family unbalancing its budget in the beginning by paying nearly if not quite half its income for rent. What about food? First come milk, bread, eggs, cereals, meat, fruit, vegetables. By expert buying and cooking the normal family of four can get these food necessities for from $5 to $6 a week. Happy situation! The $471 family, unless it lives in a cave, will be just able to pay the grocer and the milkman and will have precisely nothing left for clothing, heat, light, carfare, dentist and doctor bills, church, and recreation, not to mention funeral expenses for those members of the family who kindly give up the struggle and pass to their eternal reward in what it is hoped will be a land of plenty.

The impossibility of the prices of the basic necessities being reduced sufficiently to enable the $471 budget to cover necessities is evident to all except the lyric writer who gives hope to the minority side of the House.

We Democrats think and know that the only way to bring back that lowest one-third of our population is by raising their income. Lowering the price of overstuffed furniture, office desks, sewing machines, automobiles, even clothes and silk hats, will not help these destitute Americans. Science applied to industry will not lower their rentals or make the hovels in which they live fit for human habitation; science applied to industry will not reduce appreciably the cost of essential foods. It may reduce the cost of clothing, but the lower-income Americans simply cannot buy new clothing. It may reduce the cost of furniture and furnishings, of costume jewelry and silk hosiery, but it will not enable the poor to buy these.

And it must be realized that the core and center of the opposition plan is the reduction of the relative cost of labor. Whether this is done by reducing wages or by reducing the number of the employed, it simply reduces the purchasing power of labor, regardless of lower prices of goods beyond their income.

Hence, the heavenly heyday envisioned in this much-discussed clever article becomes merely a pipe dream, consoling to Republicans who still dream of the good old days when industrial melons were juicy and plentiful, when laborers in the steel and automobile and other large-scale industries had to deal individually with some foreman or boss, and when given the pay of peons had to like it or leave it.

With collective bargaining, with the shorter workweek, with better working and living conditions, the lot of labor has been vastly improved under the Roosevelt regime. Much has been accomplished. And much remains to be done.

First is a better understanding between Government and business. The signs are favorable for this. Many business leaders realize that a prosperity beyond any ever experienced is possible in the United States if production, employment, wages, and purchasing power are simultaneously increased.

All the Democratic Party asks is that the great majority of financial and industrial leaders accept the new order. That they abandon exploitation and all the old rottenness and help to bring about increased production for a vastly increased consuming power. In general, businessmen seem to be ready for this. Many have also accepted collective bargaining and the principle of good wages and shorter hours. For businessmen, always shrewd and alert, are coming to realize that the greatest market in the world lies all around them, right here in the United States. They are figuring now on increasing sales in this State or that, where employment and wages are improving, where the luxury field has been enlarged, where better housing brings demand for new furniture with all the fixings, and they are hopefully noting the trend to reduce the number of families in the $471 group and thus to convert destitute groups into customers. This will mean larger production and steady profits. That it may mean a higher rate of taxation on profits is not so important, so long as there are profits to be taxed.

The writer used to be deeply interested in foreign trade as a means of raising our national income and our standard of living. The undeveloped countries on this continent offered, at that time, what seemed to be the best opportunities for new outlets for manufactures. Right now, he recognizes the fact that while foreign trade is good, a vastly increased home consumption due to increased and widely distributed purchasing power, is the real solution. Here is the golden key to balanced prosperity. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for a continuation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Electric Home and Farm Authority until January 15, 1941. It also provides for a continuation of loans by the Disaster Loan Corporation through the years 1939 and 1940.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was organized on February 2, 1932. It was organized to give relief to the banks, the insurance companies, and the railroads. Since that time the activities of that Corporation have been greatly enlarged. Whether or not the original organization of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the purposes to be subserved demonstrated a fundamental difference between the Republican and Democratic Parties I leave for you to decide. It is beside the question here. Whether or not it is a fundamental conception of the Republican Party that if you give relief to the large industries and they prosper, the average man will prosper also, I think is beside the question, because the other activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the enlargement of its powers, have been voted for, irrespective of party alinement, by Republicans and Democrats.

Since the organization of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, its powers have been enlarged as follows:

It has been authorized to make loans to States and municipalities for relief and work relief; to finance the sale of agricultural products in foreign markets; to finance and carry on the marketing of agricultural products and livestock; creating the regional Agricultural Credit Corporations, who make loans to farmers and stockmen; loans to railroads; purchase of preferred stock in insurance companies; loans for repair or damage caused by floods or other catastrophes—to carry out the purposes of the last-mentioned authorization, the Disaster Loan Corporation was formed—loans to purchase the assets of closed financial institutions; loans to States and public agencies and business enterprises; to aid in financing projects authorized under Federal, State, and municipal laws; loans for organizing farmers' mineral rights pools; loans to aid the mining, milling, and smelting industry; loans to aid the fishing industry; loans to school authorities for payment of teachers' salaries; loans to public-school districts and other public-school authorities.

Those were not just gratuities given at the whim of Congress. They were given to the people of America because they came before the committee telling it that they needed this help and imploring that it be given to them.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was organized on February 2, 1932, and it has continued to function to this time. From February 2, 1932, to February 1, 1939, it disbursed $10,044,969,373, and it has received repayments and other credits amounting to $8,125,963,632, leaving a balance outstanding of $1,919,005,743. I think that is a splendid record. It is a great tribute to that plain, homespun, sensible man who administers this great organization. I am in accord with the views that have been expressed by our able colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. Jesse Jones has done a splendid work. He does not affect the phraseology of the professor or the assurance of the professional economists but he is a man of sound judgment and great ability. He has accomplished much good, not only for part of the country but for all sections. It is true some of the people who have been benefited by these activities do not seem to think he has been as liberal as he should have been but, after all, he was administering a trust. It was Government money that he has been spending. He has handled it conscientiously and faithfully. I think this report is one of the finest reports of any agency in the history of this or any other Government.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Of this $1,900,000,000, how much is still good or collectible?

Mr. SPENCE. Practically all of it. We have heard talk about the loan that was made to the great bank in Chicago. I believe it is generally recognized that that loan prevented a major catastrophe. [Applause.]

Coming from the Ohio Valley, a section that has been periodically devastated by recurring floods, I am deeply interested in extending the authority of the Disaster Loan Corporation to make loans to those affected by disasters during the years 1939 and 1940.

This corporation was originally organized in 1937 to aid those who had been the victims of the flood in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys.

It was subsequently amended to include loans to the victims of the disasters of 1936, including the floods in New England, and subsequently amended to include loans because of the disasters of 1938.

It now has the power to continue lending to those who were the victims of the disasters occurring in the years 1936, 1937, and 1938, including the New England hurricane, but not to those affected by disasters in subsequent years.

The Disaster Loan Corporation was incorporated originally for $20,000,000 nonassessable stock.

Loans disbursed for the Ohio Valley flood was $6,785,000.

There has been repaid $1,750,000.

Five million dollars approximately still outstanding and unpaid.

Hence the entire capital, to which its lending capacity is limited, will be exhausted.

The present amendment increases the capital to $40,000,000 nonassessable stock, making available $20,000,000 for loans for the years 1939 and 1940.

The principle of equal justice under law is involved because all those who are similarly situated should have substantially the same relief, and those who are the victims of disasters in 1939 and 1940 should be able to obtain the same assistance as those who were affected by disasters in previous years.

The purpose of the law is to furnish relief to those who by no care, prudence, or foresight on their part could have protected themselves.

It may not have been administered with the liberality with which we would have liked to see it, but there is a provision in the law that there should be reasonable assurance of the repayment of the loan.

I hope in the future the law will be administered in a spirit of helpfulness and liberality and the powers of this corporation will be extended as provided in the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired; all time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 1 of the act approved January 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 5), is hereby amended by striking therefrom "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 15, 1941"; (b) section 1 of the act approved March 31, 1936 (49 Stat. 1186), as amended, is hereby further amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 15, 1941"; (c) section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (47 Stat. 9), as amended, is hereby further amended by inserting after the second sentence thereof the following sentence: "Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the Corporation as provided by section 4 hereof."; and (d) the act approved February 11, 1937 (50 Stat. 19), as amended, is amended by striking from the first sentence "$20,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$40,000,000"; and by striking from the second paragraph "or 1938" and inserting in lieu thereof "1938, 1939, or 1940."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. STEAGALL: Page 1, line 5, after the word "thereof", strike out "January 15" and insert "June 30."

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. The distinguished gentleman on the other side of the House, in making an address earlier today, stated that $2,500,000,000 was lost in the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In view of the splendid work all Members of Congress feel this organization has done, will the gentleman from Alabama kindly enlighten the membership of the House whether this statement is true or not?

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman from New York that I purpose to incorporate in my remarks statements that will show the various transactions and tell the entire story of the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the various corporations dealt with in the pending bill.

Mr. SIROVICH. Is the statement as to the losses true?

Mr. STEAGALL. Answering specifically the question raised by the gentleman from New York, there has been no net loss in the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation up to this time in any year resulting from the operations of the corporation itself.

Mr. SIROVICH. Have they made a profit?

Mr. STEAGALL. I infer that the gentleman's question is predicated upon statements which may have been made upon the floor in my absence referring to losses by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation supplied funds for relief measures on various occasions and under various acts of Congress in lump sums, which was simply a method employed to raise the funds for those activities of the Government.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation in its own operations has had individual losses in some instances, but the net account shows a profit of $219,000,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the amendment the gentleman has offered have any reference to the Electric Home and Farm Authority?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; this is simply an amendment changing the expiration date from January 15, 1941, to the end of the fiscal year June 30, 1941.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. STEAGALL: Page 1, line 9, after the word "thereof", strike out "January 15, 1941" and insert "June 30, 1941."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 2, after line 9, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Section 1 of the act approved January 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 5), is hereby amended by striking out the words 'or otherwise' where the same appears in the proviso of said section, so that the said proviso shall read as follows:

"Provided, That in order to facilitate the withdrawal of the credit activities of the Corporation from time to time during such period, the President finds, upon a report of the board of directors of the Corporation, that credit for any class of borrowers to which the Corporation is authorized to lend is sufficiently available from private sources to meet legitimate demands upon fair terms and rates, the President may authorize the directors to suspend the exercise by the Corporation of any such lending authority for such time or times as he may deem advisable."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment speaks for itself. When this act was passed we were in a sort of cloud concerning what our fiscal and credit policies should be. As a consequence we gave extraordinary powers to the President, particularly with respect to credit policies. The power contained in this act is one of them.

I believe it is the duty of the Congress to write the credit policies of the United States. I believe that the President should not be imbued with such authority that he can create a situation wherein we virtually operate under a managed economy. Today the United States Government and all of its people are operating under a managed economy as severe as prevails in any European or Asiatic country. The President by Executive order can plunge this country into a depression any time he wants to, and he has done so. The President may expand the currency, may accelerate the velocity of credit so that he can inflate our credit and currency to the prejudice of all our business dealings. No democracy in the world has delegated to even a group of individuals such extraordinary power as he has with respect to credit.

Under this bill as it is written the President can find upon his own responsibility and without seeking the advice of anyone that there are available adequate private credit facilities and may withdraw R. F. C. credits.

He does not have to seek or follow the advice of the Board of Directors of the Corporation. The most important thing about this is that we may today pass an act authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend to private industry, as we did, and the President within 24 hours may completely nullify the act of Congress by finding that, in his opinion, there is sufficient private capital available to meet the demands of those whom we seek to help. That is an extraordinary power which I do not believe we want to continue, now that we know something of the credit situation. Therefore I have asked that this bill be amended to strike out the phrase "or otherwise," so that the President cannot manipulate our credit except through the advice of the Board of Directors of the Corporation. I think it is very plain this Congress should recoup to itself control over our credit and currency. It is going to be my program, and I believe the program of a large number of the minority in this House, to prevent the extension of these extraordinary powers which have been given to the President. I affirm that this is the place to start.

If we are going to continue to give these powers to the President, the country should know it now. I do not believe this House wants to continue the policy which it has followed for the last 5 years of granting these extraordinary powers to an individual; therefore I ask that the members of the Committee not only give serious consideration to this as a fundamental question but that it adopt the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is a little difficult to tell just how far the gentleman's amendment goes. However, there is one organization covered by the pending bill that I desire to discuss for just a moment. I refer to the Electric Home and Farm Authority, which was created in 1935 for the purpose of financing loans to people in every section of the country in order to enable them to buy electrical appliances. The Authority has now been broadened so that they may also secure loans with which to wire their homes.

This Authority is not losing money. On the contrary, it is making a profit. At the same time it enables the people who desire it to secure credit with which to supply these appliances for their homes. It is not going into the loan business. The Electric Home and Farm Authority does not buy or sell appliances; it does not lend money directly to the purchasers of these appliances. It is done through the various dealers throughout the entire country. The Electric Home and Farm Authority buys up the securities or notes or installment contracts, and as a result, instead of losing money it has really made a profit.

It has purchased from 2,573 dealers in 32 States 102,953 installment contracts covering installment sales for electrical appliances aggregating $15,573,318, of which $7,239,106 has been repaid. These contracts usually run for from a few months to 3 years, the average being 2 years. The Electric Home and Farm Authority operates in cooperation with the utility companies and with the dealers who sell the equipment. It is not confined to the Tennessee Valley area, the Columbia River, or the Colorado River areas. It is not confined to those municipalities that own their own distribution system. It operates anywhere that these dealers want this convenience to help them supply credit to those people who want to buy electrical appliances for their homes.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Do I understand that the Electric Home and Farm Authority specifies the character of the contract under which the dealer sells this equipment to the householder or the farmer, or do they buy the contracts from the dealers that the dealers themselves have written?

Mr. RANKIN. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. Do they not specify the interest rate on those installment contracts?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. The interest rate, I believe, is 5 percent.

Mr. KEEFE. Then they are just taking the place of finance companies?

Mr. RANKIN. They are taking the place, as it were, of a finance company and doing something no finance company would do, financing small loans at low costs.

Mr. KEEFE. And beating down the interest rate so the purchaser gets the commodity at a lower charge?

Mr. RANKIN. Exactly; bringing down the interest rate so the poor fellow who wants to buy a few dollars or a few hundred dollars worth of these supplies may be enabled to get them at a reasonable rate of interest and pay for them in installments running over 2 or 3 or 4 or even 5 years.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the record show that the interest rates on these contracts taken over by this Authority are lower than the interest rates on contracts taken over by finance companies, many of which finance such contracts as the gentleman has just described?

Mr. RANKIN. They certainly are in some sections of the country. If a man borrows through some of these finance companies, invariably he has to get some one to look up the title to make his contract, or secure his loan for him, and by the time he gets the money it will invariably cost him from 50 percent to 100 percent extra for all these incidentals. This Electric Home and Farm Authority is a great organization and one that ought to be perpetuated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to follow the reasoning of the gentleman from Michigan in connection with this amendment. If it is desired at any time to terminate the activities of this Corporation, the better method would seem to be to permit the President of the United States to act upon his own initiative or secure any advice which he may desire to seek.

The position taken by the gentleman from Michigan would place the President without authority to terminate the activities of the Corporation in the absence of the approval and advice of the officers of the Corporation itself. In other words, the gentleman's amendment would leave it up to the board of officers to decide for themselves whether or not their activities should be dispensed with, rather than clothing the President of the United States with that authority. That is certainly what is involved in the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the reason for this provision is that we have various emergency acts which we hope may be terminated by order of the President without waiting for a session of the Congress in the event developments make it desirable to do so. The power was placed in the President to terminate any of these various activities in order that any action he may take in one case may be made to harmonize with others.

Whatever action is taken would necessarily deal with the whole situation. It would be a confusing thing to have the President clothed with the power to terminate an emergency activity in one instance and not in others. That is all there is to the amendment. It simply would take away from the President the power to terminate the activities of the Corporation, unless with the advice and recommendation of the officers themselves.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish to clarify what the gentleman has just stated. This amendment ties the hands of the President in no particular except that he cannot act unless the Board of Directors makes a report.

Mr. STEAGALL. I so stated.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The amendment does not bind the President to follow the recommendations of the Board of Directors, it requires only that a report be made; but it does prohibit him from acting on his own volition without receiving the advice of the Board of Directors of the agency he wishes to terminate.

Mr. STEAGALL. What the gentleman is seeking to do by his amendment if followed and applied is to tie the hands of the President so that if he decides to abolish any agency of the Government he must first get the consent of the officials to be abolished. That is all there is to the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this matter can be clarified very simply. The law now provides—

That in order to facilitate the withdrawal of the credit activities of the Corporation when from time to time during such period the President finds, upon a report of the Board of Directors of the Corporation or otherwise, that credit for any class of borrowers to which the Corporation is authorized to lend is sufficiently available from private sources to meet legitimate demands upon fair terms and rates, the President may authorize the directors to suspend the exercise by the Corporation of any such lending authority for such time or times as he may deem advisable.

The only question presented by this amendment is whether the President is going to have the sole authority to do this without any advice from anyone else, from any other agency of the Government, or whether he must seek the advice and at least have before him the benefit of the study and research of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. What does this mean otherwise? Why did we write into this bill the provision that upon the report of the Board of Directors of the Corporation he could find that private credit was available? This bill contemplates that the Board of Directors shall find that credit is available otherwise and so advise the President, and then he may or may not, just as he sees fit, curtail the governmental credit facilities. There is no obligation in this bill at the present time on the President to seek the advice of anyone. He may take action now on the recommendation of the Board of Directors or otherwise. Under this bill the President can sit at his desk 5 minutes from now and destroy the very intent and purpose of the legislative enactment of this Congress with respect to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

As a Member of Congress I do not wish to assume the responsibility for giving the President such power, and I do not believe if you understood this provision—and I am sorry there are not more Members on the floor today to discuss this all-important and fundamental question—in the face of the explicit instructions given you by the people of this country on November 8 you would want to continue giving this President or any other President extraordinary powers to control the credit of this country; credit is the very lifeblood of this Nation.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Is the gentleman in favor of the elimination of sundry boards or the curtailment of their powers?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. SPENCE. Does the gentleman, then, wish to leave it to the bureaucrats and to those who now have charge of these functions to say whether or not they shall be abolished?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would prefer that the bureaucrats, as the gentleman calls them and as we all call them, at least make a recommendation. This Congress seldom acts unless some of the bureaucrats do make recommendations. I would prefer that the bureaucrats make these recommendations rather than the "communicrats," or whatever one may call them.

Mr. SPENCE. Would they make a recommendation to abolish their own offices and abolish the power they have?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman the President is not bound to follow their recommendations in any particular, but the President has a right to assume that if the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which the gentleman concedes and I concede has done a splendid job, recognizes that credit is available from private sources, then, although the President is not bound to follow that recommendation, he should follow it to some extent; at least, he should have that information before him.

This does not go to the life of the Corporation. I believe Jesse Jones or any of the other members of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is worth ever so much more to himself in a private capacity than he is in a governmental capacity. We are proud to have such men as Jesse Jones and the other members of this Board in this particular capacity. I believe the President should not only seek the advice of the Board of Directors but in many cases follow it. In the case before us now, the President can act on his own initiative without seeking the advice of his own Cabinet, or any member of his Cabinet, or any agency which is set up to advise him on these matters. I do not believe the President should ever take the initiative or should ever be given the authority to take the initiative to dry up the very lifeblood of this Nation without some strings being tied to it. I think this Congress should have some assurance that he has at least sought the advice of someone before he takes such action. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Wolcott) there were—ayes 89, noes 110.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: On page 1, line 6, strike out subsection (b).

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will bring a test vote as to whether the House is or is not ready to begin curtailing the activities of the Government.

I have in my hand a page from the Harvard Business Review of last summer, showing a diagram whereby it appears that there are 57 varieties of alphabetical agencies created under the New Deal—57 varieties—you may have heard that phrase somewhere. It seems not to be confined to the consumption of beans, but to include also the activities of the New Deal. The next page has another table showing that there are inside of these 57 varieties 13 subsidiaries. So, if I rightly interpret it, there are 70 agencies that we now have to face. Shall they not or shall they be made permanent?

This motion authorizes the beginning of exterminating some of these 70 varieties. This particular one concerns the Electric Farm and Home Authority now operating in 32 States and employing 120 people. You will vote whether you will continue employing 120 public servants to interfere with private industry and to continue the process of shackling those who are ambitious to make a success for themselves.

Sir, I submit the question without further argument in its favor. It is a question of whether there shall be or shall not be a continuance of this particular subsidized industry.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I am only going to take a minute to answer my distinguished and beloved friend from Massachusetts, who is attempting to strike out one of the most important features and one of the most important activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

In the first place, prior to the inauguration of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, a person wanting to put a range in his home or some other electrical appliance, had to do so, if he did so, on time payments, with an interest penalty of from 22 percent to as high as 40 percent. The Electric Home and Farm Authority comes along and by taking a 5-percent discount enables the ordinary home owner to equip his home with all electrical appliances necessary at a very low cost.

Mr. LUCE. May I interpolate that that is increased to 9 percent in the process?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Well, admitting that, although I do not admit it, but admitting that is true, the difference between 9 percent and 22 percent is considerable and the difference is in favor of the home owner who is attempting to bring into his home the results of modern science in making the work in the home easier. Therefore I say that for us to undertake to curtail the activities of this particular corporation at this time would mean that we are doing two things. We are depriving the home owner of an opportunity to get electrical appliances cheap while at the same time we are providing a market for electrical power for both private and publicly owned institutions where the rates are fair and reasonable.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Is it not a fact that this agency has operated at a profit?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. That is true.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. And a big saving to its customers.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. With a big saving to the user and a profit to the corporation.

I think, Mr. Chairman, to adopt this amendment would be the most foolhardy step this Congress could possibly take at this time.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think it ought to be made clear, if possible, that this Electric Home and Farm Authority operates after the R. E. A. has completed its part. The R. E. A. builds the lines to the farms. The people then get together and form a cooperative at a fee of $5 each, and when they have enough members they can apply to the R. E. A., which lends them the money to carry the line and the poles to the farmers. When it was found that the farmers could not buy electric gadgets they had to think of something. So they organized the Electric Home and Farm Authority, which will lend money to these people at 9 percent to buy these appliances. It is a wonderful scheme. A high-pressure salesman sells these appliances for the dealer to these people, taking a so-called "grab" on the goods sold. The dealer can get his money from the Authority, which says it will not lose money. Well, at 9-percent interest and good profits perhaps it would not. The dealer is relied upon by the Authority to meet these obligations. But if the dealer loses too much money through these high-pressure salesmen, then the Authority will have to take over these appliances, which may be called "cats and dogs." As a result we will go into the pawn-shop business to a certain degree. It is very fine for the Government to back up all of these things, but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] simply asked the question, Do you want to cut down a little on these activities? Have they not already gotten such a start that they may not now finance themselves? If it has been proved a good investment, the private banks ought to carry on and the Government withdraw from this field.

Is it not a reasonable request to desist from this little activity and let the Nation know that we can begin to cut out some of these so-called emergency measures? We ought to think of some really ridiculous activity in order to bring this problem to your attention. I cannot think of anything ridiculous enough at the moment, but there are a tremendous number of activities whereby comforts could be brought to our homes if the Government will guarantee business against losses. I spoke of the movement for socialized medicine. When this is brought to your attention the appeal will be so great that you will vote many more millions if such a scheme as this is so persuasive.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to reply to the two distinguished gentlemen from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE and Mr. GIFFORD], these two new apostles of economy. I remember when the R. F. C. was created under the Hoover administration and they loaned the Dawes bank $90,000,000 and lost probably fifty million of it, that these two gentlemen sat silent. I wonder where Mr. LUCE, the author of this amendment, was in those days.

Where, where was Roderick then!
One blast upon his bugle horn,
Were worth a thousand men!

But now, when we are making money by helping the little man to buy a refrigerator, or a water pump, or an electric stove, or a washing machine, he becomes very much excited and calls it socialism.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], who just spoke—and we have heard often—I have often wondered how and why he talked so much and gave the facts all the time. I know now; he does not give the facts all of the time. He guesses at them. He says that this was organized for the farmer. If it would do the farmers any good, you would not hear of the two distinguished gentlemen from Massachusetts supporting it, even though it came from a rank Republican.

But this is not for the farmers alone. It was not organized in connection with the R. E. A. It was organized before the R. E. A., if I remember correctly, and it aids people everywhere in buying these appliances, whether in the city or in the country.

But when we talk about the tariff, when you talk about taking the tariff off refrigerators, the two gentlemen from Massachusetts will hit the ceiling, because they say their people are employed in manufacturing refrigerators.

When we try to work out a plan to enable the American people to buy those refrigerators, to buy those water pumps, to buy those electric ranges, to buy electric washing machines, to buy cream separators, to buy electrical dish washers, and sundry other electrical appliances, to make their homes more comfortable and more attractive, and to lift the burdens from the farmers and relieve their wives of the drudgeries under which they have struggled throughout the centuries, even though it does not cost the Government a dollar, but, according to this report, makes the Government a profit of $79,000, even though it furnishes a market for goods manufactured in Massachusetts, why then the two gentlemen from Massachusetts, who slept all the way past the Dawes loans, rise and manifest their indignation that this Government should participate in anything so socialistic.

They complain that their money changers in Massachusetts do not get their rake-off, that this is in competition with them. As a matter of fact, these small loans to these small people would not be made by those money lenders in whose behalf they complain, because they do not deign to touch the little fellows. If they do, they do not pile 9 percent on them, but they begin with 22 percent and work up.

I will place some data in the RECORD some time to show you how sales of electrical appliances have increased since this organization has been operating in 32 of the States.

O Mr. Chairman, this is doing more for the small householders of this country, upon whom the destiny of this Nation depends than almost any other organization, for the amount of money it uses, and it is making money instead of losing it. The small home owner is the man upon whom we must depend to save this country, and not on the money changer on the fifteenth floor. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, whatever sympathy there may be with the motive of the able gentleman from Massachusetts to curtail Government activities in various lines, I cannot agree with him as to curtailing this particular activity at this time.

There are some other activities I would be willing to endeavor to curtail, were it possible. Through one Government agency $45,000,000 was loaned to China in order to enable China to buy some of the things they could not buy in this country without that loan. Very recently the Export-Import Bank loaned some other countries $21,000,000 to enable their citizens to buy things they could not buy without a loan from this country.

Even now there is a gentleman in this country from Brazil, apparently seeking further loans from our people, notwithstanding the fact that at this time Brazil owes our people more than $350,000,000 in bonds and securities on which there is default of both interest and principal. I would like to see some of those activities curtailed.

But I would like to call attention to the fact that the R. E. A. is rapidly expanding its lines in all sections of the country. All of its lines are going into the homes of farmers. Anybody who knows anything at all about the farm situation must recognize that the buying power of the farmer is at a very low ebb. Furthermore, that the credit facilities of the farmers are at just about an equally low ebb.

It is true that under ordinary circumstances some of these customers, not only of the R. E. A. lines but also the public utilities, might go to their local banks and obtain the loans necessary to buy such equipment, but under the present system of running our country banks whereby some bank examiner sits on the desk and dictates how every transaction should be made, it is impossible for many country banks to make such loans. So it does seem to me this plan is working out satisfactorily. There has been no loss. If we curtail the buying power of the people who resort to such loans at this time, we will not only cripple the services of the R. E. A. projects but we will also cripple the buying power of the people who may patronize the public-utility lines in a similar manner.

Under the circumstances I hope this amendment will not be adopted. I believe this agency should be continued at least another 2 years, and that the people who, for the first time, are receiving the benefit of electrical facilities, may continue to buy, in a moderate way, the things which they absolutely need, not only for their comfort and convenience but the equipment which is absolutely necessary for the farm home, just as it is necessary for the home in the city. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on two occasions today reference has been made to the so-called Dawes loan, and I think that again, as happens every year, that matter must be explained in the language of Mr. Jones, Chairman of the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

One speaker said that the loan was $95,000,000. Mr. Jones says that the actual amount of the loan is $90,000,000. The next to the last speaker said that the losses aggregated at the present time $40,000,000. Mr. Jones, in his testimony on pages 18 and 19 of the hearings, says that $69,741,000 of the $90,000,000 loaned have already been recovered. On being questioned by my masterful friend from California, Mr. THOMAS F. FORD, Mr. Jones goes on to say in reply to this question by Mr. FORD:

Mr. Chairman, you have some securities in addition to that, do you not, that will ultimately pay out?

Mr. JONES. You mean of that bank?

Mr. FORD. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes. There are a lot of them, a tremendous aggregate face amount.

Mr. FORD. And much of that will pay out in time?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. Jones had previously testified in committee in response to a question which I asked as to what was the total amount of the loan, as follows:

Mr. JONES. Ninety million dollars. In addition to the collections there is on deposit with the court, I suppose, $7,300,000 paid in on judgments against stockholders on their assessments. That would make a total of $69,000,000, assuming that the court confirms the judgments. That would be $69,741,000. That includes both interest and principal payments. We have applied $16,363,000 of that as interest. I think I said, the last time I was up here, that probably we might lose as much as $10,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had not charged $16,000,000 of that against that loan as interest, that loan would be paid to within $5,000,000 of its face value at the present time.

Mr. Jones said last year before the Committee on Banking and Currency, in answer to criticism of the so-called Dawes loan, that although he was not Chairman of the Board at the time it was made, he was a member of the Board and voted to make that loan.

He did not want to shirk any responsibility at all. He said in substance: "Were I to be asked to do it again I would do it under those circumstances." The circumstances were that there were about $120,000,000 of deposit liabilities. The result of that loan sanctioned by Mr. Jones, then a member of the Board and now chairman of the Board was to save perhaps billions of dollars in the assets of the people of the Midwest and the far West whose life savings were involved. It saved, throughout that seventh Federal Reserve district, calamities similar to that which attended the unwarranted closing of the Detroit banks but a short time before. Mr. Jones was right when he said that even were we to lose every cent of the $90,000,000, it would probably be as good an investment as the United States ever made. I merely take this opportunity to clear up, I hope once and for all—at least as far as this session is concerned—any question about the so-called Dawes loans.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman or some Member advise us who was chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at the time the loan was made?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Was it not Pomerene, the Democrat?

Mr. RANKIN. This is the first analysis of the loan I have heard for some time. At the time Mr. Jones went in as head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the loss on the Dawes loan showed to be around $50,000,000. Prosperity increased, of course, when the Democrats came into power and we recovered some of those losses. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. I know the gentleman wants to be fair and will correct his remarks in accordance with the record.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CELLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4012) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 97, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein certain excerpts from the report of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC WORKS FOR THE NAVY

Mr. COX, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (Rept. No. 79), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

House Resolution 98

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 4278, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 6 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a Lincoln Day address delivered by my colleague, Mr. DONDERO, at the Northwestern Republican Club banquet in Detroit on February 16.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio talk given by my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Wolcott, in connection with the American Forum of the Air last night.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the organization of the government of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by me at Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by Hon. Elmer Anderson before the South Dakota Historical Society.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include therein a letter which I have just received regarding the Surplus Commodities Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FEDERAL OPERATION OF RELIEF OF THE SURPLUS COMMODITIES CORPORATION

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I have called attention on several occasions to the wastefulness, impracticability, and wanton destruction of all values, which exists in this Government, and which is growing daily by reason of the operation and control of relief activities by the Federal Government centralized here in Washington, in contradistinction to the traditional and democratic way in which we have heretofore successfully handled such problems through local governmental agencies, and to which system we should return. A good illustration of such destruction, not only of economic and material values, but also of democracy and respect for our Government, as well as of those deeper personal and individual moral and spiritual values, is contained in the following letter which I have just received from Minneapolis:

FEBRUARY 15, 1939.

HON. JOHN G. ALEXANDER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JOHN: I wish to give you some information in regard to the operations in this territory of the Surplus Commodity Corporation and the disastrous effect their distribution is having on both the retail and wholesale business in the territory on the commodities distributed.

As you probably know, what little I have is mostly invested in a wholesale company distributing fruits, vegetables, and groceries in Minnesota and the Dakotas, which business is injured, as well as the business of our customers, the retail grocers, by the unethical delivery of increasing and unnecessary quantities of commodities entirely unnecessary for relief. It is reported that many items are being used in trade or barter for other commodities and that much of the items delivered to relievers cannot be used and is a loss or is resold. It simply is not possible to dump such quantities in a territory without demoralizing the trade. For instance, the delivery in Minnesota in 1938, in some commodities in which I am interested, are reported as follows: 7,000,000 oranges, 100,000 boxes, or over 200 carloads; 1,775,000 grapefruit, 25,280 boxes, or over 60 carloads; 1,250,000 fresh peaches, 62,500 boxes, or over 60 carloads; 1,000,000 fresh tomatoes, 50,000 crates, or over 50 carloads; 4,500,000 fresh apples, 100,000 boxes, or over 133 carloads; 13,250,000 potatoes, 220,000 boxes; besides many cars of dried peaches, prunes, raisins, apples, rice, and many other quantities, apparently enough to feed many times the number of people on relief.

In North Dakota, from January 1 to August 1, 1938, 13,000 tons of food staples were distributed by the division of S. C. C. from the State public welfare at Bismarck, N. Dak., amounting to 742 carloads, including 280 cars of potatoes—in a potato-growing State—and other similar commodities, including 25 cars of fresh tomatoes.

It should be easy to see, with such quantities delivered miscellaneously, the effect it would have on the trade of the taxpayers who have to foot the bills for the losses.

The Detroit Lakes, Minn., paper carried a news item recently of the receipt there of a carload of clothing which was stored in the courthouse and that quantity on hand was so far above the needs that solicitors were sent out to urge people to come and get clothing so that the courtroom could be used for other than storage.

I would appreciate it if you will take a personal interest in this situation and if you wish further information will try and secure it for you.

Thanking you in advance, I remain,

Yours truly,

FRANK R. THOMPSON,
Minneapolis, Minn.

It is easy to understand the national trends and to visualize the future of a Nation which operates its public affairs, and especially anything as serious and important as our relief and unemployment problems, on such a basis as that described in the above letter. Sooner or later the day of reckoning will come, and then it will not be well either for the poor and needy of for those still untouched by the economic depression, and the great need of the day is for all of us to listen now to this cry which reaches to high heaven demanding that this situation be stopped and stopped at once and in its place that a sound, sensible, democratic, and constructive program be substituted before it is too late.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made earlier in the day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK AND COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution No. 96 for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 96

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 4011, a bill to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] desire time?

Mr. MAPES. Yes. Will the gentleman yield the time to which this side is entitled to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

Mr. SABATH. That is satisfactory. I yield the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order H. R. 4011 and provides for 3 hours' general debate, after which the bill will be taken up under the 5-minute rule.

The bill, H. R. 4011, extends the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank to January 15, 1941. It limits to $100,000,000 the aggregate amount of loans the Export-Import Bank may have outstanding at any one time, and this is the maximum amount of capital which the R. F. C. is authorized to supply the Export-Import Bank. The bill also provides that the Commodity Credit Corporation may have outstanding at any one time notes, debentures, and other obligations in the amount of $900,000,000 instead of $500,000,000, as provided under existing law.

I am not going to take a great deal of time because 3 hours has been granted for general debate on the bill, and the members of the Banking and Currency Committee, I am satisfied, will explain every provision and the need for this extension. I desire to call attention to one thing, however, in view of the remark that has been made that this aims to help only one section of the country. May I call attention to the fact that under this law we have aided every section of the country? Money has been advanced for butter, corn, cotton, raisins, tobacco, wheat, wool, mohair, and many other commodities. I think it has rendered a great service and has been a very great aid to our Nation. Personally I feel there should be no opposition to the bill or any of its provisions. It is legislation in the right direction, and, I repeat, it is legislation that has been of great benefit to every section of the country.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the Export-Import Bank render to Congress a statement of its financial condition; a statement of its profits and losses? Do we know anything about what it is doing?

Mr. SABATH. Oh, yes; it has made reports, and they are extremely satisfactory. I know the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, who have all the facts and all the information, will explain to the gentleman and thoroughly satisfy him or any other Member of the House on that point.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for the purpose of propounding a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs of the House may sit during the session of the House tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK AND COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, in order that there may not be any misunderstanding, I stated a little while ago that President Hoover recommended the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, that it was finally passed by a Democratic Congress, and that was one of the best things the Congress did. Not only is that a correct statement of fact but President Hoover also appointed the Board. I believe he appointed Senator Pomerene as Chairman of the R. F. C. and put other Democrats on the Board, such as Jesse Jones. I cannot see how there can be any controversy about those facts.

The bill pending before us, having to do with the continuation of the Export-Import Bank and the Commodity Credit Corporation raises several important issues. Although I am in favor of the continuation of both of these agencies, I believe their activities ought to be discussed freely. The Rules Committee has provided ample time in the 3 hours' general debate for such discussion.

As I stated, the bill raises new and important issues in this House. The Members, whether they be Democrats or Republicans, are largely familiar with the R. F. C.; however, they are not so familiar with the Export-Import Bank or its origin, and they are not familiar with the operation of the Commodity Credit Corporation, except the Democratic Members from the Southland and the cotton States.

Let me start first to discuss the Export-Import Bank. The original Export-Import Bank was designed to take care of our trade with Soviet Russia. That was the main purpose of enacting the law at that time. Now let us look at the facts. What do they disclose? Members of Congress will remember, when the question of recognition of Soviet Russia was before the House, it was stated if we would recognize Soviet Russia we would do a billion dollars worth of trade with her, including $200,000,000 worth of cotton.

Prior to the recognition of Soviet Russia and under Republican administrations we did over a hundred million dollars worth of business with Soviet Russia yearly. In order to obtain recognition of Soviet Russia, juicy and rich plums were dangled before the eyes of the big bankers and industrialists of New York City and before the eyes of the Baptists and Methodists of the South, who were against recognizing Soviet Russia on religious grounds. This tempting bait in the form of $200,000,000 worth of cotton trade annually caused the southern Democrats to jump on the band wagon to recognize Soviet Russia. Their Senators and Representatives did likewise, and so did other Members of Congress, who swallowed the $1,000,000,000 trade bait and propaganda.

Now, what are the facts? Instead of doing a hundred million dollars' worth of business, which we did previously, we do about $25,000,000 of business with Soviet Russia. Instead of buying $200,000,000 worth of cotton from the South, Soviet Russia has brought three and a half million dollars worth of cotton and they borrowed the money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to put over the deal.

This brings me back to the reason for the existence of the Export-Import Bank. Not doing any trade with Soviet Russia, of course, the bank went out of existence, but has since been revived. I have no criticism of the Export-Import Bank today and its operations, except in connection with one particular item. I believe it can be made very useful at the present time to promote and hold our trade with Latin America.

Mr. Speaker, we have a situation that is confronting this country and one about which we have heard a great deal from the President and from the Secretary of State during the last few months. I refer to our South American trade which the President and the Secretary of State are saying is being jeopardized by competition from the totalitarian states. The fact is, our trade is being jeopardized in South America and in Latin America, not so much by the totalitarian states as by Germany primarily through the use of blocked marks on a barter basis. That is the only way Germany can trade, because we have most of the gold in the world. They have no gold with which to trade, so they barter goods with blocked marks, and they are making very serious inroads on our trade in Brazil, the Argentine, and Chile.

Shall we continue to lose a large part of the trade we have been doing with these countries and which we picked up during the World War? We secured these markets during the World War when Germany could not ship goods to South America, and have largely held this trade. Under Hitler, Germany, through the use of blocked marks—and Germany has a perfect right to use the barter system of trading—is undermining our export business with the Argentine, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, and other South American countries. Germany, Italy, and Japan have as much right to trade in South America as we have. They have as much right to trade there as we have to export our goods to Poland or Czechoslovakia or Hungary, in close proximity to the German Reich. The only way to keep our trade in South America is to do what these other nations are doing, that is, to subsidize either our ships or our exports to meet the competition in the price of goods or in service. The Government should help in providing better facilities and transportation and with short-time credits.

Mr. SIROVICH. How about long-term credits?

Mr. FISH. And long-term credits also.

I am for this bill. I believe it is a sound proposal, particularly if we apply it to South America. I should like to see it confined to the American hemisphere or the American continent. I am a little suspicious, as I shall explain later, when loans are made in the amount of $25,000,000 to China through a Chinese bank.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Has the president or the board of directors of the Export-Import Bank the right to extend long-term credits to South America the same as European countries do?

Mr. FISH. This bank has the right to lend money to our American producers to ship their goods to any country in the world, not only to South America. I want to encourage our export trade with South America. I have to confess I am a pan-American. I also believe in the Monroe Doctrine. I believe Latin America is the logical market for the United States, and that everything should be done within our power to encourage trade with these countries. I believe this particular plan, the Export-Import Bank, is one of the ways to encourage such exports, and this trade should be extended. I may say, furthermore, that if we do not do something of this kind immediately, not next year, our failure to do so will be the kiss of death to the trade we have in South America at the present time. If we do not provide some governmental loan facilities now, we might as well be prepared to kiss the trade good-bye.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. Does the gentleman refer to this bill as now drawn, without amendment? Is the gentleman speaking of the policy in applying this measure if the life of the Export-Import Bank is extended?

Mr. FISH. That is right.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman is referring to the application of this measure as it now stands? Does the gentleman believe the bill as now drawn will take care of the South American trade to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. FISH. As the bill is drawn, extending the authorization to $100,000,000, it would take care very largely of the South American trade. I should like to limit loans to any country outside of South America or the American Continent to $5,000,000, so if loans in excess of that amount were sought to be made, the consent and approval of the Congress would have to be obtained.

I have to confess I am suspicious of this administration and its secret diplomacy. I am suspicious that this administration may use this weapon, Export and Import Bank, to lend money to nations abroad that are involved in war, and may drag us into war against the will of the American people.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman believe the bill should be safeguarded so it will provide that no money may be loaned to foreign governments for the purpose of buying our airplanes or other elements of our national defense which are secret?

Mr. FISH. I will have to divide that question. I may say to the gentlewoman I do not object to any foreign nation's buying our airplanes. I do not care what nation buys our airplanes, whether it be England, France, Italy, Germany, or any other nation. However, I am absolutely opposed to giving away our military secrets. I think that is a shameful performance.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But the gentleman does not want to sell our Army or Navy planes?

Mr. FISH. Certainly not. Why should Members of Congress vote money to hunt down foreign spies or to offset what we call the foreign spy system in America? We are told in the midst of this war hysteria that this country is covered with spies who have come here from foreign countries to try to find some of our military secrets or some of our airplane secrets. We appropriate money for protection against these spies and chase around after them, yet the President of the United States gives away the most important secret of all. Of course, I am against such procedure. If foreign nations wish to go into the open market and bid on our airplanes, I have no objection whatever.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I did not refer to bidding in the open market. I referred to selling our Army and Navy planes.

Mr. FISH. Of course, I believe anyone who has followed the Senate Military Affairs Committee hearings knows the position of the Chief of Staff, General Craig, and General Arnold, the Chief of the Air Corps, who protested against permitting a French officer to inspect one of our new types of airplanes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Would the gentleman then like to place in this bill a safeguard against such action?

Mr. FISH. The President did not do it through this bill but as Commander in Chief of the Army. I want a safeguard against lending money for war purposes to any country. I am not worried about South America, because in accordance with the Monroe Doctrine we have a moral obligation to defend South America.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman stated he does not object to our selling to foreign countries anything we manufacture, but objects only to secrecy in such transactions. Does not the gentleman believe that when people go to invest $25,000,000 or $50,000,000 they are entitled to know what they are buying?

Mr. FISH. Let them go to our factories.

Mr. SABATH. That is what they do.

Mr. FISH. But not to our Army and Navy, and get an airplane which is our newest and best airplane, one that has never been used before. Even the Chief of Staff and the Chief of the Air Corps have agreed this was one of our greatest secrets. I do not believe in selling American secrets. I believe in selling American goods.

Mr. SABATH. These were not secrets.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman to clear up in my mind what he means with reference to the $5,000,000 loan. Does the gentleman refer to authorizing the Export-Import Bank to make $5,000,000 loans to foreign countries as such, or to companies owned and controlled by foreign countries?

Mr. FISH. No; to lend to people over here to export our goods to foreign lands. For instance, this particular Export-Import Bank has made commitments totaling about $50,000,000, of which $25,000,000 is a commitment to the Chinese Bank or to a company backed by the Chinese Bank, 50 percent of which is owned by the Chinese Government. One thousand war trucks are being supplied by American money taken out of the Treasury of the United States to help the Chinese. All of us on both sides of the aisle may be for the Chinese, but when you get to financing foreign wars or when you begin to furnish war material for one party in a war, then you are dragging the United States directly into that war.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the testimony of Mr. Jones, where he directly said that this is not a loan to the Chinese Government but a loan to a Chinese-owned American trading company in New York and credits are extended not to China but to this company, which is partly owned by American interests.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman will follow through, he will find that the loan is made to some Chinese interests in America.

Mr. SACKS. No; to Americans.

Mr. FISH. An American-Chinese company which is backed by the Bank of China.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

That company is backed by the Bank of China and 50 percent of that is owned by the Chinese Government. So, indirectly, our Government is financing this war. We are supplying 1,000 war trucks and when you go to supplying war trucks the next thing will be supplying airplanes, machine guns, and war material. There ought to be a direct prohibition against it.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. SACKS. I also want to refer the gentleman to a short statement made by Mr. Jones in which he said that no war materials are being purchased with the money and that this money is lent in New York to an American firm and only backed up by the Bank of China to these American investors.

Mr. FISH. That is exactly why I propose that this bill should be amended so that none of this money should be used for war materials.

I am pointing out to the House, and this must be self-evident to any thinking man regardless of partisanship, of the $50,000,000 of total commitments, $25,000,000 has been made through the Bank of China and so far they have used it to send trucks to China. I want to stop that kind of financing. I do not care whether it is war trucks or something else used for war purposes, I want to stop it by an amendment prohibiting the use of any of this money for war material.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Certainly.

Mr. STEAGALL. As a matter of fact, there has not been one dollar of money loaned to the Universal Trading Co., with whom the negotiations respecting the $25,000,000 loan have been made. No money has been furnished them and none will be, except as each transaction is approved by the Export-Import Bank officials and by the State Department.

Mr. FISH. That is correct. This is a $25,000,000 commitment, which is one-half of the total commitments of the Export-Import Bank, and out of that they have already ordered 1,000 trucks that are to be paid for out of the $25,000,000.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; briefly.

Mr. GEYER of California. I do not know whether the gentleman has been inconsistent or not. Probably the gentleman has not been inconsistent, but it seems to me the gentleman said he would be perfectly willing to sell airplanes abroad, but not trucks. Am I mistaken about that?

Mr. FISH. I am willing to sell both trucks and airplanes, but not with Government funds. I do not object to other people coming over here and buying them. The Government of the United States is financing this transaction. I do not care if foreign nations spend their own money over here, but I do not want the United States to be a Santa Claus for the entire world in their eternal wars. We have been that once, and I do not want that to happen again.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not also an amazing foreign policy when we have a neutrality act on our statute books? I voted against the so-called neutrality act because I thought then that this very thing might happen.

Mr. FISH. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts is absolutely right, she voted against the neutrality act, but this is an unneutral transaction. If we finance foreign wars, of course, that is being unneutral. That is the reason I want to see an amendment adopted in this bill and I want to limit the amount, because I have no confidence unless it is done that the President will not endeavor to finance a war on some unneutral basis in China or elsewhere.

Now, just because the totalitarian states trade in South America, we are practically told that we must meet that trade with battleships and 16-inch guns, with submarines and torpedoes, and with airplanes and air bombs.

This is not the way to meet foreign trade or even foreign propaganda, and there is a great deal of totalitarian propaganda in South America. The way to meet such trade is either to have better goods, better prices, and better service, or subsidies and the way to meet the propaganda, of course, is to meet propaganda with propaganda, and I have never known the New Deal to be a shrinking violet when it came to the use of propaganda. Yet we are supposed to go to war because these foreign countries are trading in South America. We are supposed to go to war to meet this propaganda. We are expected to go to war to stop them from trading in Latin America. That is evidently a part of the whole scheme of war hysteria and appeal to emotionalism. I am in favor of this bill because it helps us meet that trade and that competition from totalitarian states, primarily Germany and Japan, in Latin America.

I think we ought to hold our Latin-American trade, but if we lose it we are to blame, then we will have something to explain because after all that is our logical market. The reason I do not like all this secrecy, the reason why the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] does not like the secrecy about these airplanes sales is because this is not the first of such transactions by the Government. A lot of us would like to know something about the stabilization fund, how that stabilization fund is being operated, and we would like to know whether $1 of that gold fund has been used to finance any war material for foreign nations, directly or indirectly, by devious financial and exchange manipulations. We would like to know all about the secrecy involved in buying silver from Mexico, Spain, and China, which was all done in secrecy. That is why we seek to limit the powers of the President.

I do not know, and I do not know that anybody else in the Congress knows, anything about our secret stabilization fund, or how these deals were put over to buy silver from Mexico and Spain. We found out about the airplane deal only because there was an accident and a French officer was injured. The American people otherwise would not have known a word about it.

In the balance of my time I propose to discuss the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The New Deal farm program has collapsed, and farm prices have fallen to the lowest level outside of 1932 and 1933 that they have fallen in this country, for 50 years. I hold in my hand a statement of the Associated Press, taken from the Washington Evening Star, which is headed "United States Cotton Exports Slump to 1880's Level."

UNITED STATES EXPORTS SLUMP TO 1880'S LEVEL

Commerce Department reports showed yesterday exports of American cotton slumped to the level of the 1880's during the first 6 months of the current marketing season.

Shipments to foreign countries between August 1 and February 1 totaled 2,192,285 bales, compared with 3,832,247 during the corresponding period last season.

Authorities on foreign trade estimated that unless there was a change in the Government's policies, exports for the full season would amount to about 4,000,000 bales. With the exception of the World War year of 1917, exports have not been less than 4,175,000 bales since 1885.

Nobody questions the good intentions of the New Deal farm program. Nobody on our side questions the good intentions of the New Deal to raise farm prices. I certainly never question the intentions of the New Deal to help the farmer, and I imagine that I voted for some of those bills. Their intentions were right, and the only test is whether they have succeeded or failed, and I say to you that the farm-control program of the administration is the most colossal failure in American history.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman says that he does not question the good intentions of the New Deal. I presume he knows that hell is paved with good intentions.

Mr. FISH. Yes. And the failure of the New Deal farm program is the most tragic and disastrous of all New Deal failures.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I question their good intentions to help the farmer. They sent their New Deal prophet, Ezekiel, to destroy 5,000,000 hogs, and then imported hundreds of millions of pounds of processed pork from foreign countries, and when they did that I say they were not looking after the interest of the American farmer or the American packing-house employee, who are out of jobs today.

Mr. FISH. That is the way it worked out but I do not question their intentions. I question, naturally, the working out of their program. In the main it was fallacious and unsound from the beginning. Their program was one of scarcity, of plowing under crops, of destroying crops, and of birth control of pigs. Under the Republican administrations, from 1922 to 1930, agricultural prices were generally 100 percent higher. The Commodity Credit Corporation, which a lot of Republicans know little about because they do not come from the cotton States, and under the Commodity Credit bill, which we are talking about, 75 percent of all of the credit has gone for cotton loans. The Commodity Credit Corporation now holds loans on $560,000,000 worth of cotton.

Under the Republican administrations between 1920 and 1930, under these wicked Republican administrations, under the wicked and vicious Republican tariff, cotton in the Southland averaged 17½ cents a pound and today, after 6 years of the New Deal, and I suppose you still want to blame it on the Republican tariff and Herbert Hoover and probably George Washington—in the Southland today, after this program of scarcity and plowing under of crops and the expenditure of half a billion dollars a year for the alleged benefit of the farmers, the great cotton crop of the South is now selling for 8½ cents a pound. That is why we say the New Deal farm program has failed. It has failed because it was wrong in the beginning. It was unsound and destructive, it could not work out. It is a program of scarcity, a program of the destruction of wealth, and that is only half the story when we speak of this cotton program.

You people of the South have followed the Tugwells, the Ezekiels, the Corcorans, and the Cohens, and you have followed them to economic suicide. They have given the kiss of death to you cotton producers of the South, and today you find cotton selling at 8 cents a pound, and as I say, that is only half the story.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; I cannot yield. You have also lost one-half of your world markets on cotton. Under a Republican administration you exported over 8,000,000 bales of cotton and this year you will not export 4,000,000 bales. As we reduced cotton crops under the New Deal farm program, Brazil, Egypt, Abyssinia, India, Soviet Russia, and China produced more and more cotton until they have produced 4,000,000 bales more for the world markets. They have taken away the wealth which under a Republican administration went abroad in the form of cotton and came back to the farmers of the South in the form of gold and buying power.

Naturally, when we discuss this particular bill, which has financed the surplus cotton, the American people are entitled to the facts. The Commodity Credit Corporation has spent 75 percent of its funds on cotton loans, averaging 10 cents a pound. It has already loaned $560,000,000 on cotton. What do you propose to do with this cotton? I just called up Mr. Jones and asked him, and he said, "There is nothing that can be done with it."

I submit there is nothing you can do except burn it. If you give it away you destroy the value of the cotton that is left; you reduce prices still further. We have not only had this economic loss, but we hold this cotton that is valueless—$560,000,000 worth of it—after appropriating year after year hundreds of millions of dollars to plough under cotton and create a program of scarcity. The net result is that we have lost both. The price has gone to 8 cents a pound here and we have lost the world markets for our surplus cotton.

The answer is: If you had cotton at 17 cents, the parity price; if you had wheat at $1.50, instead of 67 cents; if you had corn at 80 or 90 cents or $1, instead of 47 cents, then we could not say "your farm program has failed." There is only one test, and that test is the prices of these farm commodities. I say to you Democrats: Before I am a Republican I am an American. I want to see prosperity among all the farmers of our country in the South, West, East, and North. [Applause.]

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I do not yield. I do not care whether it is the Southland or the North. We know that cotton growers in the South with 8-cent cotton cannot buy goods produced in the North and the East. We know that your cotton men have no buying power and you cannot have any buying power unless you produce at a reasonable profit and use that profit for yourselves. Naturally, it is not a partisan issue. It is far above party. We cannot have a prosperous North, we cannot have a prosperous New York State, if the farmers of the West and the South are not making a reasonable profit beyond cost of production and have a buying power and are prosperous themselves. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 30 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying, indeed, to find the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] showing such a great interest in the South and in the growers of cotton. The gentleman is trying to point out that there may be a probable loss of $500,000,000. I do not know and no one can determine what the losses might be, but I do know that it will not be even one-tenth of the amount that the American people lost due to Republican administration on the $11,000,000,000 loaned to foreign countries. These bonds and debentures were unloaded on the American people, very little of which will be recovered.

The gentleman calls attention to the present-day prices. I remember that under the Republican administration of 1931-32 hogs and cattle were selling for 2 cents and 2½ cents. Today they are 8 cents. Wheat was selling from 27 to 29 cents. It is selling for about 60 to 75 cents now. What applies to these commodities applies to everything else.

So, although the gentleman shows an interest in the South, he is not showing a great deal of interest in the veracity and truth about conditions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that in the fall of 1932 beef cattle were selling over the scales in the Western States for as low as 2 cents a pound and that they are now selling for as high as 8 and 9 cents?

Mr. SABATH. That is what I was trying to convey.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And is it not further a fact that the total farm income for the year 1938 is nearly 100 percent higher than the total farm income for the year 1932?

Mr. SABATH. Nearly every intelligent man knows, but, unfortunately, for political reasons, some of the gentlemen on the other side do not wish the truth to be known and are trying to mislead the country with false figures and with untrue statements.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that in 1932 the total farm income was only approximately $4,000,000,000 and in 1938 it was a little in excess of $7,000,000,000?

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. I want to call to the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee that when the McNary-Haugen bill, with the principle of debentures, was before the House 10 or 12 years ago, Democrats and Republicans united to pass the bill. This would have put agriculture, including cotton, upon a parity with industry; but the Republican President vetoed the bill, and my distinguished friend [Mr. FISH], who is now so interested in the welfare of the cotton farmer of the South, voted against the McNary-Haugen bill in those days. That bill would have helped the farmer to secure the justice that he is entitled to receive. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am going to conclude, but before doing so I must call the attention of the gentleman to the statement wherein he said that great secrets have been disclosed to French representatives who were here to purchase airplanes. I have it on good authority that all secret instruments on that airplane were removed before same was shown to the Frenchmen. I hope that in the interest of fair play these misstatements will not be made in the future. There were no secrets imparted to the French representatives. This is all I wish to state; and now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4411) to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4411) to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, with Mr. Celler in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] is recognized for one hour and a half, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott] is recognized for one hour and a half.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the continuance of the Commodity Credit Corporation to January 15, 1941. An amendment will be offered to change the expiration date to the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1941.

The Commodity Credit Corporation was organized in 1932 by Executive order with a capital stock of $3,000,000. Additional funds were supplied to the corporation through the medium of loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In 1936 the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under the authority contained in an act of Congress, purchased $97,000,000 of the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation, making the total capital $100,000,000. In 1938 the capital stock of the Commodity Credit Corporation was transferred to the Treasury of the United States, and the Treasury, under the provisions of the act, is required to maintain unimpaired the capital of the Corporation at $100,000,000. The Treasury is required to have an annual accounting on the 31st of March of each year and supplement the capital stock of the Corporation in case of its impairment and authorized necessary appropriations to carry out this purpose. In case of a surplus it is to be covered into the general funds of the Treasury of the United States.

The purpose of the Commodity Credit Corporation is to make loans to producers or to finance the marketing of farm products or other commodities for the protection of producers against loss due to forced seasonal sales.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation made commitments to the Commodity Credit Corporation in the sum of $1,754,712,665, and made disbursements in the sum of $767,716,962. All of such sums have been repaid to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Commodity Credit Corporation disbursed money to the extent of $897,779,520. Of this amount $522,983,139 have been repaid to the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Loans now outstanding, including loans that are being carried by banks which the Commodity Credit Corporation is obligated to purchase, amount to $747,448,203.

Loans are made at the rate of 4 percent per annum; and when made by banks or lending agencies, the bank or lending agency retains 2½ percent, and 1½ percent is paid for the benefit of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The Commodity Credit Corporation is officered by men from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Treasury Department, and the Department of Agriculture. The directors come from the same agencies.

The Commodity Credit Corporation is managed by a board of directors consisting of Representatives of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Department of Agriculture, the Farm Credit Administration, and the Export-Import Bank.

I will insert in the RECORD a statement covering the transactions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and giving a complete account of its transactions:

Commodity Credit Corporation since its organization, pursuant to Executive Order No. 6340, dated October 16, 1933, has made loans on agricultural commodities in connection with programs of the Department of Agriculture. Such loans are functioned through the facilities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under an agreement providing for reimbursement of expenses incident to the loans. Prior to May 2, 1938, Commodity Credit Corporation borrowed funds required in addition to its capital, from Reconstruction Finance Corporation and through issue of collateral trust notes, on the security of the commodity loans. Since that date necessary funds have been borrowed through issuance of notes guaranteed by the United States, such notes being issued pursuant to the act of March 8, 1938 (Public, No. 442, 75th Cong.). From the date of organization through February 1, 1939, loans disbursed by Commodity Credit Corporation and by lending agencies, under a purchase agreement, have aggregated $1,284,931,553.12. Repayments have aggregated $537,483,350.17, leaving outstanding loans as of February 1, 1939, of $747,448,202.95. A statement of disbursements, repayments, and outstanding loans for each commodity, together with the collateral remaining pledged, is given below:

Commodity	Disbursements ¹	Repayments ²	Outstanding ³	Collateral pledged ⁴
Butter-----	$30,210,810.62	$10,490,926.04	$19,719,884.58	$20,292,146
Corn-----	245,528,329.25	155,062,131.09	90,466,198.16	$169,475,336
Cotton-----	908,536,279.99	348,212,538.47	560,323,741.52	$11,014,935
Dates-----	61,302.00	61,302.00	-----	-----
Figs-----	213,351.33	94,027.40	119,323.93	$7,414
Hops-----	1,394,627.62	-----	1,394,627.62	$7,035,156
Peanuts-----	12,207,271.31	7,154,475.70	5,052,795.61	$1,599
Pecans-----	296,524.63	5,116.92	291,407.71	$2,292,759
Prunes-----	2,653,229.20	2,358,207.89	295,021.31	$20,007
Raisins-----	3,685,303.52	1,317,000.00	2,368,303.52	$99,920
Tobacco-----	9,559,674.46	4,811,824.53	4,747,849.93	$431,755,191
Turpentine and rosin-----	19,234,528.21	5,998,882.47	13,235,645.74	$9,953,778
Wheat-----	40,775,960.59	640,162.68	40,135,797.91	$69,134,694
Wool and mohair	10,574,360.39	1,276,754.98	9,297,605.41	$58,687,957
Total-----	1,284,931,553.12	537,483,350.17	747,448,202.95	-----

¹ Disbursements to producers and commitments to banks and other lending agencies.

² Includes a balance of $14,370,462.68 on cotton loans and $1,019,748.01 on corn loans charged off after liquidation of collateral.

³ Includes loans held by banks and other lending institutions which Commodity Credit Corporation has agreed to buy.

⁴ Pounds.

⁵ Bushels.

⁶ Bales.

⁷ Tons.

⁸ Gallons transported.

⁹ Barrels of rosin.

Based upon the valuation of assets made by the Secretary of the Treasury as of March 31, 1938, pursuant to the act of March 8, 1938 (Public, No. 442, 75th Cong.), losses on commodity loans aggregated $92,422,740.32. In addition to such losses, administrative expenses totaled $1,862,664.01, making a deficit as of March 31, 1938, of $94,285,404.73, which amount was restored by appropriation authorized by the act of March 8 referred to above.

With the exception of the amounts charged off as shown above, the amount appropriated to restore the capital is not considered in the above statement and is carried as a reserve against outstanding loans.

The losses of the Commodity Credit Corporation amount to approximately $140,000,000. This statement is based upon actual losses already ascertained, and estimated losses that would be shown upon a final casting up of the account at this time upon a sale of the commodities held by the Corporation at present market prices.

Undoubtedly the Commodity Credit Corporation has rendered a great service to agriculture and to the Nation as a whole in aiding in the orderly marketing of farm products and other commodities and in protecting the people of the Nation against the sacrifice of farm products at seasonal periods.

The Export-Import Bank was created under the laws of the District of Columbia in 1934 by Executive order. The Congress in 1935 ratified that action. The capital of the bank was $1,000,000, and was held jointly by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce for the benefit of the United States; $45,000,000 of its preferred stock was owned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, purchased upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury and upon the approval of the President.

The bank's principal activity is in connection with the export of agricultural and manufactured products. The total commitments have amounted to $210,613,930. Of this amount $92,204,740 were canceled because of the inability of the applicants to complete the transaction or because they were able to secure satisfactory accommodations elsewhere when it was known that the Export-Import Bank would make the loans. Disbursements have been made in the amount of $63,618,965. Repayments have been made in the amount of $36,297,547. One hundred and eighty-one loans have been authorized and 88 of them not used.

The amount of the bank's participation in loans made jointly with lending institutions ranges from 45 to 75 percent, many of its transactions being of the type where the bank participates with other banks or lending institutions in extending accommodations.

A second Export-Import Bank was organized that did business for a while in connection with the minting and supplying of silver to the Cuban Government. Those transactions have been completed and the bank finally liquidated without loss.

I may say, replying to statements that have been made on the floor, that the Export-Import Bank had nothing whatever to do with the financing of the purchase of airplanes by the French Government. That was a transaction with which the Export-Import Bank had no connection whatsoever, directly or indirectly, and for which the officials of that bank were in no wise responsible.

The bank has made a commitment in the amount of $25,000,000 to an American Corporation known as the Universal Trading Co. owned by Chinese, the loan to be secured by endorsement of the Bank of China, an institution owned in part by the Chinese Government and in part by citizens of China. No loans have actually been extended under this arrangement, and no loan can be made or shipment made by reason of accommodations extended by the Export-Import Bank except as each transaction is approved by the officials of the Export-Import Bank and by the Department of State. It has never for a moment been contemplated that any sale of any type would be financed by the Export-Import Bank for war purposes or in violation of any treaty or any other law of our Government. No loan has yet been actually made under the agreement. Four years prior to the conflict between Japan and China, during the year 1933, there was a commitment for a loan in the amount of $50,000,000 to the Chinese Government. Only a small proportion of this loan was made, and a large part of the money used has been repaid. The agreement was canceled at the instance of China.

The first transaction of this type was conducted in 1932 under the administration of President Hoover by the Grain Stabilization Board, with the approval of the President and officials of the administration. A part of that loan has been repaid. The balance is being taken care of periodically and the obligations met as they mature under an agreement with the Export-Import Bank which now holds the claim against China.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am certainly opposed to a continuation of the Export-Import Bank, which is one of those institutions that grows by feeding on itself. I want to call the attention of the House to what I consider a rather important item in this bill. The law as it stands now reads:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Export-Import Bank of Washington and the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington.

Let me emphasize those words, "Second Export-Import Bank of Washington—District of Columbia," and so forth.

The revision of the act refers to the Export-Import Bank of Washington. Note it leaves the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington out entirely.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the Second Export-Import Bank has been liquidated and has been out of existence for some time?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That still does not answer the proposition that the law provides that a Second Export-Import Bank may be formed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. I understood the gentleman was criticizing this bill because it did not extend the time of the Second Export-Import Bank.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. We do not know whether the charter has been canceled. Can the gentleman assure us that the charter has been canceled?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Absolutely. It has been liquidated and the assets have been turned over to the present Export-Import Bank.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Does this law anywhere provide there shall not be a second Export-Import Bank?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. There is no provision in this bill for a second Export-Import Bank.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Let me read the law again:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Export-Import Bank of Washington and the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. What law is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I am reading the one passed on January 31, 1935, section 9.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Now we have only the one.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. But it is not provided in the law that there shall be only one. If it is so provided, I should like to know where it is in the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Of course, the gentleman certainly understands that the first Export-Import Bank, and the second for that matter, was organized under an Executive order?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. One of them has been liquidated, leaving only the other. If that is not plain to the gentleman, I do not know what is.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That does not answer the proposition that a Second Export-Import Bank may be formed. It is in the law. This law provides a limitation of $100,000,000 upon the one bank, not the other banks that may be formed.

There is another clause in the law which reads as follows:

Said banking corporations.

It is not "banking corporation" but "banking corporations." That is in the plural. What does that mean? It means the law as it stands at the present time places no limit to the amount that may be issued by a second, third, or fourth export-import bank that may be created.

May I make a further observation? This bank, of course, has extensive powers. The law was enacted some time after the Executive order creating the first Export-Import Bank of Washington, and was put into effect on February 8, 1934.

What is this Export-Import Bank for? It is used to finance loans, of course, for exporters. I should like to know this: With about $9,000,000,000 of reserves in our banks at the present time, with about $3,000,000,000 of excess reserves, with interest rates lower than they have ever been in the history of America, and the Government setting up an institution of this kind, it takes away all possible hope of the private investor or the private banker financing these things. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced if the American people knew exactly what this Export-Import Bank is they would abolish it in a minute, as they would a lot of these other agencies that have been set up in the last few years. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this bill (H. R. 4011) provides for the extension of the functions of Commodities Credit Corporation as an agency of the United States to January 15, 1941, or such earlier date as may be fixed by the President, and also authorizes the Corporation to issue notes and obligations in the additional amount of $400,000,000. This authorizes a total borrowing capacity of $900,000,000, which, coupled with the capital provided under the terms of the act of March 8, 1938, provides the Corporation with a billion dollars in the aggregate. These funds may be used by the Corporation in its activities in making loans upon the security of agricultural commodities. Originally, Commodities Credit Corporation was designed to assist the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in carrying out the latter's programs of production and marketing adjustment by means of loans to producers. Such loans were made, approximately, at market levels in order to assist producers to carry their commodities and market the same in an orderly manner at reasonable prices. During a period of many uncertainties in foreign and domestic affairs, Commodities Credit Corporation has provided the markets of the major agricultural commodities with a bulwark of strength or basic values which were available in the event of any weakening in market prices.

With the passage of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, Commodities Credit Corporation became the main vehicle for carrying into effect the principles of the ever-normal granary. This act provides mandatory loans upon the basic agricultural commodities of cotton, corn, and wheat. In the case of cotton and wheat, loans may be made under the act at rates varying between 52 percent to 75 percent of parity. The two loans which were authorized during 1938 were both made at approximately 52 percent of parity. In connection with corn, the act establishes a somewhat different formula, which depends upon the estimated production of the crop determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in November of each year. Under this formula, loans on the 1938 crop were fixed at 57 cents per bushel, which was 70 percent of parity, the minimum permitted under the act.

In addition to the foregoing loans, the Corporation is authorized to make loans upon the security of agricultural commodities recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture and approved by the President. The present loans of the Corporation cover the following commodities: Cotton, corn, gum, turpentine and rosin, wool and mohair, wheat, peanuts, tobacco, raisins, dates, figs, prunes, and butter.

The hearings held before the Banking and Currency Committee indicate that the Corporation has disbursed $1,284,000,000, including disbursements by lending agencies holding purchase agreements, and that repayments have aggregated $537,000,000, leaving outstanding $747,000,000. On page 69 of the hearings a detailed summary is presented of the disbursements, repayments, and amounts outstanding. It will be observed from the commodities listed that practically every section of the country has been affected by the loans of the Corporation. Necessarily, such loans can be made only upon nonperishable commodities which may be warehoused and stored for considerable periods of time. Efforts have been made in all instances to make such loans available solely to producers or associations of producers in such manner that the control and the marketing of the commodities is retained by the individual producer pledging the same. In only one or two instances have any exceptions been made to this basic principle. This principle has been carried to the extent that most of the cotton which has been released has been marketed by the producers which obtained the loans in the first instance. This practice has permitted the producer to negotiate for the sale of his own commodities with the result that such commodities move in the normal channels of trade without being concentrated in the hands of a board or commission.

I believe the loss under the last appraisalment by the Secretary of Agriculture was $94,000,000. This was last March. Ninety-two million dollars of this sum was lost on cotton. Since that time up to the present time Mr. Jones has estimated an additional loss of $20,000,000; in other words, we have a loss on cotton of around $110,000,000 and a loss of some four or five million dollars on other commodities.

This is not such a great loss compared with the benefits the farmers have received. It is impossible for the cotton farmers of the South to make expenses at the present price of cotton. In many districts in many States the only money crop we have is cotton; therefore, these losses added to what we have received from relief do not amount to anything like the sum received as relief benefits by the people in Pennsylvania and New York and many other States of the Nation. I am not advocating that anyone in our section have an advantage over people in another section. I want to assist all the people in every section of our country.

In making loans at or near market levels it is inevitable that in some instances losses will be incurred by the Corporation. However, in view of the vastly greater benefits accruing to all the producers by means of the price which is maintained throughout the marketing year, it is believed that such losses are well justified. The availability of a fixed loan throughout the marketing season has prevented many producers from undergoing the disheartening experience of finding the value of their commodities drastically reduced, due to a temporary market flurry, and as suddenly increased at a later date. The act of March 8, 1938, provides an orderly manner for the determination of the losses incurred by Commodity Credit Corporation and authorizes appropriations to be made annually to cover such losses.

As examples of the beneficial effects of these loans, the following instances may be cited. The conclusions, of course, are matters of opinion, but they can be substantiated in all instances by producers. For example, in connection with the loan upon butter, it is believed by those familiar with market trends that the loans by Commodity Credit Corporation prevented a break in market price of at least 5 cents per pound. Assuming an annual production of approximately 4,000,000,000 pounds of butterfat, this would represent an earning or saving to the producers of $200,000,000 by reason of the Commodity Credit Corporation loan. The total loans on butter have aggregated approximately $30,000,000, and an ultimate loss of two or three million dollars on such butter would not be serious in view of the above saving. As a matter of fact, the pledged butter surpluses are now being distributed in relief channels by using section 32 funds.

Let us consider the loan on wool and mohair. During the winter of 1938, the wool market exhibited extreme weakness due to rumors of trade agreements, depression, and other ills. The loan authorized by the Corporation immediately established a fair set of values and provided a steadying influence throughout the marketing season. During slack times when dealers or manufacturers were exhibiting little or no interest in wool, the producers were able to obtain loans on a reasonable basis with the possibility later of realizing upon any increase in values. This increase has occurred during the past 3 months, and well over 50 percent of the wool pledged to the Corporation has now been released and loans repaid.

The programs have worked similarly on all commodities, although in some instances the shrinkage in world and domestic consumption has more than reacted on domestic-market trends.

The hearings on the bill clearly brought out the manner in which the loans are authorized and handled. This procedure may be briefly summarized. The directors of the Corporation represent Farm Credit Administration, Department of Agriculture, and Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Under the terms of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, all loans are recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture and must be approved by the Corporation and the President. The diverse representation on the Board of Directors and the fact that the recommendations originate through the Department of Agriculture permits full discussion of the various loan programs undertaken by the Corporation, although the mandatory features of the Agricultural Adjustment Act greatly restrict the administrative discretion which might well be permitted to the agency involved.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made its facilities in the field available for the Commodity Credit Corporation loans, which has greatly simplified the operations of the Corporation and has prevented the extra cost which might be incurred by establishing new field agencies. Further, in most loan programs the Corporation has operated on the principle of permitting banks to make loans to the producers in the first instance which are later purchased by the Corporation at par plus 2½-percent interest. The advantage of this procedure is that the producer deals with his local bank in a normal manner and obtains the loans with the least possible delay.

Illustrations of the manner in which loans are made by banks under the contract to purchase of the Corporation are set forth on pages 62 to 67, inclusive, of the hearings. All loans are made without recourse and producers may obtain the pledged or mortgaged commodities at any time upon the payment of loan value plus interest and charges. As a consequence procedure is established which permits the pledged commodities to move easily back into normal trade channels.

Fifty-two percent of parity on cotton is around 8 cents, as the present parity on cotton is approximately 16 cents per pound.

I tried to persuade the Secretary of Agriculture to make the loan on cotton at a higher rate than 52 percent of parity. I believe if the Corporation had loaned 12 cents instead of 8 cents on cotton this past year the price of cotton would have been much higher, and then the Government could have sold cotton on loans of previous years at a much higher market price.

In conclusion, it is believed Commodity Credit Corporation should be kept available, with sufficient funds and powers to deal with the marketing and supply problems which may arise. [Applause.]

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, the Commodity Credit Corporation has made loans on a number of agricultural commodities. However, the great bulk of its loans have been upon cotton. I wish to make a few remarks this afternoon on the results of the cotton loans.

It will be recalled that the Democratic Party platform in 1932 condemned the Farm Board for its extravagance and because it was speculating in farm commodities. That platform also condemned the Republican Party because, it contended, the Republican Party had destroyed our foreign trade. Listen to this: The Farm Board during its existence made loans on a total of 3,478,000 bales of cotton. Since 1933 the Commodity Credit Corporation has made loans on 15,921,328 bales of cotton—on practically all of which there have been substantial losses because the loans were made above the market price.

In 1932 we exported 8,754,000 bales of cotton. The estimate for the year which will end July 1, 1939, is that we will export 3,500,000 bales, if we continue on approximately the same basis we have been exporting since the beginning of this crop year. In December our cotton exports were the lowest of any December since such statistics have been kept, going back to 1881. For this crop year up to date our cotton exports are the lowest of any year since before 1899. Perhaps the Farm Board should be criticized for its cotton-loan policy, but it must be remembered that its program was an experiment. Whatever has been done by the Commodity Credit Corporation has been done with its eyes open. In other words, this administration deliberately undertook to do something that had already been demonstrated to be a failure.

Our cotton situation is indeed a serious one. There is no one in the House who has any greater sympathy for the cotton producer or any greater desire to do something to benefit that commodity than myself. It is not a Southern problem, it is a national one. Undoubtedly, aside from unemployment, it is the greatest economic problem confronting the country today. Yet I think every one must admit that our method of handling it up to date by means of loans above the market price has been a failure. Today we have a situation where the Federal Government owns, or will own, approximately 11,000,000 bales of cotton, and the Government investment in this cotton is at a rate which is bound to result in a tremendous loss when it is liquidated.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Was the gentleman in favor of giving the Secretary of Agriculture, under the Agricultural Adjustment and Soil Conservation Act, the power to fix the loan price on cotton, wheat, and corn, as is provided in that language, as I understand, within certain limitations, in accordance with the schedule provided therein? Does the gentleman believe that is a wise provision?

Mr. HOPE. Of course, the act itself provides for mandatory loans on these three commodities in the amount of at least 52 percent. I personally do not believe that is a wise provision as far as cotton is concerned. I doubt its wisdom as far as wheat is concerned. I believe in corn we have a different situation, perhaps, in that we have there a commodity which is not exported to any considerable extent, a commodity which is consumed principally in this country and consumed almost altogether as livestock feed. I doubt the advisability of fixing a mandatory loan rate upon any commodity like cotton where a large proportion of the commodity must go into the export markets over which we can have no possible control.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. However, that is the present law?

Mr. HOPE. That is the present law.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. And the Commodity Credit Corporation has no discretion as to the loan price on such commodities.

Mr. HOPE. That is true. If we wish to get at this situation, we will have to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 rather than attempt to do anything in this particular bill, which merely extends the powers of the Commodity Credit Corporation for a further period of time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I was wondering whether in the gentleman's opinion the plight of the cotton farmer is due more to the law now under discussion or to the Three A's, or do both have a part in the situation?

Mr. HOPE. Well, my feeling is that the various cotton loans that have been made above the market price have contributed more to the present situation than any other factor.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. Have not these factors more or less had a very definite effect upon the free flow of not only cotton but all the other commodities in our markets? I am more familiar with cheese and butter, and is it not a fact that our cheese holdings and our butter holdings in storage today are far in excess of anything we have ever experienced in this country?

Mr. HOPE. Well, I shall take the gentleman's word for that, because I do not know. If the gentleman states that to be the fact, I assume it is. Of course, the Commodity Credit Corporation has not made loans on any other commodity to anything like the extent it has on cotton. Today we have considerably more than a year's domestic consumption of cotton in the hands of the Federal Government and loans have been made upon it. It is frozen, it is impounded there, at a price at which it cannot be disposed of except at a loss, and at a price at which it cannot be exported. If it is released from the Government loan and put on the market it is bound to utterly demoralize prices. I am not opposed to a continuation of the Commodity Credit Corporation, but I am opposed to our present policy of cotton loans above world prices. It has failed and will continue to be a failure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, our distinguished Republican from Ohio a few moments ago put his finger on one of the Ethiopians in the woodpile. Page 2 of the committee report indicates what the law will be after the pending bill is enacted. It will read as follows:

SEC. 9. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Export-Import Bank of Washington and the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington, D. C., banking corporations organized under the laws of the District of Columbia as agencies of the United States, pursuant to Executive orders of the President, shall continue—

And so forth. Therefore if this bill is enacted into law in its present form, you will continue the Export-Import Bank of Washington and the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington, D. C.

The limitation of $100,000,000 of outstanding loans applies only to the Export-Import Bank of Washington and not to the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington, for the limitation proviso in the pending bill reads as follows:

Provided further, That the Export-Import Bank of Washington shall not have outstanding at any one time loans in excess of $100,000,000, the capital for which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, when requested by the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President, may continue to supply from time to time through loans or by subscription to preferred stock.

The sky is, therefore, the limit of the obligations which the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington might incur. What are our New Deal brain trusters trying to put over in this bill? The record shows that every time the Democratic Party is in power our Uncle Sam is an international sucker who plays Santa Claus in a big way for foreign nations and foreign peoples.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In just a moment.

We now have a national debt of more than $40,000,000,000 and many more billions of dollars' worth of obligations guaranteed by the Federal Government. The Federal Government is spending almost $10,000,000,000 a year and collecting about half of this staggering sum in taxes. The time is fast approaching when our American dollar will be worth just about as much as the 180,000,000,000 of German marks and Russian rubles which I have in my office. Let us stop the wanton, unbridled expenditures of Government moneys before America goes into bankruptcy and over the brink of inflation to chaos, misery, and suffering such as we have never known. Anyone who has studied the history of foreign nations which have experienced inflation as a result of drunken orgies of spending such as the New Deal has been carrying on for the past 6 years knows that its devastating effects equal those of a major war of invasion.

I am opposed to continuing these Government Export-Import Banks. We have sufficient private banks whose vaults are now overflowing with money which is available for loans to American interests.

I can understand why Mr. Roosevelt wants to continue this American Government agency for the benefit of people in foreign lands. Mr. Roosevelt is, no doubt, internationally minded, for he was an international banker on many fronts, a former director of the International Germanic Trust Co., formerly the president of a Canadian corporation, the United European Investors, Ltd., which engaged in German mark transactions and investments in Germany. He was also associated with Robert Roland Appleby, former president of the British Empire Chamber of Commerce, in the Federal International Banking Co.

Mr. Chairman, the Export-Import Bank activities are not the only ones of Mr. Roosevelt's administration which I believe are adverse to the best interests of Americans and for the benefit of non-Americans. He demanded that American citizens turn in their gold to the Government for $20.67 an ounce or go to jail for 5 years, and then imported almost $8,000,000,000 worth of gold from foreign countries at $35 an ounce. Most of this gold was imported from England and France, with whom his administration is lining up on foreign problems. These two countries now owe the American taxpayers' Treasury more than $10,000,000,000, which was handed to them by the World War Democratic administration, of which our ex-international-banker President was a main cog.

Mr. Chairman, I quote now from the testimony of Mr. Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, appearing on page 84 of the Committee on Banking and Currency hearings on this bill:

The committee was discussing the $25,000,000 loan which the Export-Import Bank made to China.

Mr. BARRY. What was the purpose of that $25,000,000 loan to China? What products was that designed to facilitate the export of?

Mr. JONES. I do not know exactly what they were going to buy. It must not be in violation of the neutrality act.

The CHAIRMAN. You did extend a credit of $25,000,000 to the Chinese Government?

Mr. JONES. No; not to the Chinese Government. It is to a Chinese-owned American trading company in New York, the credits as they are extended will be guaranteed by the Bank of China, but not by the Government of China.

Mr. BARRY. Could that credit be used in connection with the export of war material to China?

Mr. JONES. No. The understanding is that it will not be.

Mr. BARRY. Did I understand you to say that the Chinese Government is not liable, but a privately owned Chinese corporation?

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether the corporation is owned by the Chinese Government or not. It is owned in China, and it is domiciled in New York, and the credits are guaranteed by the Bank of China, and the Bank of China, I understand, is owned half by the Government of China and half by private interests. The commitment was intended to cover private transactions.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot lend myself to using the American taxpayers' hard-earned tax money for the benefit of foreign interests as this transaction indicates.

When are you New Deal spendthrifts going to stop playing Santa Claus in a big way to foreign countries? Do you fail to realize that we have more than 12,000,000 Americans out of work and hunting for jobs? Do you not know that the Government cannot indefinitely operate on borrowed money, and that every dollar expended by Government must be produced in tax dollars by the sweat and toil of someone this year or next year, this generation or the next generation?

On April 13, 1934, the Johnson Act was enacted, preventing financing in America of foreign governments, their political subdivisions, organizations, and associations while such governments, political subdivisions, organizations, or associations were in default on the payment of their obligations, or any part thereof, to the Government of the United States.

This legislation was directed to our foreign debtor nations, who owe the United States Government over $12,000,000,000, which was handed to them by the World War Democratic administration, when Uncle Sam was roaming around in foreign countries, getting into difficulties and getting his pockets picked, just as he is now doing under your Democratic administration.

The foreign policies of your present administration are certainly not a new deal, but the identical deal the American people had under the Wilson administration, in which the present New Deal President was a leading light. As I pointed out, the sky is the limit as to loans for the Second Export-Import Bank of Washington, and the Chinese loan clearly demonstrates that our foreign debtor nations or their subjects can be financed in America through the Federal Treasury, to which they owe billions, and absolutely defeat the purpose of the Johnson Act.

I shall vote against this bill. I want Uncle Sam to stay home and stop playing Santa Claus to non-Americans. Keep out of foreign entanglements and foreign wars.

Charity begins at home. I sincerely hope this House will defeat this indefensible, camouflaged, un-American legislative monstrosity.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to bring to the attention of the House the fact that tomorrow I shall try to have accepted as an amendment to this bill a prohibition which in effect will provide the Export-Import Bank of Washington shall not make loans, the proceeds of which are to be used for or in any aid of the purchase for export of arms, munitions, including airplanes now in the possession of or to be acquired by the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, except with the consent of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, tomorrow I shall try to secure time in order to explain further why I feel the sale of our United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps planes, with the secrets that go with them, is so undesirable, particularly at this time. This is in defense of our defense. Last Thursday I introduced a bill which was more far-reaching in its effect. It provided that our secret Army and Navy arms and munitions, including airplanes, should not be sold to foreign governments. I believe that every human being in the United States today is anxious that our defense be kept extremely strong.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 7 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is hereby further amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 15, 1941"; (b) section 9 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is hereby further amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 15, 1941"; (c) section 9 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is hereby further amended by inserting before the period at the end of the last sentence thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Export-Import Bank of Washington shall not have outstanding at any one time loans in excess of $100,000,000, the capital for which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, when requested by the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President, may continue to supply from time to time through loans or by subscription to preferred stock"; and (d) section 4 of the act approved March 8, 1938 (58 Stat. 108), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "$500,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$900,000,000."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. COOPER] having resumed the chair, Mr. CELLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4011, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DARDEN (at the request of Mr. ROBERTSON), on account of illness.

To Mr. HOUSTON, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MALONEY, for 10 days, on account of official business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a radio address made by my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONTINUATION OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1102) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand that if we pass the Senate bill, then it is the intention of the gentleman from Alabama to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the House bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes. In order to expedite the matter, I will ask unanimous consent to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the House bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It merely facilitates the matter in conference?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is right.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The only distinction between the Senate bill and the House bill as we have passed it as amended is the last paragraph, having to do with the amount of loans outstanding, as I recall?

Mr. STEAGALL. The Disaster Loan Corporation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. With respect to the Disaster Loan Corporation?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 1 of the act approved January 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 5), is hereby amended by striking therefrom "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1941"; (b) section 1 of the act approved March 31, 1936 (49 Stat. 1186), as amended, is hereby further amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "June 30, 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1941"; (c) section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (47 Stat. 9), as amended, is hereby further amended by inserting after the second sentence thereof the following sentence: "Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the Corporation as provided by section 4 hereof."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEAGALL: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That (a) section 1 of the act approved January 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 5), is hereby amended by striking therefrom 'June 30, 1939' and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1941'; (b) section 1 of the act approved March 31, 1936 (49 Stat. 1186), as amended, is hereby further amended by striking from the first sentence thereof 'June 30, 1939' and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1941'; (c) section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (47 Stat. 9), as amended, is hereby further amended by inserting after the second sentence thereof the following sentence: 'Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the Corporation as provided by section 4 hereof'; and (d) the act approved February 11, 1937 (50 Stat. 19), as amended, is amended by striking from the first sentence '$20,000,000' and inserting in lieu thereof '$40,000,000'; and by striking from the second paragraph 'or 1938' and inserting in lieu thereof '1938, 1939, or 1940'."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the proceedings by which the bill H. R. 4012 was passed will be vacated and the bill laid on the table.

There was no objection.

HOOR OF MEETING

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business that would be in order on the calendar on Wednesday of this week may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.), pursuant to the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, February 21, 1939, at 11 o'clock a. m.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Public hearings will continue Tuesday morning, February 21, 1939, at 10 a. m., on social-security legislation, in the Ways and Means Committee room in the New House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m. Tuesday, February 21, 1939. Business to be considered: Continuation of hearing on H. R. 2531—transportation bill.

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation at 10:30 a. m. Tuesday, February 21, 1939.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs in room 1310, New House Office Building, at 10:30 a. m., February 21, 1939, for the consideration of H. R. 2969, to provide for the common defense by acquiring stocks of strategic and critical raw materials, concentrates, and alloys essential to the needs of industry for the manufacture of supplies for the armed forces and the civilian population in time of a national emergency, and to encourage, as far as possible, the further development of strategic and critical minerals in the United States, and for other purposes, and all allied bills, as follows: H. R. 2643, H. R. 3320, H. R. 2556, H. R. 1987, and H. R. 987.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

There will be a hearing before the Special Subcommittee on Bankruptcy and Reorganization of the Committee on the Judiciary at 10 a. m. Wednesday, March 1, 1939, on the bill (H. R. 3704) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto. Room 346 House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m. Tuesday, February 21, 1939, on the bill (H. R. 3576) to make effective the provisions of the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936.

It is contemplated that the hearing on Tuesday, February 21, 1939, on H. R. 3576 will deal particularly with legislation necessary to make effective the provisions of the treaty and problems arising in connection with the provisions of the treaty.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m., on the bills and dates listed below:

Tuesday, March 14, 1939:

H. R. 180, H. R. 202, construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201, additional facilities for Panama Canal; H. R. 2667, construction of a Mexican Canal.

In listing the bills to be heard on March 14, 1939, House Joint Resolution 112 (TINKHAM), to create a commission to study and report on the feasibility of constructing the Mexican Canal, was inadvertently omitted from the notice.

This is to advise all interested parties that House Joint Resolution 112 will be considered at that time with the following bills: H. R. 180 (IZAC), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 202 (BLAND), relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201 (BLAND), need for additional lock facilities at Panama; H. R. 2667 (TINKHAM), relative to the construction of a Mexican Canal.

Tuesday, March 21, 1939:

H. R. 137, H. R. 980, H. R. 1674, relating to annuities for Panama Canal construction force.

Thursday, March 23, 1939:

H. R. 139, H. R. 141, H. R. 142, H. R. 1819, miscellaneous Panama Canal bills.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

453. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to authorize the consolidation of the lands on the Sisseton Indian Reservation, N. Dak. and S. Dak.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

454. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill declaring the conservation of petroleum deposits underlying submerged lands adjacent to and along the coast of California; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

455. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the production of designs, plans, and specifications for public works in the interest of the national defense; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

456. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to amend title II, section 208, of the act approved June 16, 1933, with respect to its application to Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. COX: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 98. Resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 4278; without amendment (Rept. No. 79). Referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3961) for the relief of Kenneth A. Bixler, and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BALL:

H. R. 4306. A bill to make the United States Coast Guard Academy library a public depository for Government publications; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BLAND:

H. R. 4307. A bill to extend the provisions of the Shipping Act, 1916, and the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, to all common carriers by water in interstate commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CALDWELL:

H. R. 4308. A bill to provide for reimbursement of counties for loss of taxes on certain lands owned by the United States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

H. R. 4309. A bill to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act with respect to optional retirement ages; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. FERGUSON:

H. R. 4310. A bill to amend section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GEARHART:

H. R. 4311. A bill to protect the public health by regulating the importation of dairy products into the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HULL:

H. R. 4312. A bill to amend the Code of the District of Columbia to provide for the organization and regulation of cooperative associations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KEAN:

H. R. 4313. A bill to provide for the insurance by the Federal Housing Administration against losses incurred by reason of loans made for the purpose of discharging tax claims against small homes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. MANSFIELD:

H. R. 4314 (by request). A bill to provide Federal aid to States in the control of water pollution, to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

H. R. 4315. A bill to provide for the transfer of certain land owned by the United States to the State of Texas, and certain other land to the county of Galveston, Tex.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAGNUSON:

H. R. 4316. A bill making an appropriation for seed-flax investigations; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. POWERS:

H. R. 4317. A bill to reduce the rate of interest on obligations of home owners to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to $3\frac{1}{2}$ percent, and to allow the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to extend the period of amortization of home loans from 15 to 20 years; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

H. R. 4318. A bill to amend the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 so as to provide for payment of benefits with respect to the month in which an annuitant or pensioner dies; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

H. R. 4319. A bill to provide for the advancement in rank of certain officers of the United States Army upon retirement; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RISK:

H. R. 4320. A bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (Public, No. 718, 75th Cong., approved June 25, 1938); to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin:

H. R. 4321. A bill authorizing the erection of a memorial to Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski at Savannah, Ga.; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. SCHWERT:

H. R. 4322. A bill giving clerks in the Railway Mail Service the benefit of holiday known as Armistice Day; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. SHANLEY:

H. R. 4323. A bill to provide for World War veterans in compiling service with regard to the Railroad Retirement Act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. VAN ZANDT:

H. R. 4324. A bill to exclude insurance benefits as income for pension purposes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. VOORHIS of California:

H. R. 4325. A bill to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. WHELCHER:

H. R. 4326. A bill to amend an act known as the "Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938" so as to authorize the United States Government to take over all cotton upon which they have made loans in payment of notes given in security thereof if not paid at maturity, and the cotton held as collateral would not bring enough to cover loans; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FLAHERTY:

H. R. 4327. A bill to increase annual payments to State and Territorial homes for veterans; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McLEOD:

H. R. 4328. A bill to incorporate the American Gold Star Sisters; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MILLS of Louisiana:

H. R. 4329. A bill to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of Black River, Catahoula and Concordia Parishes, La., with a view to control of floodwaters; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. VINSON of Georgia:

H. R. 4330. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the production of designs, plans, drawings, and specifications for construction projects in the interest of national defense; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE of Idaho:

H. R. 4331. A bill to provide for the construction in Lapwal, Idaho, of a memorial to Chief Joseph, famous Nez Perce

Indian, and an Indian museum; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts:

H. R. 4332. A bill to provide for the acquisition, and preservation as a museum, of the Stephen Decatur House in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CARTER:

H. J. Res. 171. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to accept on behalf of the United States a conveyance of certain lands on Government Island from the city of Alameda, Calif., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin:

H. J. Res. 172. Joint resolution to provide for the preparation, printing, and distribution of pamphlets containing the history of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, Revolutionary War hero; to the Committee on Printing.

H. J. Res. 173. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1939, General Pulaski's memorial day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. J. Res. 174. Joint resolution to establish the Gen. Casimir Pulaski Memorial Commission to formulate plans for the construction of a permanent memorial to the memory of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski at Savannah, Ga.; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. MILLS of Louisiana:

H. J. Res. 175. Joint resolution to provide old-age pensions at the rate of $30 per month for all persons who are more than 60 years of age and possess property less than $10,000 in value or with a net income of less than $1,000 per year; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOBBS:

H. J. Res. 176. Joint resolution declaring the conservation of petroleum deposits underlying submerged lands adjacent to and along the coast of California, below low-water mark and under the Territorial waters of the United States of America, essential for national defense, maintenance of the Navy, and regulation and protection of interstate and foreign commerce; reserving the same as a naval petroleum reserve, subject to any superior vested right, title, or interest; and authorizing appropriate judicial proceedings to assert, ascertain, establish, and maintain the right and interest of the United States of America in such reserve, and to eject trespassers; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SABATH:

H. J. Res. 177. Joint resolution authorizing $10,000,000 for the construction of an aircraft manufacturing plant in the vicinity of Chicago, Ill.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TREADWAY:

H. Con. Res. 9. Concurrent resolution providing for a joint committee of the House of Representatives and of the Senate to make suitable arrangements for the commemoration of the inauguration of the first President of the United States under the Constitution; to the Committee on Rules.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their Senate Joint Memorial No. 5, with reference to the beet-sugar industry in Montana; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 106, with reference to agriculture products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their Senate Joint Memorial No. 2, with reference to the General Welfare Act of 1937; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their House Concurrent Resolution No. 9, with reference to manganese deposits in South Dakota; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Also memorial of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 7, with reference to H. R. 2, the General Welfare Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also memorial of the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their resolution with reference to S. 286 and H. R. 2196, concerning tax on fuel oil; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ARNOLD:

H. R. 4333. A bill granting a pension to Samuel H. Fulk; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BLAND:

H. R. 4334. A bill for the relief of O. T. Travis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota:

H. R. 4335. A bill for the relief of Peter Winter; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BYRON:

H. R. 4336. A bill for the relief of Percy C. Wright; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COLE of Maryland:

H. R. 4337. A bill granting a pension to Beulah Viola Kercher; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FULMER:

H. R. 4338. A bill granting a pension to Mary E. Sineath; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GREEN:

H. R. 4339. A bill for the relief of Ira W. Pinholster, Jr.; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4340. A bill for the relief of Ira W. Pinholster, Jr.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. HART:

H. R. 4341. A bill for the relief of Patrick Connelly, Inc., a corporation of the State of New Jersey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LECOMPTE:

H. R. 4342. A bill granting a pension to Margaret E. Duckworth; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN of Iowa:

H. R. 4343. A bill for the relief of Ed Ulch; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4344. A bill for the relief of Leo Umbdenstock; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4345. A bill for the relief of Ben Whittington; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 4346. A bill for the relief of Clarence R. Killion; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OLIVER:

H. R. 4347. A bill for the relief of Celia MacDonald; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. POWERS:

H. R. 4348. A bill to pay an annuity to George T. Cranmer; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky:

H. R. 4349. A bill for the relief of the estate of Lewis Marion Garrard Hale; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROMJUE:

H. R. 4350. A bill granting a pension to Effie T. McElhiney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEEFE:

H. R. 4351. A bill granting a pension to Anna Hilbert; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MICHAEL J. KENNEDY:

H. R. 4352. A bill for the relief of Thomas J. Lee; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KRAMER:

H. R. 4353. A bill for the relief of Amelia Eisenstein; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

H. R. 4354. A bill for the relief of Bessie Singer Weinman; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

H. R. 4355. A bill for the relief of Thomas William Harry Ball; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 4356. A bill for the relief of William Lakeview Hunnewell; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 4357. A bill for the relief of Felix Frank, his wife, Sarah, and children, Jacob and Pauline; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

H. R. 4358. A bill for the relief of Eugene Gruen and his wife, Kate; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. THILL:

H. R. 4359. A bill for the relief of Bennie Morrison; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. VOORHIS of California:

H. R. 4360. A bill for the relief of Francis L. Gannon; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1196. By Mr. ANDERSON of California: Resolution adopted by Knights of Columbus, San Mateo Council, No. 1346, San Mateo, Calif., and signed by Francis J. Walsh, grand knight, strongly urging that the Government of the United States adhere strictly to its policy of absolute neutrality with respect to war in Spain and that the embargo upon shipment of munitions to either party in Spanish conflict be maintained; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1197. By Mr. BUCK: Petition of Kathryn M. Warren and 41 other residents of Vallejo, Calif., petitioning the Congress of the United States to help promote general welfare of the people of the United States by securing passage of legislation (H. R. 251 and 924) which will stop, so far as is possible by Federal law, the great advertising campaign for the sale of alcoholic beverages now going on by press and radio; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1198. Also, petition of Mrs. A. B. Pendleton and 10 other residents of Sacramento, Calif., petitioning the Congress of the United States to help promote general welfare of the people of the United States by securing passage of legislation (H. R. 251 and 924) which will stop, so far as is possible by Federal law, the great advertising campaign for the sale of alcoholic beverages now going on by press and radio; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1199. By Mr. CARTER: Petition of Mrs. John Mackin, of Oakland, Calif., and 94 others, urging a continuance of the present neutrality act; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1200. Also, Assembly Joint Resolution No. 18, of the California Legislature, memorializing the Congress to provide for Kern River flood control; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

1201. Also, Assembly Joint Resolution No. 20 of the California Legislature, relative to Federal aid to State or Territorial veterans' homes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

1202. Also, petition of Gerald Bolger, Catholic priest of Livermore, Calif., and 45 others, urging a continuance of the present neutrality act; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1203. By Mr. CHIPERFIELD: Petition of Townsend Club, No. 1, of Williamsfield, Ill., urging House bill 2 be brought to the floor for consideration; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1204. Also, resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Illinois, urging that persons over 65 years of age not be removed from Works Progress Administration rolls until their application for State assistance has been approved; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1205. Also, petition of Townsend Club, No. 1, of East Galesburg, Ill., urging House bill 2 be brought to the floor for consideration; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1206. By Mr. CRAWFORD: Petition of Leo Fialkowski and certain residents of Lake Odessa, Mich., asking Congress to adhere to Neutrality Acts of August 1935 and May 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1207. Also, petition of John Nemeik and other residents of Bannister, Mich., opposing any move to lift the Spanish embargo; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1208. Also, petition of Ed Wycoff and 20 other residents of Elwell, Mich., urging early enactment of House bill 2; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1209. By Mr. CURLEY: Resolution of the New York State Waterways Association, opposing legislation intended to place control of the rates of water carriers under the jurisdiction of the same body at present vested with the duty of regulating and fostering the business of their competitors; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1210. By Mr. FISH: Petition signed by Mr. Harry Tallmadge, president, Townsend Club No. 1, Rhinecliff, N. Y., and 249 other residents of Dutchess County, N. Y., favoring the passage of House bill 4199; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1211. Also, petition signed by Harry Montague, secretary, New York State branch, United National Association of Post Office Clerks, and 36 other postal clerks, favoring the passage of House bill 3812; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1212. By Mr. FLAHERTY: Petition of the Dorchester Citizens' Association, of Dorchester, Mass., protesting against all Works Progress Administration projects interfering with private industry; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1213. By Mr. HARTER of New York: Petition of the International Ship Masters' Association of the Great Lakes, Kenmore, N. Y.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

1214. By Mr. HOUSTON: Resolution adopted by the First Baptist Church of Eldorado, Kans., opposing the inclusion of churches in the scope of the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1215. By Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON: Resolution passed by the State Senate of Texas, urging that legislation be passed to eliminate the discrimination in freight rates against Texas and the Southwest; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1216. Also, petition of W. I. Cunningham and W. H. Houck, of Buffalo; James H. Allen, of Blum; Rev. H. W. Bennett, of Teague; Rev. B. G. Taylor, of Midlothian; and Rev. Chalmers Kilbourne, of Waxahachie, all of the State of Texas, opposing the amending of the Social Security Act so as to include disabled and retired ministers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1217. Also, petition of Rev. C. R. Haden, Jr., rector of St. John's Episcopal Church; R. L. Hamilton; W. A. Lang; M. D. Almond, Jr.; H. D. Johnson; E. P. Norwood; E. M. Polk, Jr.; C. B. Bronwon; K. R. Blackwell; and George S. Swan, all of Corsicana, Tex., opposing amendment to the Social Security Act to impose tax on the church with reference to retired ministers, etc.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1218. By Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY: Resolution of 400 persons, residents of Yorkville, assembled in the Yorkville Casino, New York City, on the 16th of February 1939, requesting that the embargo on democratic Spain be lifted; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1219. Also, resolution adopted at a meeting of the State Council of Parks, of New York, held January 27, 1939, in the office of the State Council of Parks, New York City, opposing any claim of the Government of the United States to the ownership of the lands under tidal waters of the State of New York or any other State; the mere assertion of such claim by the Government of the United States throws a cloud on the title of the State, its municipalities, and its citizens, and by its nature will cause irreparable damage to the States, their municipalities, and their citizens who own and have improved and managed such lands under such tidal waters; also requesting that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Attorney General and to each Senator and Representative of the State of New York in Congress; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

1220. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of the New York State Waterways Association, concerning House bill 2531; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1221. Also, petition of retired American teacher pensioners, Philippines, Owensville, Ind., concerning amending the Philippine Independence Act; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

1222. Also, petition of the United States Flood Control Federation, of Pittsburgh, Pa., concerning flood control; to the Committee on Flood Control.

1223. By Mr. MARSHALL: Petition of the General Welfare Center, No. 1, Ira Bookwalter, secretary, relative to an immediate public hearing on the General Welfare Act (H. R. 11); urging Members of Congress to carefully study its provisions and enact it into law at the conclusion of such hearings; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1224. By Mr. MASSINGALE: Petition of certain citizens of Oklahoma to the Congress of the United States, favoring the enactment of the Townsend national recovery plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1225. By Mr. MONKIEWICZ: Petition of 576 members of the Hartford Chapter of the American Society for the Hard of Hearing and others, favoring enactment of House bill 1813, a bill to provide for the education of all types of physically handicapped children, to make an appropriation of money therefor, and to regulate its expenditure; to the Committee on Education.

1226. Also, petition of certain citizens of Manchester, Conn., requesting that the Seventy-sixth Congress enact the improved General Welfare Act (H. R. 11); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1227. By Mr. MUNDT: Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 3, of the South Dakota State Legislature, introduced by committee on State affairs and passed by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), asking Congress to liberalize and amortize the payments of Federal seed and feed loans; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1228. Also, Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 6, of the South Dakota State Legislature, introduced by Mr. Odell and passed by the senate (the house concurring), memorializing Congress to carefully scrutinize and investigate the qualifications of nominees to be confirmed for judicial positions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1229. Also, Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 7, of the South Dakota State Legislature, introduced by Mr. Barrett, and passed by the senate (the house concurring), memorializing Congress to discuss and give full consideration to General Welfare Act, House bill No. 2; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1230. By Mr. RISK: Memorial of the Board of Aldermen of the City of Newport, R. I., protesting against the removal of the U. S. S. Constellation from its present anchorage in the city of Newport, R. I.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

1231. By Mr. SABATH: Petition of the Sixty-first General Assembly of the State of Illinois, urging the enactment of remedial legislation to provide that persons of the age of 65 and over be retained in employment under the Works Progress Administration and those persons heretofore removed be returned thereto, until such time as their applications for State assistance be approved; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1232. By Mr. SANDAGER: Concurrent resolution of the State of Rhode Island, in general assembly, January session 1939, to defeat Senate bill 286 and House bill 2196, which bills seek to place a 3-cent tax per gallon on the sale of fuel oil used for heating and for the generation of power; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1233. By Mr. SCHAEFER of Illinois: Petition of Local Union No. 471, Alton, Ill., Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America, Albert Lowe, secretary, urging support of amendments to the National Labor Relations Act as proposed by the American Federation of Labor; to the Committee on Labor.

1234. Also, petition of Arthur Barker and others of Burksville, Ill., urging Congress to enact legislation which will assist the Nation's railroads and preserve the employment of thousands of railroad workers; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1235. Also, petition of the Illinois State Federation of Labor and the postal employees of the State of Illinois, urging early and favorable action of Congress on House bill 3812, a bill granting postal employees credit for Saturday in annual- and sick-leave law, thereby conforming to the 40-hour workweek or 5-day-week law; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1236. By Mr. VAN ZANDT: Petition of members of Du Bois Pennsylvania Division, No. 1, of the Order of Benefit Association of Railway Employees, approving the program submitted by the joint committee appointed by the President to formulate suitable legislation to right the damage and wrongs of the present railroad policies; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1237. By Mr. WHITE of Idaho: Petition of certain citizens of Copeland, Idaho, requesting the lifting of the embargo on arms to Spain and citing the fact that Spain's defeat means a new menace to the democracies of the world and the further argument that there is no embargo against Japan; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1238. The SPEAKER: Petition of Mary E. Logue, of Langhorne, Pa., and others, petitioning consideration of their petition with reference to neutrality; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1239. Also, petition of Stanislaus County Townsend Clubs Advisory Council, Modesto, Calif., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to House bill 2 and Senate Resolution 3, known as the General Welfare Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1240. Also, petition of R. E. Ashcraft, of Riverbank, Calif.; petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the General Welfare Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1241. Also, petition of the Berkeley Young Democratic Club of California, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the creation and naming of the John Muir National Park; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

1242: Also, petition of the city and county of Honolulu, Honolulu, Hawaii, petitioning consideration of their Resolution No. 126 with reference to sugar; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1243. Also, petition of T. C. Richards, of East Orange, N. J., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to national finances; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, February 20, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, whose spirit searcheth all things, purify the thoughts of our minds and pour into our hearts such love toward Thee that all life shall glow with new purpose and new meaning and, being inwardly and outwardly renewed, we may live to the fullness of our capacity.

If in hours of depression we seem to stand alone and the darkness hems us in, open a window in our souls and fill us with light, that in Thy sunshine's blaze our day may brighter, fairer be. Make us true lovers of our country and help us to become noble and true-hearted citizens, an honor to America, and a spring of hope to our neighbors; that, taught by the discipline of years and the joy of Thy companionship, we may be better fitted to be Thy messengers to a sin-sick world. We ask it for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, February 20, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1102) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 950. An act to exempt all vessels of the United States of less than 200 tons gross registered tonnage from the provisions of the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936 (being International Labor Conference Treaty, Convention No. 53, adopted by the International Labor Conference at Geneva in 1936);

H. R. 3646. An act to authorize certain officers and employees to administer oaths to expense accounts; and

H. J. Res. 79. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the Oil World Exposition at Houston, Tex., to be held April 24 to 29, 1939, inclusive.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Andrews	Donahay	King	Russell
Ashurst	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Austin	Ellender	Lee	Sheppard
Bailey	Frazier	Logan	Shipstead
Bankhead	George	Lucas	Smathers
Barbour	Gerry	Lundeen	Stewart
Barkley	Gibson	McKellar	Taft
Bone	Gillette	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Glass	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Bridges	Green	Mead	Tobey
Brown	Guffey	Miller	Townsend
Bulow	Gurney	Minton	Truman
Burke	Harrison	Murray	Tydings
Byrd	Hatch	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Herring	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hill	Overton	Walsh
Chavez	Holman	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Pittman	White
Connally	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wiley
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reed

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on important public business.

Mr. WALSH. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is absent because of a death in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PRAYERS IN THE SENATE

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, today the Senate for the first time in its entire existence began with prayer a session that followed the expiration of a recess. Heretofore the Chaplain has officially presented to the Throne of Grace his petition in behalf of the Members of this body and in favor of the country only at the beginning of a session that was held after an adjournment had expired. The Senate has frequently recessed from day to day and from time to time for a period of many weeks, during which no prayer was offered because, under the peculiar precedents and rules of the Senate, the time embraced in a single recess, regardless of its length, could never exceed a single legislative day. Throughout the long last session of the Seventy-fifth Congress the Chaplain, through no fault on his part, prayed in this Chamber but four times.

A few months ago the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] and I, in the course of a conference concerning the great fraternity known as the Loyal Order of Moose, concluded that one of the crying needs of this weary, war-torn world is the regeneration which can be achieved only by worship of the Supreme Being. We were impelled to the opinion that both the Senate and the country needed more than four prayers a year. In pursuance of our decision, and with the able Senator's approval, I, as the chairman of the Committee on Rules, recently introduced Senate Resolution No. 8, which the Senate, without a dissenting vote, later adopted, and by virtue of which every day's proceedings in this body will hereafter begin with prayer.

Senators, will you not permit me, with appropriate humility, to suggest that we seriously strive to enter into the spirit of this daily worship; that we seek surcease of impatience, intolerance, and hate in the citadel of charity, truth, and love that stands in serenity and safety upon the holy hill of prayer? And during these periods of daily consecration, let us devoutly offer up our own fervent petitions for perpetual peace throughout the world and good will toward all the people of every nation, of every color, and of every creed. Let us, in this time of great international crisis, depend less and less upon our own impotent selves and more and more upon our omnipotent God—

Who is very merciful and very great;
Who is clothed with awe and majesty;
Who covers Himself with light as with a garment;
Who stretches out the heavens like a curtain;
Who lays the beams of His chambers in the waters;
Who makes the clouds His chariots;
Who walks upon the wings of the wind;
Who makes the winds His messengers;
Flames of fire His ministers;
Who laid the foundations of the earth
That it should not be moved forever.

The famous and beloved Billy Sunday used to tell the following story:

"On the northern coast of Holland lies a long, low, narrow strip of fertile land with no natural barriers between it and its relentless foe, the sea. Two hundred years ago the resourceful Dutch built a great dike around the parts of this territory which were exposed to the invasion of the water. Within the dike is the thriving city of Alkmaar. The steeples of its churches are on a level with the top of the dike. About a hundred years ago the dike master in charge had planned to go to Amsterdam on a stagecoach which was to leave Alkmaar at 7 o'clock in the evening of a certain day. An hour before the coach's departure a violent storm swept all over Holland. It was the time of the high tides in November. The north wind howled, and the waves beat against the dike. Then occurred in the breast of the dike master a terrific battle between duty and inclination. Duty said: 'Go to the dike.' Inclination said, 'Go to Amsterdam.' He said to himself: 'This is the last trip the stagecoach will make till spring, and I long to go to Amsterdam, but duty demands that I go to the dike.' Duty eventually won, and as the wind howled with increasing fury he went to the dike. Upon his arrival there 200 dike keepers cheered and cried: 'Now we will be saved, for the dike master knows how to win the war against the waves.' At 9 o'clock the tide was rapidly rising, and it was known that it would continue to rise until midnight. Ten inches higher and all the north of Holland would be submerged, and not a human being in Alkmaar would survive. Presently there came a cry for help, and someone shouted: 'Four stones went out before that last wave.' The dike master put a rope under his arms, and strong men held the end of it as he descended into the icy waters with a bunch of willows and a bag of sand with which he stopped the water that was rushing through the breach in the wall. Other cries for help followed in rapid succession, and they were met until all the stones and all the sand and all the willows were gone. It is now 11:30; 3 inches more and the water will go over the top of the dike, and every life in the north of Holland will be lost. The dike master said: 'Oh, my men, off with your coats.' Every one of the 200 responded, and every man's coat was used to repair the dike. At 15 minutes until midnight the water was still rapidly rising; not a scintilla of material was left with which to continue the struggle. Then the dike master cried: 'Oh, my men, we have done the best we could and the most we dared. There is but one power that can save us now. Down on your knees and devoutly pray for aid from the blessed Christ who said to the stormy waves of Galilee: "Peace, be still." And they all prayed as they had never prayed before, and in a moment the storm miraculously subsided, and, in the picturesque language of Mr. Sunday, the wind cooed like a baby girl tugging at her mother's breast. And not a life was lost in the fearful storm that swept over sea and land on that memorable night."

The moral of this story is so obvious that to emphasize it would be to slander the perception of those who have courteously honored me by listening to its narration.

In the midst of manifest perils which encompass the world and terrify mankind, let us, by proper devotion, save ourselves from remorse similar to that voiced by Jesse Harris Oliver in the following beautiful sonnet entitled "Omission":

I'm sorry, Lord, that I forgot to pray.
The wind across my bed was oh, so sweet
With April bloom; and on my window seat
The full moon paved a white, untroubled way
Where I might see with sleep-contented eyes
The day I loved, with all its humble deeds.
The tramp I fed; my gift of flower seeds;
The dress I craved—and gave as a surprise—
The wind of April blew sweet across my bed
And brought the morning.
Now a mocking bird sings in the maple branches at my head.
And all the sky with hope is brightly stirred.
So, here beside me is another happy day—
I'm sorry, Lord, that I forgot to pray.

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL (S. DOC. NO. 35)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, responding to Senate Resolution 64, requesting the Department of Commerce to review and supplement its findings on the Florida ship canal (agreed to February 9, 1939), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 106

Concurrent resolution urging immediate investigation by Congress of manufacturers of farm implements to determine costs of raw materials, manufacture, distribution, ultimate costs to farmer, price spread between farmer and consumer of farm products, determination of farm-machinery prohibitions, prohibitions as to flax crops and importation to meet the country's need, and to determine if a trust exists exercising unfair practices to the detriment of the agricultural Commonwealth

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring therein):

Whereas the Government of the United States is largely dependent upon agriculture as one of its basic industries, the solvency of which must be assured if we are to continue as a happy and prosperous nation; and

Whereas all attempts by the Government or independent agencies to appreciably narrow the spread between the prices received by the farmer or agriculturist for the products he has to sell and the price said farmer or agriculturist has to pay for the necessary equipment or machinery to the successful operation of said agricultural industry has been of no avail; and

Whereas the farmer or agriculturist for the past many continuous years has been compelled to accept prices for his products much below the cost of production, while at the same time he has been compelled to pay ever-increasing prices for the machinery and equipment essential to the successful operation of said agricultural industry, bringing about a recognized condition where the purchase of new or replacement machinery is almost prohibitive, as, for example, during the year 1915 a farmer could buy a binder in exchange for approximately 145 bushels of wheat, while during the year 1938 it would require approximately 1,050 bushels to replace the same machine, notwithstanding the ever-increasing supply of raw materials essential to the manufacture of machinery and equipment leading toward and actually bringing about a lower market price to the manufacturer; and

Whereas the price spread between what the farmer or agriculturist receives for the products he has to sell and what the ultimate consumer has to pay appears to be sufficient to afford the producer the cost of production; and

Whereas there is an ever-growing belief on the part of the agricultural Commonwealth to the effect that an "implement trust" does in fact exist, exercising unfair practices to the detriment of agriculture; and

Whereas there is entertained a further belief of sinister motives and unfair practices on account of the immensity, financial ability, and influence arising therefrom on the part of said farm-implement manufacturers by and between said manufacturers and the various Federal agencies, such as the soil-conservation department, the Department of Agriculture, and the officials whose duty it is to impose duties and tariffs through the prohibition of the use of certain farm implements, such as the moldboard plow, etc., making necessary the purchase of new equipment, the forbidding of farmers to raise flax while at the same time permitting large imports of flax from foreign countries to the detriment of the United States farmer, leading to the conclusion that the said United States farmer was sold down the river so that the door would be left open and enable the farm-implement manufacturers to sell their wares to the countries favored with such imports to this country; and

Whereas the farmer is anxious to cooperate with the Federal Government on any stable plan to benefit agriculture, but finds it a physical and financial impossibility to keep abreast of the kaleidoscopic changes in policies of the Department of Agriculture requirements; and

Whereas Thomas Jefferson once said, "I have sworn on the altar of God eternal hostility against any form of tyranny over the mind of man; I am for freedom of speech and freedom of the press; I am opposed to silence by force instead of reason, any complaint of criticism, just or unjust, by our people against the Government"; and further left with us with this admonition, "Were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we should soon want bread": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That we petition and urge the Congress of the United States to institute immediately an investigation into all matters contained herein and to enact such laws that will eliminate the abuses complained of to the end that the farmers of this Nation may receive the cost of production for their products and thereby be placed on a parity with other forms of industry; and be it further

Resolved, That attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of Congress of the United States, to each of the Members thereof from this State, and to the Secretary of Agriculture, all of Washington, D. C.

Mr. WHEELER presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, favoring an investigation relative to the destruction, removal and failure to replace the fair-grounds buildings of Musselshell County, Mont., which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

(See joint memorial printed in full when presented by Mr. MURRAY on the 13th instant, p. 1342, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. MALONEY presented a petition, numerous signed, of members of the Hartford Chapter of the American Society for the Hard of Hearing and sundry other citizens, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of the so-called Pepper-Boland bill, providing for the education of all types of physically handicapped children, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. Marys, Kans., praying that the United States adhere to the principles of neutrality and that the Spanish embargo be not lifted, and also praying for a thorough investigation of subversive activities, including the "United Front," which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of St. Marys, Dodge City, Spearville, Colony, Niles, Bellefont, Offerle, and Wichita County, all in the State of Kansas, praying that the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions to Spain be not lifted, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition, numerous signed, of sundry citizens of Dodge City, Wright, and Spearville, all in the State of Kansas, praying that the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions to Spain be not lifted, and also opposing any change in the neutrality law, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of members of the Current Events Club of Emporia, Kans., praying that the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions to Spain be lifted, and also that the neutrality law be revised, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOLT presented a paper in the nature of a memorial from the Kanawha County (W. Va.) Industrial Union Council, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called Walsh-Green bill, being Senate bill 1000, to amend the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition from Local No. 1, the National Flat Glass Workers' Union, American Federation of Labor, of Parkersburg, W. Va., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the National Labor Relations Act sponsored by the American Federation of Labor, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution of Local Union, No. 15, the American Flint Glass Workers' Union of North America, of Paden City, W. Va., favoring the enactment of legislation to protect workers from alleged unfair methods of automatic machine production, and also from certain improved methods as utilized in the rural districts of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of 50 members of the Jackson's Mill Baptist Church, Weston, W. Va., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to bring religious bodies under the operation of the Social Security Act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE MILITARY BUDGET AND FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations a letter from Miss Dorothy Ringler, secretary of the Christian Endeavor Society of St. John's Reformed Church, Mifflinburg, Pa., on the subject of national defense.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MIFFLINBURG, PA., February 17, 1939.

Mr. J. J. DAVIS,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the Christian Endeavor Society of St. John's Reformed Church, have made the following resolutions, which we would like to be put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

We are against the huge increases in our military budget; we also oppose the fortification of Guam and any attempt to force Japan to conform more closely with our wishes in the Far East, realizing that by taking sides in Europe we are repeating the tragic experience of 1917-18. We urge that a world economic conference be supported, so that problems of the world may be settled at conference tables instead of on the battlefield.

Sincerely yours,

DOROTHY RINGLER,
Secretary of Christian Endeavor Society.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY TREATY

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution of Buffalo Lodge No. 1, International Ship Masters' Association, Buffalo, N. Y., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL SHIP MASTERS' ASSOCIATION,
BUFFALO LODGE, No. 1,
Buffalo, N. Y., February 17, 1939.

To the Grand Lodge, I. S. M. A., in session at Detroit, Mich., January 24-27, 1939:

Whereas the United States Government has been trying to negotiate a treaty with the Government of the Dominion of Canada relative to the St. Lawrence River seaway and the development of power at what is known as the International Rapids section of said river; and

Whereas our association has no objection to the development of the power project, but does object to the development of a seaway or navigation feature: Be it

Resolved, That the delegate from Lodge No. 10, International Ship Masters' Association, petition the grand lodge in session at Detroit to object strenuously the development of said seaway on the grounds that it would open the Great Lakes to the competition of the tramp steamers of the world who would drive both Canadian- and American-owned ship to minimum operation, thus ruining completely a business for members of our association vessel owners and seamen alike; be it further

Resolved, That the grand secretary and the local lodge secretaries notify their Senators and Congressmen of our association's objection to this needless development.

[SEAL]

I. S. M. A. LODGE, No. 1,
C. E. NASH, Secretary.

FREIGHT RATES

Mr. WAGNER presented a paper in the nature of a memorial from the Farwell & Rhines Co., Inc., Watertown, N. Y., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WATERTOWN, N. Y., February 17, 1939.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: Whereas there have been certain bills introduced into the Seventy-sixth Congress, namely, H. R. 188 and S. 158, which, if passed, would be harmful to labor, agriculture, and industry in New York State; and

Whereas the primary object of these bills is to compel by legislative action the establishment and maintenance of freight rates from one rate territory to another on the rate per mile that applies within the destination territory, which in turn would provide a substantially higher rate in one direction than in another over the same rails and between the same points; and

Whereas the United States having been justly divided into several rate territories because of differing costs of transportation caused primarily from the fact of differing volumes of tonnage produced and available for transportation in the various sections of the country; and

Whereas Watertown and vicinity is located in what is designated official territory, and being that territory lying east of the Mississippi River and north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers, and recognized as one of the greatest industrial sections not only of the United States but of the entire world, and because of this fact it provides the greatest number of tons per mile of transportation and consequently the lowest cost of operation for the railroads in that territory of any territory in the United States; and

Whereas these bills, or any of them, if enacted into law, would require the Interstate Commerce Commission, regardless of the equity, their better judgment, or otherwise, to disregard differing cost which form the basis for these different rate territories, and arbitrarily make from official territory to all other territories rates which would be materially higher than would be charged shippers in these other territories for shipping the same or similar articles, the same or similar distances into New York State, to the serious disadvantage of and discrimination against Watertown and vicinity.

Whereas such a prejudice to New York and preference of these other territories would not only seriously restrict the marketing and consequently the production of articles of commerce in New York State to the substantial and grave loss to its labor, agriculture, and industry, but even more seriously would induce substantial removal of manufacturing operations from this State to these more favored localities to the disadvantage of all its citizens.

Therefore, we respectfully request and urgently ask you not only to vote against these bills but also urge your colleagues to vote against same.

Respectfully yours,

THE FARWELL & RHINES CO., INC.,
F. J. RHINES, President.

FEDERAL OWNERSHIP OF LANDS UNDER STATE TIDAL WATERS

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution adopted at a recent meeting of the State Council of Parks held in New York City, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved, That the State Council of Parks of the State of New York is unalterably opposed to any claim of the Government of the United States to the ownership of the lands under tidal waters of the State of New York or any other State. The mere assertion of such claim by the Government of the United States throws a cloud on the title of the State, its municipalities, and its citizens, and by its nature will cause irreparable damage to the States, their municipalities and their citizens who own and have improved and managed such lands under tidal waters; be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Attorney General and to each Senator and Representative of the State of New York in Congress.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. DONAHEY, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 685) to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 439) to confer the Distinguished Service Medal on Col. Richard C. Patterson, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 75) thereon.

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 1084) to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 76) thereon.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 88. A bill referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for finding of fact and recommendations to the Congress (Rept. No. 77); and

S. 414. A bill for the relief of the Indians of the Fort Bert-hold Reservation in North Dakota (Rept. No. 78).

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes" (44 Stat. L. 807), reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 79) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LOGAN:

S. 1517. A bill for the relief of F. E. Perkins; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1518. A bill to provide for the establishment of the Cumberland Gap National Historical Park and the Cumberland National Recreational Area in Tennessee, Kentucky, and Virginia; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. WHITE:

S. 1519. A bill for the relief of Vincent and Gladys Gowen; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1520. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. SMATHERS:

S. 1521. A bill for the relief of Hazel R. Heard Chapman; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mrs. CARAWAY:

S. 1522. A bill for the relief of Eula S. Damm; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

S. 1523. A bill to authorize the payment of burial expenses and expenses in connection with last illness and death of native employees who die while serving in offices abroad of executive departments of the United States Government; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 1524. A bill granting a pension to Dovie C. Bessent; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEELY:

S. 1525. A bill granting a pension to America E. Dye; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BARBOUR:

S. 1526. A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act (pt. II); to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. MALONEY:

S. 1527. A bill for the relief of Joseph Lopez Ramos; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 1528. A bill for the relief of Charles Dancause and Virginia P. Rogers; and

S. 1529. A bill for the relief of Catherine Ward; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 1530. A bill for the relief of John P. Shorter; and
S. 1531. A bill for the relief of Edmund S. Dennis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 1532. A bill to provide for the payment of certain Creek equalization claims, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WAGNER:

S. 1533. A bill for the relief of Kurt G. Stern; and S. 1534. A bill for the relief of Moukbil Kemal Tash; to the Committee on Immigration.

S. 1535. A bill to provide for the appointment of two additional district judges for the southern district of New York; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

S. 1536. A bill for the relief of James N. Harwood; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1537. A bill to amend the Classification Act of March 4, 1923, as amended, to create a Mechanical Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

S. 1538. A bill for the relief of Konstantinos Dionysiou Antiohos (or Gus Pappas); to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

S. 1539. A bill to amend the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. OVERTON:

S. 1540. A bill to adjust the compensation of the members of the National Advisory Health Council not in the regular employment of the Government; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. J. Res. 75. Joint resolution to authorize Commander Henry Coyle, United States Coast Guard, to accept the decoration and diploma of the Marine Medal of Class One (gold), conferred upon him by the Government of Greece; to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 3646. An act to authorize certain officers and employees to administer oaths to expense accounts; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H. R. 950. An act to exempt all vessels of the United States of less than 200 tons gross registered tonnage from the provisions of the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936 (being International Labor Conference Treaty, Convention No. 53, adopted by the International Labor Conference at Geneva in 1936); and

H. J. Res. 79. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the Oil World Exposition at Houston, Tex., to be held April 24 to 29, 1939, inclusive; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BUILDING PROGRAM FOR BUREAU OF FISHERIES—AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1492) to provide for a 5-year building program for the United States Bureau of Fisheries, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON TAXATION OF GOVERNMENTAL SECURITIES AND SALARIES

Mr. BROWN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 86), which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 303, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, agreed to June 16, 1938, is hereby continued in full force and effect until June 1, 1939, and the time for making the report required by such resolution is hereby extended to such date.

FOREIGN RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES—ADDRESS BY SENATOR PITTMAN

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an address on our foreign relations delivered last night in the National Radio Forum by the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the address was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. KEY PITTMAN, OF NEVADA, MADE DURING THE NATIONAL RADIO FORUM, FEBRUARY 20, 1939

I am here tonight by invitation of the National Radio Forum, sponsored by the Washington Evening Star, to discuss the subject of Our Foreign Policy. It is the most vital question now pending for determination by the American people and their Congress.

It will be unfortunate, indeed, for the future safety and welfare of our country if our citizens fail to give substantial support to their Government in the administration of our foreign policy. This support will not be obtained unless our citizens study the fundamental principles underlying the policy, and are not distracted in their thoughts and actions by local situations, race prejudices, political partisanship, demagoguery, or propaganda suspicion aroused by inflammatory headlines with regard to insignificant incidents.

There are in my opinion only four fundamental foreign policies of governments. These policies may be stated as follows:

(1) A policy based upon conquest of territory and domination of the lives of the nationals of other nations through military force or the threat of the use of military force.

(2) The policy of appeasement.

(3) The policy of defense. This policy includes the protection of a country's territory, and the rights of its nationals throughout the universe. It holds that such protection shall be accomplished, first, through every established, peaceful instrumentality; second, through every legal resistance to encroachments upon the integrity of a nation's territory and the rights of its nationals; and third and lastly, through the use of physical force if every other means has failed, to successfully defend its territory and the rights of its nationals.

(4) The last of the four policies, which some governments have practiced, is the policy of isolation.

I shall very briefly discuss, first, this latter policy, as, unfortunately, in spite of the history of its uniform puerility, it is urged by some of our citizens—even by men and women of prominence.

The people of a country, through their government, can isolate themselves for a time by refraining from taking any part in world affairs. They cannot, however, by this action impose isolation upon any other country, nor can they prevent any other country from violating their isolation. We have so many recent examples of peoples and their governments attempting to protect their territory and their peace and safety through the doctrine of isolation that the impracticability of the policy is self-evident.

Austria, since the World War, adopted and practiced a policy of isolation. Behold Austria! Ethiopia practiced the policy of isolation. Note the condition of Ethiopia. Czechoslovakia, under the rules of the League of Nations, practiced the policy of isolation. Czechoslovakia's territory has been divided up, its government destroyed, and its spirit of democracy annihilated. Witness China. No people and no government ever practiced more sincerely the doctrine of isolation. They interfered with no other government and no other people. They made no preparation for defense, relying upon their peaceful attitude, the treaty promises of other governments, and their pronounced and practiced policy of isolation.

Let us now return to the policy of conquest and domination through military force and the threat of the use of military force. This policy has been adopted and is now being practiced by the Governments of Germany, Italy, and Japan, three of the most powerful military governments in the world. These Governments are absolutely controlled by arbitrary and ruthless dictators—Germany by Hitler, Italy by Mussolini, and Japan by a small military clique.

What are the intentions of these military dictators? Do their policies constitute any threat to the safety of the United States? We can only determine these questions by a study of the statements and the actions of these military dictators. Time does not permit me to read the numerous statements of these dictators. They have been published time and again. They have all ridiculed democratic forms of government. They have even pitied our people in the United States because, as they allege, our Government is too weak and too cowardly not only to protect our citizens and our institutions from abroad, but even to protect our peaceful citizens from lawlessness at home. They have defied the League of Nations, the Nine Power Treaty, and every instrumentality that governments have set up to protect the integrity and the rights of small governments against unjust domination and conquest, and for the preservation of peace among all nations.

The statement does not require confirmation to those who read. Great Britain and France urged that there should be arbitration with regard to the Sudetenland. Was this agreed to? No. Hitler had 1,000,000 soldiers on the border of Czechoslovakia. He had more airplanes than France and Great Britain combined. He and Mussolini had twice the capacity for production of airplanes as Great Britain and France. Hitler refused to arbitrate the justice of his demands. Why? Because Great Britain and France had discovered that Hitler had a dominating military force in the air and on land.

Could there be any more perfect demonstration of rule by force than the determination of the conference at Munich? This also clearly exposes the puerility of the power of appeasement. Hitler was not uneasy. The British Government in 1932 abandoned the policy of defense and adopted the policy of appeasement. It has practiced such policy of appeasement ever since, without accomplishing anything for ultimate peace, but on the contrary to the encouragement and aid of the ambition of the dictator governments, which ambition, unless obstructed, inevitably will lead to the most disastrous war in all history.

When Japan challenged the indictment of the League of Nations and the opinion of the world in 1932, and continued her conquest of Manchuria (a part of China), the policy of appeasement of Great Britain was expressed by Mr. Simon when he yielded to Japan on the promise that Japan would not interfere with the "open door" policy in Manchuria and the commerce of Great Britain. Of course, Japan never intended to maintain the "open door" policy in Manchuria and did not maintain such policy. On the contrary, through a fiction of local self-government, Japan has practically excluded the commerce of all countries except her own from Manchuria.

Again, when Mussolini undertook his conquest of Ethiopia the British Government, with absolute influence over the League of Nations, composed of over 52 nations, after actuating them to assert the policy of the League of Nations, retreated under the policy of appeasement. Ethiopia was conquered. Hitler advanced and fortified the Rhine, and Great Britain, under the policy of appeasement, did nothing. Hitler conquered Austria without battle, and Great Britain yielded under the policy of appeasement. Czechoslovakia, whose territorial and political integrity were guaranteed by Great Britain and France and 52 other nations, was yielded to the military domination of Hitler under the policy of appeasement.

The policy of appeasement has accomplished nothing for ultimate peace. The policy of appeasement has accomplished nothing for justice and liberty. The policy of appeasement has been but a process of surrender and retreat before military force, with the abandonment of every treaty and every promise of protection to the independence of small countries and the liberty of peoples. May we say, however, in support of the policy of appeasement, that it has postponed a few days the execution of the victims.

The policy of appeasement has not only been unsuccessful and ultimately destructive, but has been immoral. It is evident that no person can die but once, and the period of life is limited, and that it is far better that he die a few days earlier for Christianity, justice, and liberty than that he live a little longer in cowardice and degeneracy.

Hitler told Chamberlain that he was only interested in the borders of the Sudetenland. A few weeks later he changed the borders of Czechoslovakia in many other particulars. He declined to permit the borders of Poland and Hungary to be joined. Why? Because every student of history knows that he intends to preserve an alley through which he can conquer the Ukraine.

Does anyone doubt that Hitler has in his program the domination of the Ukraine? In fact, does anyone doubt that Hitler has the domination of Siberia in mind? If so, simply read his book, "Mein Kampf." He is moving eastward at present. Is he succeeding? Hasn't Hungary joined his alliance? Hasn't Hungary been compelled to discharge Imre, its anti-Nazi Premier, and place in his stead a Nazi premier? Did not the policy of appeasement of Great Britain surrender to the mercy of Hitler not only Czechoslovakia but Poland, Rumania, Yugoslavia, and Turkey? What is there to stop his domination, if not conquest, of these countries? What can Holland and Denmark do with regard to the demands of Hitler, in view of Hitler's dominating military force and policy, and the policy of appeasement of Great Britain?

For the time being, we will pass Mussolini. He has militarized Italy to the fullest extent. He has a tremendous military force. He is by force of circumstances—and may continue to be—in the Berlin-Rome-Tokyo axis.

How about Japan? Any student of history knows the fixed policy of Japan. It has been announced too often to be misunderstood. It is the domination of Eastern Asia, including the islands of the Pacific. It is a domination based upon military power. These assertions have been made by many students of history, and by me on the floor of the Senate many times. Every statement and every act of the militaristic clique of Japan justifies these conclusions with regard to their intentions. They are, today, challenging not only their sacred agreement with us, with China, and other powers to preserve and protect the political integrity of China, but they are violating their solemn agreement with us for equal opportunities in China of our citizens with the subject of Japan. They are now taking possession of and fortifying the Island of Hainan, only 700 miles from the Philippine Islands. These fortifications will control the commerce of the far Western Pacific. They have by word and act ignored, repudiated and challenged their sacred agreement under the Nine Power Pact. They have through their military authorities and otherwise informed us definitely that there is a new order in eastern Asia, and that we are out of the picture.

This is the history of the acts, at least, of the dictator powers. Their intent to dominate the world is evident to any unbiased thinking person. "Well, how can this affect us?" is asked by even those who have the right to be called statesmen. It must be evident that at the present time there is nothing to stop the conquest of Europe and Asia by the three dictator powers. Does that affect us? I pass the question of our islands in the Pacific. I pass the question as to whether after their conquest they would directly attack the United States. The question is, would they attempt to dominate the Latin-American republics? Some may say "Why should they?" Others may say "No." As a matter of fact, the broad areas of Latin America with its vast resources of natural wealth cannot be overlooked by ambitious dictators. That might be a presumption. As a matter of fact, we know that the three dictatorial powers, Germany, Italy, and Japan are increasing their populations and influence in Latin America. We know that these dictatorial powers are through every means, monetary, financial, and political, preparing for the domination of Latin America.

Of course, this penetration into Latin America does not become pertinent, and will not become pertinent until and unless these totalitarian powers have obtained sufficient domination in Europe and Asia to permit them to move in force against Latin America. Any reasonable man will say that that is possible. Any reasonable man would say we should protect against such possibility.

We hear pacifists say we will defend our own shores, but we will fight nowhere else. Will we fight against the threat to our own shores? Where does the threat start? Are we to wait until a fleet lands its marines on the Atlantic and Pacific and its airplanes bomb our cities? Are we to wait until military forces are established on our borders and airplane bases established that may freely bomb the Panama Canal before we act? Are we to pursue the policy of appeasement and surrender and retreat before the threat of war, until our own country has been made the battleground of a foreign invader, and our aged and our women and children are bombed from the air?

I assert that no patriotic American citizen will agree to such a cowardly, unpatriotic, and disastrous policy.

And what is our foreign policy in the circumstances? I have attempted to state it in the third policy. The President, in his message to Congress, clearly stated our policy, as I have attempted to restate it here. We will enter into no entangling alliances. We will be prepared, singly and alone, to successfully defend our country, its institutions, and our citizens. We will not aid a government whose policy is based upon conquest and military domination. We will not refuse the oppressed governments any aid that we may legally give them, short of war. We will prepare, without alliance, to defend our Government, its institutions, its people, and their rights against any illegal and unjust attacks. We will, unafraid, resist any encroachments upon the rights of our citizens under any treaties with us by every legal means at our command, short of war, relying upon this power which in my opinion is sufficient and will avert war. We are not frightened however, by the circumstances that this resistance may cause some other country to declare war upon us.

In the first place, that declaration would be both absurd and futile. No country can now successfully attack our shores. In the second place, our people are not cowardly. While they hate war they are not afraid to die for Christianity, morality, justice, and liberty. Many a mistake has been made in past history by not letting dictator governments know this on the start. They probably would never have moved. That we will die, however, for these things we consider worth more than life, we know. And possibly we will preserve peace by telling people who do not understand these things what we intend to do and will do.

There is a propaganda going on through this country today that would be despicable except that it is pitiful—preaching the doctrine of fear, fear that if we assert our right to enjoy religion, morality, and justice, and our right to liberty, that we will be forced into war.

We are told that the legal things that the President has done to date are leading us into war as we were led into war in 1917.

The situations in 1917 and today with regard to our foreign policy are entirely different. Prior to the World War our people, our President, and our Congress asserted the rights of our citizens to enjoy the freedom of the seas under the accepted rule of international law. That law was definite as to neutrals. That law was definite as to neutrals having a right to trade with neutrals. Neutrals had a right to trade even with belligerents. No ship of neutrals could be destroyed when trading with neutrals; no ship of a neutral could be destroyed even when trading with a belligerent, and even if carrying contraband of war, without first making provision for the safety of those on board the ship. Both sides in the World War denied neutrals their rights under international law. The only difference was that one side did not destroy lives and the other did.

President Wilson protested against the violation of our neutral rights for months and months, and then came the final order of the German Government, which read as follows:

"Under these circumstances Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forceful preventing, after February 1, 1917, in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy, and the eastern Mediterranean, all navigation, that of neutrals included, from and to England, from and to France, etc. All ships met with in that zone will be sunk."

Remember that the line of this zone was hundreds of miles out in the Atlantic, and unmarked, and excluded the neutral ships of the United States from all the neutral countries in Europe. Between February 1, 1917, and the day of the declaration of war by the United States, on April 6, our merchant ships were destroyed in that zone without notice, with the loss of the lives of 73 of our citizens.

The people of this country chose war. The President of the United States was impelled to ask for a declaration of war, but it was the Congress of the United States under the Constitution, and the Congress alone, that declared war. Congress could have refused to declare war. It didn't. Look back over the record vote and you will find that only a few in each house voted against it.

Today the foreign policy of our Government has been modified by the Neutrality Act passed by Congress and approved by President Roosevelt. In effect, it modifies, if it doesn't abandon, our right to the freedom of the seas under international law.

We will not now permit any arms, ammunition, or implements of war to be shipped to any belligerent country or to any neutral country for reshipment to a belligerent country. We will not permit any products of the United States to be shipped to a belligerent country by a citizen of the United States. The title must first be transferred to a foreigner. The President is authorized to prevent our ships from engaging in commerce with belligerents. Our citizens are prohibited from traveling upon belligerent passenger ships.

President Wilson did not and could not lead us into war in 1917. President Roosevelt, under the approved policy of our Government and the Neutrality Act, has no intention to lead us into war and cannot lead us into war. Every Senator and Congressman is an elected representative of American citizens. Never in the history of the United States were such representatives more responsive to the will of their constituents. This is right and in accord with our form of representative government. Congress, under the accepted policy of our Government, will not lead us into war.

Why further impose upon the credulity and the fear of our citizens? Why join in the policies of appeasement or isolation that have not made for peace but for war throughout the world? Why not wholeheartedly support the honorable, peaceful, and practicable policy of our administration? Every patriotic citizen will!

SPEECH BY SENATOR ASHURST AT TESTIMONIAL DINNER TO HON. HOMER CUMMINGS

[Mr. ASHURST asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the speech delivered by him at the testimonial dinner in honor of Hon. Homer Cummings, on January 11, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

AFFILIATION OF STATION KVOA WITH BLUE NETWORK—ADDRESS BY SENATOR ASHURST

[Mr. ASHURST asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by him on February 5, 1939, on the occasion of the affiliation of station KVOA, in Tucson, Ariz., with the blue network of the National Broadcasting Co., which appears in the Appendix.]

AMERICA'S PLACE IN THE WORLD—ADDRESS BY SENATOR NYE

[Mr. REED asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator NYE before the Saturday Discussion Club, National Republican Club, at New York City on February 18, 1939, on the subject Our Place in the World, which appears in the Appendix.]

AMERICA'S FOREIGN POLICY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BRIDGES

[Mr. JOHNSON of California asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Senator BRIDGES on February 20, 1939, on the subject America Needs a Foreign Policy, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE TRADITION OF AMERICAN SECURITY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR TRUMAN

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator TRUMAN before the National Aviation Forum at the Mayflower Hotel on February 20, 1939, on the subject The Tradition of American Security, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR PEPPER

[Mr. TRUMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the Works Progress Administration delivered by Senator PEPPER on January 21, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

COTTON PROGRAM—ADDRESS BY DR. M. F. DICKINSON

[Mrs. CARAWAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the cotton program delivered on January 24, 1939, at Chicago, Ill., by Dr. M. F. Dickinson, of Little Rock, Ark., which appears in the Appendix.]

RESOLUTIONS OF AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION

[Mr. CAPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD resolutions adopted by the American Farm Bureau Federation at its twentieth annual meeting at New Orleans, La., on December 15, 1938, which appear in the Appendix.]

ADMISSION OF GERMAN REFUGEE CHILDREN

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD several editorials and letters regarding the admission of German refugee children into the United States, which appear in the Appendix.]

HOUSING AS A JOB PROVIDER

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the American Federation of Labor weekly news service of February 18, 1939, entitled "New Housing as Job Provider," which appears in the Appendix.]

THE SILVER PROGRAM—EDITORIAL FROM WASHINGTON STAR

[Mr. TOWNSEND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington, D. C., Evening Star of February 20, 1939, entitled "Silver-Lined Cloud," which appears in the Appendix.]

SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF THE ORDER OF KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in these days when the spirit of good will and friendship is so necessary to meet the distress of our troubled world it is with a feeling of consolation that I am permitted to speak briefly concerning an important gathering I attended last evening at the Willard Hotel. The occasion was the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Order of the Knights of Pythias in this city by Justus Henry Rathbone. Following the Civil War this order was established to help heal the wounds left from the stormy period of fratricidal strife.

The Knights of Pythias has found its great inspiration in the story of Damon and Pythias, which is a heroic example of true friendship that is deathless. This order has been carried into every State in the Union and is found in practically every cross-roads town in the country.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the address of the Honorable E. Lee Stapp, supreme chancellor of the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, delivered with eloquence last evening on the occasion of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of this beneficent order.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Supreme Chancellor STAPP. Mr. Toastmaster, brothers, sisters, ladies, and gentlemen, on Friday evening, the 19th day of February 1864, in Marint's Hall, 914 E Street NW., also known as Temperance Hall, here in the city of Washington, the Capital City of the United States of America, Justus Henry Rathbone first gave to the world the thought and conception with which he was inspired by the ancient Greek story of Damon and Pythias, by reading to 12 of his friends who had met with him a ritual he had written, wherein he had made friendship, as exemplified by these two Grecian characters, the basic and underlying principle. That little gathering was so impressed that each of them assumed the obligation of the ritual, and then and there formed an organization which they named Knights of Pythias. Little did they think what an institution they were constructing—they "built wiser than they knew"—and we rejoice in the record of achievements that now mark 75 years in the cause of a common humanity.

The stability of this fraternal structure, imbedded upon a foundation of friendship and supported by the two great pillars of charity and benevolence, intertwined by the chain of brotherly love, is evidenced by a membership scattered over the continent of North America, and among many of the islands of the sea. More than two millions of men have joined this great fraternity in the practice of its precepts and promotion of its principles, and have truly exemplified its humanitarian purposes.

For the inspiration which gave birth to our beloved order and the success that has attended its humane missions from the time of its formation to this diamond jubilee, we are indebted to a loving and merciful God, to whom this night, in every city, village, and hamlet wherever the tricolored banner of Pythian knighthood has been unfurled, there is being offered up in common union the earnest, sincere, and heartfelt thanks of a grateful membership of a true fraternity.

From the humble beginning here in the city of Washington on February 19, 1864, the Order of Knights of Pythias has, through the efforts of our predecessors and continuing with our help, reached to all departments of our life.

The Pythian Sisters, in due course of time, came into existence as a part of this great fraternity, and thereby there was added to the Knights of Pythias an organization having as its objective the practice of love, equality, fidelity, and purity. You know of the good work of this organization.

The Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan likewise became a part of the Pythian order and was likewise recognized by the supreme lodge in due time, and by its recognition we added the objective of "lift up the fallen" to the Pythian army. The work of this organization is well known to you, and its foundation has further spread the gospel of Pythian charity from coast to coast.

In our efforts to aid and assist the people of the supreme domain and to teach respect of law, the uniform rank, now controlled by the military department, came to us as a part of the Pythian army, and thereby the Army of the Lily was made a part of the organization, and with this we actually organized our own army to further the Pythian cause. This uniformed Pythian army has made its own name and reputation, of which you are familiar.

Believing, as we do, that we have a responsibility to the boys and girls in the supreme domain, the Pythian order recognized in due time the Princes of Syracuse as a part of the order. Here there is an organization for the training of the boys of the supreme domain, that they may become better trained in a satisfactory manner that will make of them better men and citizens.

The Pythian Sisters likewise undertook the training of the young girls, and to this end the Sunshine Girls came into existence, and through this effort the girls of the supreme domain are trained to be better ladies and citizens.

From all this the order has been in position to relieve the suffering not only of its own membership but likewise of humanity in general. Homes for the aged and orphans of our membership have been established and maintained and today are being maintained.

Our order has become a leader in the daily life of the people of the communities where our lodges are in existence because of our civic programs and our efforts to aid and assist our youth to become better men and women and good citizens of our country and to help the youth of the supreme domain start a Pythian life.

And so tonight, with the joinder of all the branches and auxiliaries of the Knights of Pythias in commemorating this anniversary of 75 years of fraternal work in the field of humane endeavor, we have given public expression of the teachings and principles of the order, so that the world may know what Pythian knighthood means and what it stands for.

The lesson of friendship reveals those noble qualities of honor and confidence, which are the very rocks that constitute the foundation principle of our order, securely laid in that most durable cement—brotherly love.

"Charity is the scope of all God's commands." It is an eternal debt, a divine virtue, the practice of which should commend itself to all who would help man to nobler things and loftier aspirations. It is the living inspiration of all who truly believe in the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. It enables us to close our eyes to the frailties of human nature, and in the faults of others to see the good that tends to uplift and elevate.

Clothing the naked, feeding the hungry, and giving alms to the needy is the benevolence that naturally follows where friendship reigns and charity is exemplified. In its practice we should be limited only to the needs of the unfortunate and as our means may permit.

These, then, constitute the foundation, ground work, and superstructure of our fraternity, and may these principles of friendship, charity, and benevolence throw around us their enchanted trinity. Let us go forth from these diamond jubilee exercises renewed in our faith, with the fires of fraternity burning within our souls, illuminating our pathway, and guiding us to that celestial lodge beyond the skies—to enter into a renewal of our faith in the principles of friendship, charity, and benevolence, so that our order may not only continue but that we will leave behind us records from which our successors can and will, by our examples, build a grander and more glorious fraternity.

In all this we ask, may God bless the Knights of Pythias and all its auxiliaries.

SUMMARY OF FEDERAL ELECTION LAWS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, recently, in connection with the work of the committee which is making some study of election laws and proposed legislation pending before our subcommittee, I asked the Legislative Reference Service to make a complete compilation of all existing Federal election statutes. They furnished the compilation to me. The committee met this morning, and thought the compilation might be of interest to all Senators as well as to members of the committee. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUMMARY OF FEDERAL ELECTION LAWS

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Constitution, amendment 14, section 2. Denial of right of male inhabitants, 21 years of age, to vote, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, to cause reduction in congressional representation in proportion to number of persons denied such right.

Constitution, amendment 15. Right of citizens to vote not to be denied or abridged on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Constitution, amendment 19. Right of citizens to vote not to be denied or abridged on account of sex.

R. S. 22 (U. S. C. 2: 6). Practically restates Constitution, amendment 14, section 2, above.

R. S. 1980 (U. S. C. 8: 47). Conspiracy to prevent persons from voting, to be a ground for recovery of damages by persons so deprived.

R. S. 1981 (U. S. C. 8: 48). Persons who neglect to prevent conspiracy to deprive qualified persons of the right to vote, made liable to party injured, for all damages caused by such wrongful act.

Act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat. 69; U. S. C. 34: 509). Increase of force at any navy yard, not to be made within 60 days before an election, except upon certification by the Secretary of the Navy that such increase is necessary.

Act of March 22, 1882 (22 Stat. 31, sec. 8; U. S. C. 48: 1461). Bigamists declared not entitled to vote, nor eligible for election for office, etc., under the United States.

Act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. 1092, sec. 19; U. S. C. 18: 51). Persons conspiring to intimidate citizens in the free exercise of their civil rights declared ineligible for office, etc., created by Constitution or laws of the United States.

Same (p. 1092, sec. 22; U. S. C. 18: 55). Army or Navy officers to be punished for bringing troops to a place where a general or special election is to be held, unless needed to repel armed enemies of the United States.

Same (p. 1092, sec. 23; U. S. C. 18: 56). Officers, etc., in the military or naval service of the United States to be punished for intimidating qualified voters from freely exercising right of suffrage.

Same (p. 1092, sec. 24; U. S. C. 18: 57). Army or Navy officers to be punished for prescribing or attempting to prescribe qualifications of voters at State elections.

Same (p. 1092, sec. 25; U. S. C. 18: 58). Military or naval officers to be punished for compelling election officers to receive votes from persons not legally qualified to vote, or imposing regulations for general or special elections contrary to law or otherwise interfere with the duties of election officers.

Same (p. 1093, sec. 26; U. S. C. 18: 59). Persons convicted of offenses as defined in sections 22-25, above, are to be further punished by being declared disqualified from holding any public office under the United States, but nothing is to prevent any officer, soldier, sailor, or marine from voting in an election district provided he is otherwise qualified according to the State laws.

Same (p. 1103, sec. 78; U. S. C. 18: 140). Penalty prescribed for using false certificates of citizenship for purpose of registering as voter.

Act of February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1073-74, secs. 312, 313; U. S. C. 18: 208; 2: 251). Penalty provided for soliciting, etc., by Members of Congress, candidates, Government officers, etc., for any political purpose.

Contributing by national banks or corporations organized by authority of Congress, for political elections is declared unlawful; a corporation violating this provision is to be fined $5,000, and its officers who consented to such contribution are to be fined $1,000 or imprisoned 1 year, or both.

Act of December 11, 1926 (44 Stat. 918, c. 3; U. S. C. 18: 140-151). Penalty prescribed for soliciting or receiving contributions for use of influence to obtain appointive office under the United States.

Act of June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1088, sec. 315; U. S. C. 47: 315). Licensee of a radio station required to afford equal opportunities to all legally qualified candidates for public office.

Act of June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1138, sec. 25; D. C. C. 5: 217 W). District of Columbia insurance companies prohibited from making contributions in aid of any candidate for political office; penalty on officers, directors, etc., of companies violating this provision.

Act of August 26, 1935 (49 Stat. 824 (h); U. S. C. 15: 791). Holding companies, under Public Utility Act of 1935, prohibited from making political contributions through the mails or any means of interstate commerce.

ELECTION OF THE PRESIDENT

Constitution, article II, section 1. Each State is to choose, in a manner to be prescribed by the legislature, a number of electors equal to the Senators and Representatives to which the State is entitled. Senators, Representatives, and officers of the United States must not be chosen as electors. Congress may prescribe a uniform date for choosing the electors and for their voting for President.

Constitution, amendment XII. The electors are to meet in their own States and vote by ballot and certify their votes to the President of the Senate. The votes are to be counted at a joint session of Congress. In case of no majority, the House of Representatives must choose the President from the three highest candidates, each State delegation having one vote.

R. S. 131 (U. S. C. 3: 1). Electors are to be chosen on the Tuesday following the first Monday in November.

R. S. 132 (U. S. C. 3: 2). Number of electors: If no apportionment yet made after last census, the old apportionment is to be continued.

R. S. 133, 134 (U. S. C. 3: 3, 4). Provision for filling of vacancies, etc., may be made by State law.

R. S. 139 (U. S. C. 3: 10). Electors are to seal the certificates required to be made by them and certify upon each that the lists of all votes of the State for President and Vice President are contained therein.

Act of February 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 373-375; U. S. C. 3: 6, 17-20). State laws are to govern contests as to choice of electors. The votes are to be counted at a joint session of Congress the second Wednesday in February (changed to 6th day of January by act of June 5, 1934 (48 Stat. 879, sec. 7)).

Act of May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. 945-947; U. S. C. 3: 5a, 9, 11a-11c). Electors are to meet and give their votes on the first Wednesday in January (changed to first Monday after the second Wednesday in December by sec. 6 (a) of act of June 5, 1934 (48 Stat. 879)) next, after their appointment at such place as the State legislature directs.

Certificates of electors (setting forth the names of the electors and the canvass under the laws of the State of the number of votes cast) are to be sent to the Secretary of State of the United States to be preserved by him for 1 year as public records, and at the first meeting of Congress thereafter, to be transmitted to the two Houses of Congress; six duplicates of said certificate are to be delivered to the electors.

Electors are to annex lists of votes cast for President and Vice President to each certificate furnished them, which lists and certificates are to be disposed of as follows: One forthwith by registered mail to the President of the Senate of the United States; two to the Secretary of State of the State; two, on the following day, to the Secretary of State at Washington (one of which is to be subject to the order of the President of the Senate, the other preserved as public record); one delivered to the judge of the district in which the electors assembled.

If there is any State from which no certificate has been received by the President of the Senate or the Secretary of State by the third Wednesday in January (changed to fourth Wednesday in December, 48 Stat. 879, sec. 6 (b)), the President of the Senate or Secretary of State shall request one from the secretary of state of the State, who is to immediately transmit the same by registered mail to the President of the Senate.

If no certificate has been received from any State by the fourth Wednesday in January (changed to fourth Wednesday in December, 48 Stat. 879, sec. 6 (c)), a special messenger is to get the copy in the possession of the district judge and immediately bring it back to the seat of government.

ELECTION OF SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES

Constitution, article I, section 2. Voters in each State are to have the same qualifications as voters for members of the State legislature.

Same; section 4. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives are to be prescribed by the State legislature, but Congress may make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Same; section 5. "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members."

Constitution, amendment 17. Senators are to be elected by the people of each State for 6 years. Voters in each State are to have the same qualifications as voters for members of the State legislatures.

R. S. 18, 19 (U. S. C. 2: 1a, 1b). A Senator's election must be certified by the executive of the State from which he has been chosen, under the seal of the State, to the President of the Senate; such certificate is to be countersigned by the secretary of state of the State.

R. S. 25 (U. S. C. 2: 7). Representatives and Delegates are to be elected on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November in every even-numbered year.

R. S. 26 (U. S. C. 2: 8). The time for holding elections for a Representative or Delegate to fill vacancies may be prescribed by the laws of the States and Territories.

R. S. 105-129, amended by acts of March 2, 1875 (18 Stat. 338, c. 119), March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. 400), and March 2, 1887 (24 Stat. 445) (U. S. C. 2: 201-226). Procedure prescribed for contesting the election of a Member of the House of Representatives. (Notice of intention to contest, time allowed for answering notice, time for taking testimony, issuance of subpoenas, penalty for failure to attend or testify, etc.)

Act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. 400, sec. 6; U. S. C. 2: 7). Modifies R. S. 25, above, by making it inapplicable to any State in which a constitutional amendment would be required in order to effect a change in the day of the election of its State officers.

Act of February 14, 1899 (24 Stat. 836, c. 154; U. S. C. 2: 9). Votes for Representatives in Congress to be by written or printed ballot, or by voting machine if authorized by State law; votes received or recorded contrary to this requirement are to be of no effect.

Act of August 8, 1911 (37 Stat. 14, sec. 5; U. S. C. 2: 5). Candidates for Representatives at Large in any State are to be nominated in the same manner as candidates for Governor, unless otherwise provided by the laws of the State.

Act of June 4, 1914 (38 Stat. 384, c. 103; U. S. C. 2: 1). Senators are to be elected by the people at the regular election for Representatives in Congress.

Corrupt Practices Act of February 23, 1925 (43 Stat. 1070-1074; U. S. C. 2: 241-256; 18: 208). Political committees must choose their chairman and treasurer before accepting any contribution or making any expenditure for the purpose of influencing a congressional election.

The treasurer must keep a detailed account of all contributions, by whom made, how used, and to whom paid, and keep receipted bills, stating the particulars, for every expenditure over $10 for at least 2 years from date of filing statement.

Persons receiving contributions for a committee must make report, showing the name of the person contributing and the amount contributed on demand of the treasurer or within 5 days after receiving the contribution.

Complete and detailed statements as to contributions must be filed by the treasurer with the Clerk of the House of Representatives three times a year and 5 days before the general election.

Individuals making expenditures aggregating $50 or more for purpose of influencing the election of candidates in two or more States are required to file statements accounting for such expenditures with the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Candidates for the Senate or House must file, between 10 and 15 days before, and 30 days after the date of election, a full statement as to contributions received, expenditures made, and any promises or pledges made. Candidates must file reports showing the total vote cast for all candidates for the office at the last election.

All statements required to be filed (1) are to be verified by oath, (2) deemed properly filed upon deposit in registered mail, and (3) preserved for 2 years as part of public records in the office of either the Clerk of the House of Representatives or the Secretary of the Senate.

Candidates are prohibited from making expenditures in excess of amounts authorized by law. If no smaller limit is prescribed by State law, candidates for Senator are limited to from $10,000 to $25,000; for Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, to from $2,500 to $5,000, according to number of votes cast at the preceding election.

Promise of appointments, etc., and offer of money to procure support or to influence votes, are declared unlawful.

Violations under the act, except where a specific penalty is imposed, are to be punished by fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for 1 year, or both.

Willful violations, by a fine of $10,000 and imprisonment for not more than 2 years.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate recessed last evening the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] had the floor, and the Chair recognizes that Senator.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment reported by the committee, on page 48, to strike out the words beginning on line 5, after the word "Gilbertsville", down to and including the words "Watts bar" on line 6, the language being "and for the construction of a dam at or near Watts bar."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, yesterday as the Senate recessed the subject of appropriations for certain dams in the T. V. A. area was under consideration. I was speaking at that time, and I shall continue for a few moments today. I think the subject was pretty well covered yesterday by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], with the addition of some remarks interjected by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I shall approach the subject this morning, however, in support of the Adams amendment, and I will go further and include Gilbertsville Dam in my remarks, attempting to show that not all of those who are advocating these appropriations seem to agree in their figures, or as to what the future holds in store.

First, I ask that there be incorporated as a part of my remarks, in order to save the time of the Senate, an article written by me entitled "T. V. A., a Deception; 'Yardstick' a Fraud."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

T. V. A. A DECEPTION; "YARDSTICK" A FRAUD

(By STYLES BRIDGES, United States Senator from New Hampshire)

Although results of the joint congressional investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority leave much to be desired, there can be no question that the long months of public hearings have brought about a much wider public understanding of the functioning of such agencies of the Federal Government.

The committee consists of five Senators and five Representatives—only three of whom had voted against the T. V. A. or T. V. A. amendments. Chairman DONAHUE was wholly fair in questions involving opportunity of hearing to all sides. But Mr. Francis Biddle, counsel for the committee, did not fit well into the role of a supposedly unbiased, fact-finding agent of the committee. He attempted to gag employees of T. V. A. in order to prevent the former chairman, Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, from interviewing T. V. A. experts possessed of necessary information. On other occasions he stepped out of his role as interrogator to flatly contradict replies by adverse witnesses.

In such an atmosphere it is remarkable that the investigation had any constructive results. It is a tribute therefore to the diligence of minority members of the committee that, despite these handicaps, the T. V. A. today stands convicted of a long list of delinquencies.

It will be remembered that Senator WILLIAM H. KING, Utah Democrat, joined with me in a bipartisan demand for an investigation of the Authority early last year after Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, Chairman, had charged his fellow directors, Dr. Harcourt A. Morgan and David E. Lillenthal, with what amounted to collusive action in favor of compromising the marble-land claims of Senator George Berry, of Tennessee, against T. V. A. But our resolution was not adopted by both Houses until after the President had summarily and—I believe—illegally dismissed Chairman Morgan for alleged contumacy in refusing to participate in a private Presidential hearing of charges and countercharges among the directors. Dr. Morgan's stand that such a hearing had no legal basis and that the proper place for the airing of his charges was before a duly authorized congressional committee led to his discharge. But it also made inevitable a congressional investigation along the lines of the King-Bridges resolution.

The resolution was passed after it had been hastily broadened to authorize a side excursion to smear private utilities. Contrary to all historical precedent, none of the authors of the measure was included on the investigating committee, which was heavily weighted with friends of the T. V. A.

The essence of Chairman Morgan's charges against his fellow directors was that their policies had been dishonest. He later amplified his accusation to explain that he had not meant to infer there had been personal graft and corruption but that the public statements and the actions of the directors had been cloaked in hypocrisy; that the actual records of the T. V. A. did not bear out their public statements. He asserted that this course had resulted in a deplorable atmosphere of concealment and lack of candor in an agency charged with the construction and operation of a half-billion-dollar Federal project.

The first strategy of the committee counsel was an attempt to discredit Chairman Morgan by making it appear that he had retracted his first assertions when he elaborated his charges of dishonesty. This effort failed because evidence of the kind of deceptive public administration he was talking about came to light in embarrassing abundance.

As this is written, a few days before the end of the hearings for 1938 and for the Seventy-fifth Congress, the stenographic record now has mounted to nearly 20,000 pages or the incredible sum of approximately 4,000,000 words. A mountain of words has labored. Has it brought forth a mouse? From the standpoint of those who had hoped for a sincere thoroughgoing inquiry into the affairs of the T. V. A. I should say the answer is "yes." The tangible results of the inquiry thus far have only served to confirm suspicions so widely held and believed among those familiar with T. V. A. as to assume the aspects of common knowledge. None the less, what we once stated as opinion we can now state as proven fact, viz:

1. That the T. V. A. yardstick rates are a brazen fraud on the public, the taxpayer, the consumer, and the investor.
2. That T. V. A.'s bookkeeping is lax, incompetent, deceptive, impossible of audit, and tends to conceal rather than to reveal the true state of fiscal affairs.
3. That past protests that T. V. A. is a bona fide flood-control and navigation project, and not primarily an adventure into socialism via the backdoor of Federal sale and distribution of electric power, are but a part of the reason Chairman Morgan charges the T. V. A. with dishonesty.
4. That T. V. A.'s pitiless destruction of investments in private utilities by ruthless duplication of existing facilities has been for the purpose of reducing the sale price of such properties to a below-cost point, low enough to create a capital rate base on which yardstick rates could pretend a semblance of realism. (In other words, the purpose of T. V. A.'s competitive policy is not actually to complete its threatened duplication—which would be costly to T. V. A. also—but to spend enough money on duplication of lines as to bring private utilities to T. V. A.'s sale terms, at the expense of all investors in private utilities affected.)
5. That T. V. A.'s most potent aid in this policy of utility duplication has been another arm of the Federal Government, the Public Works Administration. This clandestine affinity between T. V. A. and P. W. A. has been denied under oath in court proceedings. But the series of cumulative coincidences of such cooperation is so revealing that anyone of intelligence examining the record would place such oath-bound denials somewhere between legal quibbling and plain perjury.
6. That instead of being a bankable proposition, as its officers have claimed, T. V. A. will (if and when it finds a market for all its power after completion) run an annual deficit of about $10,000,000 chargeable to its power facilities.
7. That T. V. A. has violated the law (a) by its failure to observe the general code in relation to its annual audits by the Comptroller General's Office; (b) its failure to follow "even remotely"—to quote the Federal Power Commission—the Uniform System of Accounting established by the F. P. C. as required by law; (c) its failure to establish its headquarters at Muscle Shoals, Ala., as legally required; (d) by ignoring the congressional requirement for nearly 2 years that T. V. A. submit its allocation of costs; (e) by neglecting to maintain its nitrate plants in "stand-by" condition as required by law.
8. That T. V. A. has been profligate with public funds, careless of its fiscal responsibilities; inefficient, theoretical, and impractical; dictatorial toward local inhabitants; a hopeless misfit for the task before it.

I could add to the list. These are but a few of the main points. All of them tend to uphold the position of the ousted Chairman that T. V. A. has been deceptive in its dealings with Congress, with the public, with private utilities and utility investors, and with the taxpayer.

Proceeding from the fact that the construction program of T. V. A. is designed primarily for power in the face of the clear language of the law that navigation and flood control shall be paramount, there follows a long sequence of fallacies and public deception.

The hearings show that after ignoring the law from January 1, 1937, to June 16, 1938—until after the evidence had been completed in a trial testing the constitutionality of T. V. A.—the Authority reluctantly submitted its estimates of allocation of the costs assigned by it to its various functions: flood control, navigation, and power. This belated acknowledgment of a congressional mandate dated August 31, 1935, assigned 48 percent of T. V. A.'s construction costs to power, with the balance almost equally divided between flood control and navigation improvement.

All independent engineers agree that this figure for power is ludicrously low in view of the ineffectiveness of the river system either as an aid to navigation or control of floods and the importance of T. V. A.'s high dams in the power scheme. Eloquent testimony by no less an authority than Dr. Edward L. Moreland, dean of engineering of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, punched gaping holes in the T. V. A.'s theory of cost allocation. Norris Dam, for example, contains 500,000 acre-feet of "dead storage" at a cost of $10 per acre-foot which has only one possible use and purpose; namely, power storage. This dead storage is there in order that the level of the reservoir can be made higher to create a greater "head" or fall of water for power purposes. Yet this $5,000,000 is ignored in the cost allocations for power. All of these concealed power costs add to the charges against flood control and navigation, and reduce T. V. A.'s capital cost rate base for power. Thus a very large element of concealed subsidy invalidates the yardstick theory. Private utilities, whose rates are supposed to be tested by T. V. A.'s yardstick, not only pay the full cost of their dams but also pay for navigation facilities, locks, and low water control. Dr. A. E. Morgan asserted that for legal reasons Power Director Lillenthal had insisted on allocations on the basis that power was a mere byproduct, and that Mr. Lillenthal only reversed himself after the chairman had testified before a committee of Congress as to the hypocrisy of such procedure.

T. V. A. witnesses made much of their assertion that at the time rates were established 12.5 percent was added in lieu of taxes, that being the tax figure then said to prevail among private utilities. The joker, of course, is that private industry pays taxes not on the basis of gross revenue but on the basis of assessed valuation. T. V. A. pays about $40,000 to the States it occupies in lieu of taxes—5 percent of its gross. Yet the assessed valuation of the part of its properties which it chooses to charge to power would, if it were a private utility, produce taxes in excess of $1,000,000 annually.

I could pursue this subject almost indefinitely. Depreciation charges are wholly inadequate; interest rates are insufficient; the Authority has had the use of $20,000,000 worth of aid from other Federal agencies which is not entered on the books; it has subsidized 11 nearby land-grant colleges with millions of dollars, part of which should be but is not charged to power; it is exempt from social-security taxes; has at its disposal the franking privilege, freedom from gasoline, automobile, tire, and all other taxes; has special Federal rebates; pays no insurance. None of these factors—which should be included in an honest yardstick—is an element of cost under the standard T. V. A. has set as its gage of proper rates which private industry should charge.

One of the most astounding facts brought forth in the hearings was that T. V. A. set its rates in September 1933, 5 years before it had determined what part of its total costs would be allocable to power—and therefore how much it must include in rates for taxes, interest, depreciation, and amortization. The uncanny foresight of the 1933 rate makers is now demonstrated. When they finally determined their cost allocations—although there had occurred a complete reversal of allocation theory in the meantime—they did not find it necessary to alter their rates by so much as one mill.

All this and more of irrefutable evidence established that the T. V. A. yardstick—upon which rests the entire power program—is predicated upon a tissue of concealments, half truths, and trick bookkeeping.

The Comptroller General's audit of T. V. A.'s first year of existence remains uncompleted, due to T. V. A.'s faulty bookkeeping. The Authority values its property on one basis and shows depreciation on another basis. It reports all of its income but not all of its expenses. It keeps 16 different sets of books. The annual reports to Congress contain many items that disagree with figures shown in the reports of the Comptroller General. T. V. A. never closes its books, with the result that figures purporting to apply to 1 year are being adjusted for years afterward. After 5 years of constant audit the Comptroller General still has outstanding exceptions to 4,628 expenditures amounting to $12,634,382.17.

Under the law the Authority is supposed to set up its books under the so-called uniform system of accounting which the Federal Power Commission has prescribed for private utilities. Congress insisted on this provision in order that the yardstick could be measured by the same system of bookkeeping that private utilities use. But the Federal Power Commission, after examining T. V. A.'s books, reported to the investigating committee that they do not remotely resemble the Commission's system.

Whether the state of these books is a matter of planned confusion or of stupid inefficiency, the result is the same. It remains impossible to discover down which rat hole the taxpayer's money disappeared, and, by the same token, it is impossible to determine the extent of fraudulence involved in the T. V. A. yardstick.

Bookkeeping is one excellent method to cover up, but not the only one. Many a farm-belt Congressman and Senator voted for the original T. V. A. Act under the fond delusion that the T. V. A. was to become the source of cheap fertilizer. Farm-belt enthusiasm visibly waned as the power program took dominant position to the neglect of fertilizer. The fertilizer department went on a buying spree early in 1938, although at the time it had enough phosphate-rock supply to have lasted for 34 years at the then rate of use. T. V. A. admitted that a single purchase increased T. V. A.'s supply to last an additional 60 years, or 94 years in all.

This purchase was from the International Agricultural Corporation, which had paid $148,387.50 for some lands that it sold a short time later to the T. V. A. for $678,459.80—a net profit of $530,072.30. On the same basis, T. V. A. would pay the Tennessee Electric Power Co. more than $300,000,000 instead of the $67,000,000 which it has offered.

The treatment of the private utilities is in shocking contrast with T. V. A.'s super generosity toward owners of phosphate land.

According to Dr. Arthur E. Morgan's own story it had been his understanding that the original program for the T. V. A. yardstick included the purchase of a limited area from private utilities which would become a sort of laboratory experiment in efficient rate-making in which all legitimate private costs would be weighted. The picture changed, however, soon after organization of the board when Dr. Harcourt Morgan threw in his lot with David E. Lillenthal and by a 2-to-2 vote delegated all authority over power matters to Lillenthal.

Then began a war of attrition against private utilities that has not ceased. Holding hands under the table, T. V. A. and P. W. A. used a double-barrelled threat of subsidized duplication—not only of generation and transmission systems but also of distribution systems.

This threat was effective where the companies were willing to sell out at a loss rather than face duplication. The Tennessee Electric Power Co., whose stockholders are chiefly affected, with a stake of more than $100,000,000 in that area, has refused to retreat. A subsidiary of Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, this company has at all times stood ready to sell at a fair price all or any integrated part of its properties that T. V. A. might need for its market.

To repeated proposals of this nature T. V. A. has turned a deaf ear for nearly 5 years, continuing to build hundreds of miles of duplicating transmission lines while its sub rosa partner, P. W. A., agitated TEPCO-served municipalities to accept funds to erect duplicating distribution systems for T. V. A. power. Last spring T. V. A. offered a negotiated purchase—which had about the same aspects of bona fide negotiation as the Munich peace pact. With a pistol to the head of the company negotiators, T. V. A. offered $67,000,000—or else.

Wendell L. Willkie, president of Commonwealth & Southern, told the investigating committee that if the property were in another part of the country, free from T. V. A. menace, he would not sell it at less than $120,000,000. Under the circumstances, however, he stated that he was willing to make a binding agreement to sell at any price fixed by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

T. V. A. rejected this as it has every other offer of arbitration. The offer was so fair, however, that T. V. A.'s refusal tended to substantiate the contention that the purpose of seeking to obtain private properties below cost is to create a capital base low enough to justify yardstick rates.

The committee has left undone much that it could have done. But I suppose the public should consider itself fortunate to have discovered as much as it has from an investigation bent on whitewashing this pet project of the New Deal.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, the amount of money restored by the Senate Committee on Appropriations was over $17,200,000, over $12,000,000 for Gilbertsville Dam, over $4,250,000 for Watts bar dam, and some $228,000 for Coulter Shoals Dam.

I wonder how many Senators realize the magnitude of the Gilbertsville Dam, if it is authorized and we proceed. It will create a lake in the Tennessee Valley about 184.6 miles in length, with an average width of between 3 and 5 miles. It will submerge and cover up, according to my best estimate, some 400,000 acres of excellent soil in the Tennessee Valley. It will destroy and cover up 137 miles of hard-surface highways. It will destroy three large highway bridges. It will destroy 69 miles of standard-gage railroad. It will mean the relocation of 35,000 people. It will mean the relocation of 2,500 dead bodies in cemeteries. In all, it probably will cost about $112,000,000. That is what the program will include.

I wish to approach this matter from the viewpoint that, so far as navigation is concerned, a high dam would be more expensive than a series of low dams, and more hazardous than a series of low dams.

Second, for flood control it is more expensive than a system of reservoirs, and might actually become a menace.

From the power point of view, it will cost more per kilowatt-hour to develop than any previous T. V. A. developments, and the cost will be much more than the cost of coal.

I wish to speak just a moment to show the inconsistency of some of the remarks which have been made. Let us take the subject of the rentals of the T. V. A. According to the Budget estimate, in the budget submitted in May 1938, they show rentals for 1937 of $99,965; for 1938, $100,000; for the year ending in 1939, $100,000 is estimated.

I ask to have included in the RECORD, without reading, so as to save the time of the Senate, the actual figures of what was paid for rentals in T. V. A., which shows that they are paying $278,576.68 annually.

I also wish to ask some of the friends and sponsors who endeavor to gloss over the T. V. A., just why the Tennessee Valley Authority should consistently include in its budget estimate and requests amounts far under the total amount which it is actually costing it today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Office space rented by Tennessee Valley Authority

[Compiled from a report of the office service department, contract section, as of May 2, 1938]

Location	Monthly rental	Annual rental
Alabama:
Florence, First National Bank Bldg.....	$45.00	$540.00
Guntersville:
Broad St.....	15.00	180.00
First National Bank Bldg.....	45.00	540.00
Do.....	25.00	300.00
Do.....	25.00	300.00
Main and Worth Sts.....	27.00	324.00
Sam Henry Bldg.....	10.00	120.00
Huntsville:
305 Times Bldg.....	25.00	300.00
605 Times Bldg.....	15.00	180.00
Scottdale:
First National Bank Bldg.....	33.33	400.00
Do.....	100.00	1,200.00
Hosley Mill Bldg.....	235.00	2,820.00
Do.....	365.00	4,380.00
Tennessee Valley Manufacturing Bldg.....	74.25	891.00
Washington, D. C.: North Interior Bldg.....	106.00	1,272.00
Illinois, Chicago, 930 Old Colony Bldg.....	32.50	390.00
Kentucky:
Benton, Cross St.....	20.00	240.00
Murray:
5th and Main.....	50.00	600.00
National Investment Bldg.....	30.00	360.00
Paducah:
410 Citizens Bank.....	23.65	283.80
401 Guthrie Bldg.....	17.50	210.00
Smithland, county courthouse.....	20.00	240.00
Mississippi:
Corinth, Waldrum, and Taylor Sts.....	50.00	600.00
Iuka, Mineral Springs Hotel.....	22.50	270.00
North Carolina:
Asheville:
203 Arcade Bldg.....	18.00	216.00
243 Arcade Bldg.....	20.00	240.00
Murphy:
Courthouse.....	10.00	120.00
Knitting Mill Bldg.....	245.00	2,940.00
Pennsylvania:
Philadelphia, Jefferson Bldg.....	40.00	480.00
Pittsburgh, 604 Chamber of Commerce.....	50.00	600.00
Tennessee:
Bristol, 21 5th St.....	40.00	480.00
Camden, Commerce Union Bank.....	3.50	42.00
Chattanooga:
302 East 11th St.....	42.50	510.00
James Bldg.....	621.78	7,461.36
James Bldg.....	2,421.31	29,055.72
1140 Market St.....	766.65	9,199.80
Pound Bldg.....	3,458.33	41,499.96
Columbia:
106½ West 7th St.....	75.00	900.00
301 West 7th St.....	50.00	612.00
Dayton:
145 Main St.....	57.50	690.00
Courthouse.....	15.00	180.00
Decatur, Courthouse Square.....	30.00	360.00
Harriman, Roane and Waldon.....	15.00	180.00
Jackson, Holland Bldg.....	80.00	960.00
Jasper, U. S. Highway 41.....	12.00	144.00
Knoxville:
Arnstein Bldg.....	1,600.00	19,200.00
Daylight Bldg.....	244.29	2,931.48
Do.....	1,673.42	20,081.04
General Bldg.....	240.00	2,880.00
McGee Tyson Airport.....	10.00	120.00
New Sprankle Bldg.....	3,999.19	47,954.28
510 Union Ave.....	80.00	960.00
Union Bldg.....	4,999.02	59,988.24

Office space rented by Tennessee Valley Authority—Continued

Location	Monthly rental	Annual rental
Tennessee—Continued.
Knoxville—Continued.
Ferris Hall, University of Tennessee.....	$18.00	$216.00
421 Wall Ave.....	550.00	6,600.00
Lenoir City:
First National Bank.....	20.00	240.00
Do.....	5.00	60.00
Memphis, Farnsworth Bldg.....	97.50	1,170.00
Morristown, 133 West Main St.....	23.00	276.00
Paris:
129 East Washington St.....	19.00	228.00
101 North Poplar St.....	85.00	1,020.00
Pulaski, Highway 64.....	20.00	240.00
Savannah:
First National Bank Bldg.....	15.00	180.00
Main and Cherry.....	15.00	180.00
Sweetwater, Forest and Main.....	15.00	180.00
Total.....		278,576.08

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I understood yesterday that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] made the statement that it was essential that we have the proposed dams in order that the Tennessee Electric Power Co.'s load be cared for. I think the Senator from Tennessee will agree that that is essentially, or in a sense, what he said.

Mr. McKellar. Will the Senator not repeat that?

Mr. BRIDGES. I stated that the Senator from Tennessee said yesterday that it was essential that these dams be continued in order that they might carry the eventual load of the Tennessee Valley Authority as a result of their recent purchase.

Mr. McKellar. Of course.

Mr. BRIDGES. I might say to the Senator from Tennessee that this is contrary to the testimony of Mr. Krug, of the T. V. A., before the joint investigating committee, that he said at that time, in justifying the enormous loss in operations for the fiscal year 1933, that the system was only 40 percent loaded, that four more large dams are practically completed to add their enormous surplus of power. Furthermore, that the T. V. A. and the municipalities which are acquiring the Tennessee Electric Power Co. system are acquiring also generating plants, and that these plants have carried essentially the load there for some time past. So I cannot see a future market being developed as the result of these purchases, or the need for the expansion of the dams.

He spoke also of flood control, stating that we needed these dams for flood control. It is my understanding that the flood-control capacity of the Watts bar dam is so small that the dam would be filled within a short time, and it would in a great flood not be extremely effective.

I have here a letter which is alleged to have been written by John I. Snyder, director of land acquisition for the T. V. A., and I understand that in the T. V. A. investigation he admitted writing the letter. Because it shows manipulation, scheming, and so on, I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

JANUARY 10, 1934.

JOHN E. CONNELLY, Esq.,
22 East Fortieth Street, New York City.

DEAR MR. CONNELLY: I should like to submit the following proposition for your consideration:

For some time I have been negotiating for a slate quarry for use by the Authority. The slate is located on a tract of land comprising approximately 4,800 acres. In the course of my negotiations I have become familiar with the property and details in regard to same. Yesterday I closed the lease for the quarrying rights by having a receiver appointed under a decree of the chancery court authorizing him to execute the lease in form submitted, having concluded the deal on behalf of the Authority which, incidentally, I am somewhat proud of as under my negotiations they are practically giving us our rights for nothing. I was regretfully thinking of the opportunity which this property offers to make some money.

It will be sold under the hammer in 60 days from February 12 to satisfy creditors' claims of approximately $4,000. Back taxes thereon are a little over $5,000. The property, I believe, can be conservatively valued at $45,000. This property is almost surrounded by land of the Aluminum Co. of America, which they have acquired in connection with their project of building another dam on the Little Tennessee River. They have their largest producing plant in this area and they offered $35,000 for a very small strip (about 100 acres) of the property on the river edge. Their offer was refused the owner, presumably holding them up for all he could get. I have reason to believe they are now refusing to deal with him because they realize the circumstances the owner is now in and will probably bid it in at the sale.

Part of the tract is good bottom land, and with the Authority's acquisition of farms in this area the necessity of replacing these farms arises and there is a market for same.

This farm land will sell here for $20 or $30 an acre. At the moment I do not remember how much of this tract is good farm land, but it is a substantial amount. The owner tells me there are 8,000,000 feet of marketable timber on the property which he now has offers for and which presumably could be sold immediately.

You probably wonder if the above is true, why the owner has not been able to raise the $4,000 to satisfy the creditors' claims against the property and prevent a forced sale. The answer to this is the hopeless inadequacy of the man himself and the title situation in connection with the property. The following facts I know:

The owner promoted, some 15 years ago, the Southern Slate Co., which was unsuccessful. This company became involved in an ejectment action in the trial court in regard to 200 acres of the property. They lost the action in the trial court and were compelled to file a bond on the appeal to cover damages connected with an injunction they had obtained. They lost the appeal and the attorneys who handled the suit had gone on the bond as personal sureties and were stuck for approximately $2,000. The Southern Slate Co. liquidated and conveyed the property back to the owner for the consideration of his assuming the liabilities of the company. Time went by and he did not pay his attorneys and they got into financial difficulties and they pressed him for payment. They finally turned the matter over to another attorney who brought action against the Southern Slate Co. on their behalf and had the deed back to the owner (real party in interest) set aside on the ground of lack of consideration and obtained a judgment of $3,040.73. The only other creditor's claim was for $50 which has been settled and the creditors' claims against the property to date total just about $4,000 with interest, etc.

The owner made application for a loan from the Federal loan banks and, as we were interested in seeing that the title to the property was cleared, I wrote to assist him in connection with the loan. The bank sent its appraiser and were ready to cooperate and push the loan through immediately but at that time the main reason for the rush on the matter was so that the loan could be granted before the end of 1933 and the taxes would be paid at a saving of $1,500 (penalties were being waived). The owner (incompetent) found he could not get the loan in time to make the tax saving and as the appraiser was anxious to get home for Xmas, let him get away without making the appraisal. The owner of one of the large marble quarries in this section has offered to take a mortgage on the property if title is cleared.

I know, through my negotiations in connection therewith and my dealings with all the attorneys in the matter as a result of a title abstract which I have had made, the title can be cleared in a comparatively short space of time. The foregoing has been set forth and the estimates made very carefully.

This is my suggestion:

1. Send Al down here; I can arrange for his firm to grant him a leave of absence for 1 year to work for me. I will have him appointed on part-time basis and offer him what, in my opinion, is one of the most interesting jobs a lawyer might have to tackle. He would be out with Dr. H. A. Morgan, president of the University of Tennessee and one of the three directors of the Authority. The entire program of the development of fertilizer which has an equally important place in the activities with the development of power. When he was not engaged in this particular activity, he would be my assistant.

On a part-time proposition, i. e., approximately one-half of a lawyer's day, I believe I could justifiably offer him $2,400 per year. One of the reasons that Al occurred to me is due to the fact that I know you are worried about his health. Knoxville has an altitude approximately 1,000 feet and Al's activities would take him into the mountain area which is considerably higher. The Smoky Mountains look down on Knoxville and are very beautiful.

The other half of his time he could devote to negotiations connected with this property (I can be of very material assistance in connection with the negotiations with the Aluminum Co.).

Al would have to leave New York by approximately February 4 as Margaret is planning to move us before then. He could stay with us until such time when his lease expires and Eleanor could join him. I can assure you that it would give him a year of experience in his professional training that he will find invaluable. I can also assure you that the life he would live here would do him a world of good physically. The climate since I have been here has been ideal. The summers are hot but not as bad as New York. There are some delightful homes in the same locality that Margaret has picked out near a lovely country club and I believe that Eleanor would enjoy it. I do not wish to give the impression that he will vegetate with his practice of law, rather, he will work under real pressure but it will not be of the type that keeps him until 3 o'clock in the morning. He will deal with men working for the Authority, who, in my opinion, have as much vision, experience, and ability as any that I have ever come in contact with. In his negotiations in connection with the property he will deal with all types of country lawyers and businessmen, who are shrewd and will force him to be on his toes.

I suggest Al because I have confidence that his work for the Authority will indirectly give me credit for knowing what type of man to pick and also because I believe he and I can work together as a team, and also because I believe that although it will be entirely a new departure for him, he is capable of putting through some shrewd business deals.

